Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
I here importune death a while, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips.

Cleo. I dare not, dear,
(Dear my lord, pardon,) I dare not,
Lest I be taken:¹ not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Caesar ever shall Be brooch'd² with me; if knife, drugs, serpents, have

Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe:
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,
And still conclusion,³ shall acquire no honour
Demuring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,—
Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up;—
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.

Cleo. Here's sport, indeed?—how heavy weighs my lord!

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's power,
The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— Wishers were ever fools;—O, come, come, come;
[They draw ANTONY up.]

And welcome, welcome! die, where thou hast liv'd:
Quicken⁴ with kissing; had my lips that power,
Thou would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak: and let me rail so high,
That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,
Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen:
Of Caesar seek your honour with your safety.—O!
Cleo. They do not go together.

¹ It should be remembered that, according to the old philosophy, the sun was accounted a planet, and thought to be whirled round the earth by the motion of a solid sphere in which it was fixed. Supposing this consumed, the sun must wander in endless space, and the earth be involved in endless night.

² Cleopatra means that she dare not come down out of the monument to Antony. Rison proposed to read:—

'(Dear my lord, pardon) I dare not come down.'
³ Brooch'd here must mean ornamented, adorned. Any ornamental jewel was called a brooch:—'Honour's a good brooch to wear in a man's hat at all times.'—Ben Jonson's Poetaster.

⁴—And love to Richard is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.'

King Richard II. Act ii. Sc. 5.

⁵ Sedate determination; silent coolness of resolution.

⁶ Cleopatra by these words seems to contrast the melancholy task in which they are now engaged with their former sports.

⁷ i. e. revive by my kiss. To quicken, according to Baret, is 'to make lively and lustie; to make strong and sound, to refresh'

Ant. Gentle, hear me:

None about Caesar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust;
None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts,
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,
The noblest: and do now not basely die,
Nor cowardly; put off my helmet to
My countryman, a Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is gone;
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better than a sty?—O, see, my women,
The crown o' the earth doth melt:—My lord!—
O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's pole is fallen: young boys and girls,
Are level now with men: the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon.⁸ [She faints.]

Char. O, quietness, lady!

Iras. She is dead, too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady,——

Iras. Madam,——

Char. O madam, madam, madam!

Iras. Royal Egypt!

Empress!

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more, but o'en a woman;⁹ and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks
And does the meanest chares.¹¹—It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;
To tell them that this world did equal theirs,
Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught;
Patience is scotch; and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: Then is it sin,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us?—How do you, women?
What, what? good cheer! Why, how now, Char-mian?

My noble girls!—Ah, women, women! look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out:—Good sir, take heart:
[To the Guard below.]
We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's noble,

Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come away—
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.
Ah women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution and the briefest end.

[*Exeunt; those above bearing off ANTONY'S
Body.*]

7 'Let us sit and mock the good housewife
Fortune from her wheel,' &c.

As You Like It.

8 That is, their standard or rallying point is thrown down. Marlowe concludes his Faustus with a similar image:—

'Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
And burn'd is Apollon's laurel bough.'

9 —From this instant

There's nothing serious in mortality:

All is but toys; renown and grace is dead;

The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees

Is left this vault to brag on.'

Macbeth.

10 Iras has just said, 'Royal Egypt, Empress!' Cleopatra completes the sentence, (without taking notice of the intervening words of Charmian.) Empress 'no more; but e'en a woman,' now on a level with the meanest of my sex. The old copy reads 'but is a woman.' Dr. Johnson made the correction.

11 i. e. task-work. 'She, like a good wife, is teaching her servants sundry chares.'—Heywood's Brzen Age, 1613.

12 And at my crummed messe of milke, each night from maid or dame

To do their chares as they supposed,' &c.

Warner's Albion's England.

Thus in Act v. Sc. 2, Cleopatra says:—

'When thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave
To play till doomsday'

ACT V.

SCENE I. Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, MECENAS, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate,¹ tell him, he mocks us by
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit DOLABELLA.]

Enter DERCETAS, with the Sword of ANTONY.

Cæs. Wherefore is this? and what art thou that

Appear thus to us?²

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life,
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make

A greater crack: The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets,³

And citizens to their dens:—The death of Antony
Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart.—This is his sword,
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.⁴

Agr. And strange it is,
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Waged⁵ equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before him,

He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O, Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this;—But we do lance⁶

1 Frustrate for frustrated was the language of Shakespeare's time; and we find contaminated for contaminated, consummate for consummated, &c. Thus in The Tempest:

— and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search by land.

The two last words in this line, us by, are not in the old copy, in which something seems omitted, and these words, which suit the context well, were supplied by Malone, who has justified his selection of them by instances of similar phraseology in other passages of these plays.

2 I. e. with a drawn and bloody sword in thy hand.

3 The passage is thus arranged in the old copy:—

'The breaking of so great a thing should make
A greater crack: the round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens.'

The second line is evidently defective; some word or words being omitted at the end, as in a former instance. What is lost may be supplied by conjecture, thus:—

— 'The round world consummate.'

Johnson thought that there was a line lost: and Steevens proposed to read:—

'A greater crack than this: The ruin'd world,' &c. I know not with whom the present arrangement of the text originated, but I do not think it judicious. Malone thought that the passage might have stood originally thus:—

— 'The round world should have shook,
Thrown hungry lions into civil streets,' &c.

Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: But yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle—that our stars
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this.⁷—Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meet season;

Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him,
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?

Mess. A poor Egyptian yet.⁸ The queen, my mistress,

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction;
That she presently may frame herself
To the way she's forced to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart,
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable⁹ and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cæsar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.]

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius; Go, and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts
The quality of her passion shall require;
Least in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us: for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph:¹⁰ Go,
And, with your speediest, bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit PROCULEIUS.]

Cæs. Gallus, you go along.—Where's Dolabella,
To second Proculeius? [Exit GALLUS.]

Agr. Mec. Dolabella!

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employed; he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent; where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings: Go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Alexandria. A Room in the Monument. Enter CLEOPATRA,¹¹ CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cæsar;

4 'May the gods rebuke me if this be not tidings to make kings weep.' But again in its exceptive sense.

5 Waged here must mean to be opposed, as equal stakes in a wager; unless we suppose that weighed is meant. The second folio reads way.

6 Lance, the word in the old copy, is only the obsolete spelling of lance.

7 His for us.

8 That is, she should have made us, in our equality of fortune, disagree to a pitch like this, that one of us must die.

9 I. e. 'yet an Egyptian, or subject of the queen of Egypt, though soon to become a subject of Rome.'

10 I have before observed that the termination be was is anciently often used for by. This Malone calls using adjectives adverbially, or using substantives adjectively, as the case may be. I doubt whether it be any thing more than the laxity of old orthography. We have honourable for honourably again in Julius Cæsar:—

'Young man, thou could'st not die more honourable.'

11 'If I send her in triumph to Rome, her memory and my glory will be eternal.' Thus in The Scourge of Venus, 1614:—

'If some fable-swelling ebon cloud would fall
For her to hide herself eternal in.'

12 The poet here has attempted to exhibit at once the outside and the inside of a building. It would be difficult to represent this scene on the stage in any other way than making Cleopatra and her attendants speak all their speeches, till the queen is seized within the monument.

Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave,¹
A minister of her will; And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung;
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.²

Enter, to the Gates of the Monument, PROCULEIUS, GALLUS, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;
And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. [Within.] What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. [Within.] Antony
Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I³
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;
You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing;
Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency; and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid⁴ for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. [Within.] Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got.⁵ I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly
Look him i' the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.
Have comfort; for, I know, your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Gal. You see how easily she may be surpris'd;

[Here PROCULEIUS, and two of the Guard, ascend the Monument by a Ladder placed against a Window, and having descended, come behind CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbar and open the Gates.]

Guard her till Cæsar come.

[To PROCULEIUS and the Guard. Exit GALLUS.]

Iras. Royal queen!

1 Servant.

2 Voluntary death (says Cleopatra) is an act which bolts up change; it produces a state—

'Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.'

Which has no longer need of the gross and terrene sustenance, in the use of which Cæsar and the beggar are on a level. It has been already said in this play, that——our dungy earth

Feeds man as beast.

'The Ethiopian king (in Herodotus, b. iii.) upon hearing a description of the nature of wheat, replied, that he was not at all surpris'd if men, who eat nothing but dung, did not attain a longer life.'

3 Mason would change as I, to and I; but I have shown in another place that as was used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries for that.

4 Praying in aid is a term used for a petition made in a court of justice for the calling in of help from another that hath an interest in the cause in question.

5 By these words Cleopatra means—'In yielding to him I only give him that honour which he himself achieved.' A kindred idea seems to occur in The Tempest :—

'Then as my gift, and thy own acquisition,

Worthily purchased, take thou my daughter.'

6 There is no stage direction in the old copy, that which is now inserted is formed on the old translation of Plutarch :—'Proculeius came to the gates, that were very thick and strong, and surely barred; but yet there were some cranes through the which her voyer might he heard, and so they without understood that Cleopatra demanded the kingdom of Egypt for her sonnes; and that Proculeius answered her, that she should be of good cheer, and not be affrayed to refer all unto Cæsar.
After he had viewed the place very well, he came and Char. O, Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!—

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a Dagger.]

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold:
[Seizes and disarms her.]

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too,
That rides our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,
Do not abuse my master's bounty, by
The undoing of yourself: let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?
Come hither, come! come, come, and take a queen
Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!
Cleo. Sur, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir,
(If idle talk will once be necessary;)

I'll not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin,
Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,
And show me to the shouting variety
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt
Be gentle grave to me! rather on Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies Blow me into abhorring! rather make
My country's high pyramids my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done thy master Cæsar knows,
And he hath sent for thee: for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please

[To CLEOPATRA.]

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Exit PROCULEIUS, and Soldiers.]

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me?
Cleo. I cannot tell.

reported her answers unto Cæsar: who immediately sent Gallus to speak once againe with her, and bad him purposely hold her with talk, whilst Proculeius did sit up a ladder against that high window, by the which Antony was tress'd up, and came down into the monument with two of his men, hard by the gate, where Cleopatra stood to hear what Gallus said unto her. One of her women shrieked out, O poore Cleopatra, thou art taken. Then when she sawe Proculeius behind her, as she came from the gate, she thought to have stabbed herself with a short dagger she wore of purpose by her side. But Proculeius came sodainly upon her, and taking her by both the hands, sayd unto her, Cleopatra, first thou shalt doe thyselfe greates wrong, and secondly unto Cæsar, to deprive him of the occasion and opportunitie openlie to shew his vantage and merite, and to give his enemies cause to accuse the most courteous and noble prince that ever was, and to appeach him as though he were a cruel and mercilesse man that were not to be trusted. So even as he spake the word he ooke her dagger from her, and shooke her clothes for fear of any poison hid aboute her.⁷ The speech given to Gallus here is given by mistake to Proculeius in the old copy.

7 It should be remembered that once is used as once for all by Shakespeare. I take the meaning of this line, which is evidently parenthetical, to be, 'Once for all, if idle talk be necessary about my purposes.' Johnson has shown that will be is often used in conversation without relation to the future. I have placed this line in a parenthesis, by which the sense of the passage is now rendered sufficiently clear, without having recourse to supplementary words, as Malone and Rieu-sard proposed.

8 Pyramides is so written and used as a quadrisyllable by Sandys and by Drayton.

IMPORTANT STANDARD WORKS

PREPARING FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION

BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW-YORK.

Barnes's Notes on Hebrews.

Notes, Explanatory and Practical, on the Epistle to the Hebrews. By ALBERT BARNES. With Numerous Engravings.

Dr. Bangs's Life of Arminius.

The Life of JAMES ARMINIUS, D.D., formerly Professor of Divinity in the University of Leyden. Compiled from his Life and Writings, as published by Mr. JAMES NICHOLS. By NATHAN BARNES, D.D.

Prescott's Conquest of Mexico.

The History of the Conquest of Mexico, with the Life of the Conqueror, Hernando Cortes, and a View of the Ancient Mexican Civilization. In three Volumes, 8vo, with Portraits and Maps.

This work will be founded on original documents, chiefly supplied by the Royal Academy of History at Madrid. These documents are the fruits of more than fifty years' laborious researches by Navarrete, the venerable president of the Academy, by Vargas Ponce, his predecessor, and by the celebrated historian Muñoz. They were obtained under sanction of government, from the various public offices and repositories in Spain and her colonies; and consist of the correspondence of the parties, instructions of the court, contemporary memoirs, military journals and official documents, in manuscript, most of them unknown or inaccessible to preceding historians. Besides this, additional materials have been drawn from Mexico, London, and Paris. (Will be ready on the 1st of November.)

Kendall's Life of General Jackson.

The Life of General ANDREW JACKSON. By the Hon. AMOS KENDALL. To be completed in about Fifteen Numbers, at Twenty-five Cents each, illustrated with Engravings or Prints, averaging two to a Number, embracing Likenesses of the General and some of his most distinguished co-actors, Drawings of his Battle-grounds, &c.

This task has been undertaken with the approbation of General JACKSON himself, who has kindly put into the Author's hands his books and papers, public and private, and on obscure points favoured him with his own recollections. With these materials, with the works already published, and with the contributions of facts and papers by many of the General's associates in civil and military life, aided by his own knowledge of events occurring within the last twenty years, the Author hopes to produce a work worthy of the confidence and patronage of the American people. [The first Number will be issued by or before the 1st of July.]

M'Culloch's Gazetteer and Geography.

M'Culloch's Universal Gazetteer; or, Geographical Dictionary. With Seven Maps on Steel. A Dictionary, Geographical, Statistical, and Historical, of the various Countries, Places, and principal Natural Objects in the World. By J. R. M'CULLOCH, Esq. In two Volumes, 8vo. In which the articles relating to the United States will be rewritten and greatly multiplied and extended, and adapted to the present condition of the country, and to the wants of its citizens. By DANIEL HASKEL, A.M., late President of the University of Vermont. To be completed in 18 or 20 Numbers, at 25 Cents each. [The first Number will be published early in June.]

Neal's History of the Puritans.

The History of the Puritans; or, Protestant Nonconformists; from the Reformation in 1517, to the Revolution in 1688; comprising an Account of their Principles, their Attempts for a farther Reformation in the Church, their sufferings, and the Lives and Characters of their most considerable Divines. By DANIEL NEAL, M.A. A New Edition. With very copious additional Notes, by the Rev. J. O. CHOULES. To be published in about Eight Numbers, at 25 Cents each. With a Portrait of a Distinguished Puritan to each Number.

Harper's New Pictorial Bible.

A New Pictorial Bible, embellished with Sixteen Hundred Historical Engravings, by J. A. ADAMS, more than Fourteen Hundred of which are from Original Designs, by J. G. CHAPMAN, made expressly for this Edition, and executed in the most finished manner, at an expense of over Twenty-five Thousand Dollars! The work will be printed on large type, and published in Numbers, on foolscap folio sized paper. In addition to the Old and New Testaments, it will include the Apocrypha. [The first Number will be published early in July, and at regular intervals thereafter.]

Hannah More's Complete Works.

In Eight Numbers, octavo, with Engravings, at 25 Cents per Number.

Del. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard, or known. You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their dreams; Is't not your trick?

Del. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony; O, such another sleep, that I might see But such another man!

Del. If it might please you,——

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck
A sun, and moon; which kept their course, and lighted
The little O, the earth.¹

Del. Most sovereign creature,——

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean: his rear'd arm
Crested the world: his voice was propertied
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;
But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,
He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,
That grew the more by reaping: His delights
Were dolphin-like: they show'd his back above
The element they liv'd in: In his livery Walk'd crowns, and crowns; realms and islands were
As plates² dropp'd from his pocket.

Del. Cleopatra,——

Cleo. Think you, there was, or might be, such a man
As this I dream'd of?

Del. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods. But, if there be, or ever were one such, It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuff To vie³ strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine An Antony, were nature's piece⁴ gainst fancy, Condemning shadows quite.

Del. Hear me, good madam: Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it As answering to the weight: 'Would, I might never O'ertake yours! I do feel, By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.
Know you, what Cæsar means to do with me?

Del. I am loath to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,——

Del. Though he be honourable,——

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph?

Del. Madam, he will;
I know it.

Within. Make way there!—Cæsar!

Enter CÆSAR, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, MÆCENAS, SELEUCUS, and Attendants.

Cæs. Which is the queen
Of Egypt?

Del. 'Tis the emperor, madam.
[CLEOPATRA kneels.]

Cæs. Arise,

You shall not kneel:—
I pray you, rise; rise, Egypt.

1 Shakespeare uses O for an orb or circle. Thus in King Henry V.—

'—— can we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques.'

2 So in Julius Cæsar—

'Why, man, he doth bestride the world
Like a Colossus.'

3 Dr. Percy thinks that 'this is an allusion to some of the old crests in heraldry, where a raised arm on a wreath was mounted on the helmet.' To crest is to surmount.

4 Plates means silver money:—

'What's the price of this slave, 200 crowns?
Belike he has some new trick for a purse,
And if he has, he's worth 200 plates.'

In heraldry, the roundlets in an escutcheon, if or, or yellow, are called bezants; if argent, or white, plates, which are round flat pieces of silver money, perhaps without any stamp or impress. It is remarkable after all that the commentators have said against Ben Jonson,

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus; my master and my lord
I must obey.

Cæs. Take to you no hard thoughts:
The record of what injuries you did us,
Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world.

I cannot project⁵ mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess, I have Been laden with like frailties, which before
Have often sham'd our sex.

Cæs. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:

If you apply yourself to our intents,
(Which towards you are most gentle,) you shall find

A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours: and we

Your 'scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.⁶

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam.

Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak, my
lord.

Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,

I had rather seal⁷ my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo.

What have I kept back?

Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra! I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift estates, yours would be mine.
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild:—O, slave, of no more trust;
Than love that's hid!—What, goest thou back;
thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: Slave, soulless villain, dog!
O, rarely base!⁸

Cæs.

Good queen, let us entreat you.

Cleo. O, Cæsar, what a wounding shame is this:
That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,

Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by

Stevens should have expunged a note that appeared in his edition of 1778, in which he cites the following beautiful passage from Ben Jonson's New Inn, on the subject of liberality:—

'He gave me first my breeding, I acknowledge:
Then shower'd his bounties on me, like the hours
That open-handed sit upon the clouds,
And press the liberality of heaven
Down to the laps of thankful men.'

5 To vie here has its metaphorical sense of to contend in rivalry.

6 To project is to delineate, to shape, to form. See in Look About You, a Comedy, 1800:—

'But quite dislike the project of your suite.'

7 Cæsar afterwards says:—

'For we intend to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel.'

8 Close up my lips as effectually as the eyes of a hawk: are closed. To seal, hawks was the technical term for: sewing up their eyes.

9 I. e. base in an uncommon degree.

That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immement toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern² friends withal: and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia, and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With³ one that I have bred? The gods! It smites me
Beneath the fall I have. Prythee, go hence;
[To SELTUS CUS.]

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance.⁴—Wert thou a
man,

Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Cæs. Forbear, Seleucia.
[Exit SELTUS CUS.]

Cleo. Be it known that we, the greatest, are mistbought

For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits⁵ in our name.
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd,

Put we it the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;
Make not your thoughts your prisons:⁶ no, dear
queen,

For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend: And so adieu.

Cleo. My master, and my lord!

Cæs. Not so: Adieu.
[Exeunt CÆSAR, and his Train.]

Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not

Be noble to myself: but hark thee, Charmian.

[Whispers CHARMIAN.]
Iras. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided;

Go, put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Char. Behold, sir. [Exit CHARMIAN.]

Cleo. Dolabella?

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,
Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey; and, within three days,
You with your children will be send before:
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

1 'That this fellow should add one more parcel or item to the sum of my disgraces, namely, his own malice.'

2 I. e. common, ordinary.

3 With is here used with the power of by.

4 I. e. fortune. 'Begone, or I shall exert that royal spirit which I had in my prosperity, in spite of the improbability of my present weak condition.' Chaucer has a similar image in his Canterbury Tales, v. 3150:—

'Yet in our ashen cold is fire yreken.'

5 I. e. we answer for that which others have merited by their transgressions.

6 'Be not a prisoner in imagination, when in reality you are free.'

7 I. e. the lively or quick-witted comedians.

8 It has been already observed that the parts of females were played by boys on our ancient stage. Nash, in his Pierce Pennilesses, makes it a subject of exultation that 'our players are not as the players beyond sea, that have whores and common courtesans to play women's parts.' To obviate the impropriety of men representing women, T. Goff, in his Tragedy of the Raging Turk, 1631, has no female character.

9 Aburd here means unmeet, unfitting, unreasonable.

10 Sirrah was not anciently an appellation either

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol.

I your servant.
Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. [Exit DOL.] Now
Iras, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shall be shown
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breath,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be unclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Iras.

The gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Iras: Saucy victors
Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald rhymers
Balled as out o' tune: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy¹ my greatness
I' the posture of a whore.

Iras.

O, the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that is certain.

Iras. I'll never see it; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo.

Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd² intents.—Now, Charmian!—

Enter CHARMIAN.

Show me, my women, like a queen;—Go fetch
My best attires;—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—Sirrah,¹⁰ Iras, go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch, indeed:
And, when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee
leave

To play till doomsday.—Bring our crown and all:
Wherefore's this noise?

[Exit IRAS. A Noise within.]

Enter one of the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
That will not be denied your highness' presence;
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. How¹¹ poor an instrument
[Exit Guard.]

May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the fleeting¹² moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guard, with a Clown, bringing a Basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.]
Hast thou the pretty worm¹³ of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?

Clown. Truly I have him; but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those, that do die of it, do seldom or never recover.

reproachful or injurious; being applied, with a sort of playful kindness, to children, friends, and servants, and what may seem more extraordinary, as in the present case, to women. It is nothing more than the exclamation, Sir ha! and we sometimes find it in its primitive form, 'A sya, there said you wel.'—Confutation of Nicholas Shaxton, 1546. The Hens of Plautus is rendered by an old translator, Ha Sirra. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Knight of Malta, one gentlewoman says to another, 'Sirrah, why dost thou not marry?'

11 The first folio has 'What poor an instrument.'

12 Fleeting, or fittling, is changeable, inconstant:—
'More variant than is the fittling hune.'

Waller's Guistard and Sismond, 1587.

I am now (says Cleopatra) 'whole as the marble, founded as the rock,' and no longer inconstant and changeable, as woman often is.

13 Worm is used by our old writers to signify a serpent.
The word is pure Saxon, and is still used in the north in the same sense. We have it still in the blind-worm and slow-worm. Shakespeare uses it several times.—
The notion of a serpent that caused death without pain was an ancient fable, and is here adopted with propriety.
The worm of Nile was the asp of the ancients, which
Dr. Shaw says is wholly unknown to us.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died on't?

Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday: a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt.—Truly, she makes a very good report o' the worm: But he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do.¹ But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell. [Clown sets down the Basket.]

Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.²

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed, there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Clown. Yes, forthwith; I wish you joy of the worm. [Exit.]

Re-enter IRAS, with a Robe, Crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I have immortal longings in me:³ Now no more The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—Yare, yare,⁴ good Iras; quick.—Methinks, I hear Antony call; I see him rouse himself To praise my noble act; I hear him mock The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men To excuse their after wrath: Husband, I come: Now to that name my courage prove my title! I am fire, and air; my other elements I give to baser life.⁵—So,—have you done? Come, then, and take the last warmth of my lips. Farewell, kind Charmian;—Iras, long farewell. [Kisses them. IRAS falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?⁶ If thou and nature can so gently part, The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch, Which hurts, and is desired. Dost thou lie still? If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I may say,

The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base: If she first meet the curled Antony, He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss, Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch,

[To the Asp, which she applies to her Breast. With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsec Of life at once untie; poor venomous fool, Be angry, and despatch. O, could'st thou speak! That I might hear thee call great Cæsar, ass Unpoliced!⁷

Char. O, eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!

¹ Warburton observes that 'Shakspeare's clowns are always jokers, and deal in sly satire:' but he would have all and half change places. I think with Stevens that the confusion was designed to heighten the humour of the clown's speech.

² I. e. act according to his nature.

³ From hence probably Addison in Cato:—

'This longing after immortality.'

⁴ I. e. be nimble, be ready. See Act iii. Sc. 3.

⁵ Thus in King Henry V.:—'He is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him.'

⁶ Iras must be supposed to have applied an asp to her

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast, That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char.

O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—O, Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too;—

[Applying another Asp to her Arm.]

What should I stay?—[Falls on a bed, and dies.]

Char. In this wild world?—So, fare thee well,—

Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies

A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;⁸

And golden Phoebus never be beheld

Of eyes again so royal? Your crown's awry;

I'll mend it, and then play.⁹

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies the Asp.]

O, come; apace, despatch; I partly feel thee.

begun'd.

² Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Cæsar:—

call him.

well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess

Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier! [Disc.]

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. How goes it here?

² Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts

Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming

To see perform'd the dreaded act, which thou

So sought'st to hinder.

Within. A way there! a way for Cæsar

Enter CÆSAR, and Attendants.

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;

That you did fear, is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last.

She leav'd at our purposes, and, being royal,

Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths?

I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?

¹ Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her figs;

This was his basket.

Cæs. Poison'd, then.

This Charmian lived but now; she stood, and spoke:

I found her trimming up the diadem

On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,

And on the sudden dropp'd.

Cæs. O, noble weakness!

If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear

By external swelling; but she looks like sleep,

As she would catch another Antony

In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,

There is a vent of blood, and something blown:¹⁰

The like is on her arm.

leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the aspic leaves

Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable,

That so she died; for her physician tells me, arm while her mistress was settling her dress, to account for her falling so soon.

⁷ I. e. an ass without more wit or policy than to leave the means of death within my reach, and thereby defeat his own purpose.

⁸ Charmian may be supposed to close Cleopatra's eyes, the first melancholy office performed after death.

⁹ Charmian remembers the words uttered to her by her beloved mistress just before:—

'—when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee

leave

To play till doomsday.'

¹⁰ I. e. swelled, puffed.

She hath pursu'd conclusions' infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;
And bear her women from the monument:—
She shall be buried by her Antony:
No grave upon the earth shall clip in it
A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn show, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt.]

1 To pursue conclusions is to try experiments. So in Hamlet:—

—like the famous ape
To try conclusions:

THIS play keeps curiosity always busy, and the passions always interested. The continual hurry of the action, the variety of incidents, and the quick succession of one personage to another, call the mind forward without intermission from the first act to the last. But the power of delighting is derived principally from the frequent changes of the scene; for, except the feminine arts, some of which are too low, which distinguish Cleopatra, no character is very strongly discriminated. Up to us, who did not easily miss what he desired to find, has discovered that the language of Antony is, with great skill and learning, made pompous and superb, according to his real practice. But I think his diction not dissimilable from that of others: The most tumid speech in the play is that which Caesar makes to Octavia.

The events, of which the principal are described as concurring to history, are produced without any art of connection or care of disposition. JOHNSON.

CYMBELINE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE general scheme of the plot of Cymbeline is formed on the ninth novel of the second day in the Decamerone of Boccaccio. It appears from the preface of the old translation of the Decamerone, printed in folio in 1630, that many of the novels had before received an English dress, and had been printed separately. A deformed and interpolated imitation of the novel in question was printed at Antwerp, by John Dusborowghe, as early as 1518, under the following title: 'This matter treateth of a merchants wife that afterwarde wente lyke a man and became a greute lord, and was called Frederyke of Jennen afterwarde.' It exhibits the material features of its original, though the names of the characters are changed, their sentiments debased, and their conduct rendered still more improbable than in the scenes of Cymbeline. A book was published in London in 1603, called 'Westward for Smelts, or the Waterman's Fare of mad merry western Wenches, whose Tongues albeit like Bell-clappers they never leave ringing, yet their Tales are sweet, and will much content you.' Written by Kitt of Kingstone. It was again printed in 1690. To the second tale in this work Shakespeare seems to have been indebted for the circumstances in his plot of Imogen's wandering about after Pisanio has left her in the forest; her being almost famished; and being taken at a subsequent period into the service of the Roman general as a page. But time may yet bring to light some other modification of the story, which will prove more exactly conformable to the plot of the play.

Malone supposes Cymbeline to have been written in the year 1606. The king, from whom the play takes its title, began his reign, according to Hollinshed, in the nineteenth year of the reign of Augustus Cæsar; and the play commences in or about the twenty-fourth year of Cymbeline's reign, which was the forty-second year of the reign of Augustus, and the sixteenth of the Christian era: notwithstanding which, Shakespeare has peopled Rome with modern Italians; Philario, Iachimo, &c. Cymbeline is said to have reigned thirty-five years, leaving at his death two sons, Guiderius and Arrivagus. Tenantius (who is mentioned in the first scene) was the father of Cymbeline, and nephew of Cassibelan, being the younger son of his elder brother Lud, king of the southern part of Britain, he agreed to pay an annual tribute to Rome. After his death, Tenandus, Lud's younger son, was established on the throne, of which he and his elder brother Androgeus, who fled to Rome, had been unjustly deprived by their uncle. According to some authorities, Tenantius quietly paid the tribute stipulated by Cassibelan; according to others, he refused to pay it, and warred with the Romans. Shakespeare supposes the latter to be the truth. Hollinshed, who furnished our poet with these facts, furnished him also with the name of Sicilius, who was admitted king of Britain, A. M. 3659.

Schlegel pronounces Cymbeline to be 'one of Shakespeare's most wonderful compositions,' in which the poet 'has contrived to blend together into one harmonious whole, the social manners of the latest times with heroic deeds, and even with appearances of the gods. In the character of Imogen not a feature of female excellence is forgotten; her chaste tenderness, her softness, and her virgin pride, her boundless resignation, and her magnanimity towards her mistaken husband, by whom she is unjustly persecuted; her adventures in disguise, her apparent death, and her recovery, form altogether a picture equally tender and affecting.

The two princes, Guiderius and Arrivagus, both educated in the wilds, form a noble contrast to Miranda and Perdita. In these two young men, to whom the chase has given vigour and hardihood, but who are unacquainted with their high destination, and have always been kept far from human society, we are enmeshed by a noble heroism which leads them to anticipate and to dream of deeds of valour, till an occasion is offered which they are irresistibly impelled to embrace. When Imogen comes in disguise to their cave; when Guiderius and Arrivagus form an impassioned friendship, with all the innocence of childhood, for the tender boy, (in whom they neither suspect a female nor their own sister;) when on returning from the chase they find her dead, sing her to the ground, and cover the grave with flowers:—these scenes might give a new lift for poetry to the most deadened imagination.

The wise and virtuous Belarius, who after living long as a hermit, again becomes a hero, is a venerable figure; the dexterous dissimulation and quick presence of mind of the Italian Iachimo is quite suitable to the bold treachery he plays; Cymbeline, the father of Imogen, and even her husband Posthumus, during the first half of the piece, are somewhat sacrificed, but this could not be otherwise; the false and wicked queen is merely an instrument of the plot; she and her stupid son Cloten, whose rude arrogance is portrayed with much humour, are got rid of by merited punishment before the conclusion.

Steevens objects to the character of Cloten in a note on the fourth act of the play, observing that 'he is represented at once as brave and dastardly, civil and brutish, sagacious and foolish, without that subtlety of distinction, and those shades of gradation between sense and folly, virtue and vice, which constitute the excellence of such mixed characters as Polonius in Hamlet, and the Nurse in Romeo and Juliet.' It should, however, be observed, that Imogen has justly defined him 'that irregular devil Cloten'; and Miss Sewall, in one of her Letters, assures us that singular as the character of Cloten may appear, it is the exact prototype of a being she once knew. 'The unmeaning brow of the countenance; the shuffling gait; the husky voice; the bustling indolgence; the fever and ague fit of valour; the froward technique; the unpunctuated malice; and what is most curious, those occasional gleams of good sense, amidst the floating clouds of folly which generally darkened and confused the man's brain; and which, in the character of Cloten, we are apt to impute to a violation of unky in character, but in the same time Captain C—— I saw the portrait of Cloten was not out of nature.'

In the development of the plot of this play the poet has displayed such consummate skill, and such minute attention to the satisfaction of the most anxious and scrupulous spectator, as to afford a complete refutation of Johnson's assertion, that Shakespeare usually hurries over the conclusion of his pieces.

There is little conclusive evidence to ascertain the date of the composition of this play; but Malone places it in the year 1600. Dr. Drake, after Chalmers, has ascribed it to the year 1605.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

CYMBELINE, King of Britain.

CLOTEN, Son to the Queen by a former Husband.

LEONATUS POSTHUMUS, a Gentleman, Husband to Imogen.

BELARIUS, a banished Lord, disguised under the name of Morgan.

GUIDERIUS, { Sons to Cymbeline, disguised under the names of Polydore and Cad-ARVIRAGUS, { wal, supposed Sons to Belarius.

PHILARIO, Friend to Posthumus, } Italians.

IACHYME, Friend to Philario, }

A French Gentleman, Friend to Philario.

CAIUS LUCIUS, General of the Roman Forces.

A Roman Captain. Two British Captains.

HELEN, Woman to Imogen.

Lords, Ladies, Roman Senators, Tribunes, Apparitions, a Soothsayer, a Dutch Gentleman, a Spanish Gentleman, Musicians, Officers, Captains, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE, sometimes in Britain; sometimes in Italy.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Britain. The Garden behind Cymbeline's Palace. Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gentleman.

You do not meet a man but frowns: our bloods
No more obey the heavens, than our courtiers,
Still seem, as does the king's.¹

2 Gent. But what's the matter?

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of his kingdom, whom

He purpos'd to his wife's sole son, (a widow
That late he married,) hath refer'd herself
Unto a poor but worthy gentleman: She's wedded;
Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
Is outward sorrow; though, I think, the king
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?

1 Gent. He that hath lost her, too: so is the queen.

What most desir'd the match: But not a courtier,
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He that hath miss'd the princess, is a thing

Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her,
(I mean, that married her,—alack, good man!—
And therefore banish'd,) is a creature such
As, to seek through the regions of the earth
For one like him, there would be something failing
In him that should compare. I do not think,
So fair an outward, and such stuff within Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him far.²1 Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself;
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure duly.³

2 Gent. What's his name, and birth?

1 Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: His father

Was call'd Sicilius, who did join his honour
Against the Romans, with Cassibelan;
But had his titles by Tenuantius,⁴ whom
He serv'd with glory and admir'd success:
So gain'd the sur-addition, Leonatus:

¹ 'Our bloods [i.e. our dispositions or temperaments] are not more regulated by the heavens, by every skyey influence, than our courtiers are by the disposition of the king: when he frowns, every man frowns.' Blood is used in old phraseology for disposition or temperament. So in King Lear:—

— Were it my fitness

To let these hands obey my blood,

² i.e. you praise him extensively.

³ 'My eulogium, however extended it may seem, is short of his real excellence; it is rather abbreviated than expanded.' Perhaps this passage will be best illustrated by the following lines in Troilus and Cressida, Act iii. sc. 2:—

— no man is the lord of any thing,

'Till he communicate his parts to others:

Nor doth he of himself know them for aught,

Till he behold them form'd in the applause

Where they are extended. [i.e. displayed at length.]

And had, besides this gentleman in question,
Two other sons, who, in the wars o' the time,
Died with their swords in hand; for which their
father,

(Then old and fond of issue,) took such sorrow,
That he quit being; and his gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, decaus'd
As he was born. The king, he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus;
Breeds him, and makes him of his bedchamber:
Puts him to all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
As we do air, fast as 'twas minister'd; and
In his spring became a harvest: Liv'd in court (Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lov'd:
A sample to the youngest; to the more mature
A glass that feald⁵ them; and to the graver,
A child that guided dotards; to his mistresses,⁶
From whom he now is banish'd,—her own price
Proclaims how she esteem'd him and his virtue;
By her election may be truly read,
What kind of man he is.

2 Gent. I honour him
Even out of your report. But, 'pray you, tell me,
Is she sole child to the king?

1 Gent. His only child.

He had two sons (if this be worth your hearing, Mark it,) the eldest of them at three years old,
I'me swathing clothes the other, from their nursery
Were stolen: and to this hour, no guess in knowledge

Which way they went.

2 Gent. How long is this ago?

1 Gent. Some twenty years.

2 Gent. That a king's children should be so convey'd!

So slackly guarded! And the search so slow,
That could not trace them!

1 Gent. Howsoe'er 'tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at,
Yet is it true, sir.

2 Gent. I do well believe you.

1 Gent. We must forbear: Here comes the queen and princess. [Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Enter the Queen, POSTHUMUS, and IMOGEN.

Queen. No, be assur'd, you shall not find me,
daughter,

After the slander of most step-mothers,

⁴ I do not (says Steevens) understand what can be meant by 'joining his honour against, &c. with, &c.' Perhaps Shakspeare wrote:—

— did join his banner.

In the last scene of the play Cymbeline proposes that 'a Roman and a British ensign should wave together.'

⁵ The father of Cymbeline.

⁶ 'This enconium (says Johnson) is highly artful. To be at once in any great degree loved and praised is truly rare.'

⁷ Feate is well-fashioned, proper, trim, handsome well compact. Concinnus. Thus in Horner's Vulgaria, 1519:— 'He would see himself in a glass, that all things were feet.' Feature was also used for fashion or proportion. The verb to feat was probably formed by Shakspeare himself.

⁸ 'To his mistress,' means as to his mistress.

Evil-eyed unto you: you are my prisoner, but
Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys
That lock up your restraint. For you, Posthumus,
So soon as I can win the offended king,
I will be known your advocate: marry, yet
The fire of rage is in him; and 'twere good,
You lean'd unto his sentence, with what patience
Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness,
I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril:—
I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections: though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

[Exit Queen.]

Imo. O,
Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband,

I something fear my father's wrath; but nothing (Always reserv'd my holy duty,) what
His rage can do on me: You must be gone;
And I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes: not comforted to live,
But that there is this jewel in the world,
That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress!
O, lady, weep no more; lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man! I will remain
The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight troth.
My residence in Rome at one Philario's;
Who to my father was a friend, to me
Known but by letter: thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter Queen.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you:
If the king come, I shall incur I know not
How much of his displeasure:—Yet I'll move him

[Aside.]

To walk this way: I never do him wrong,
But he does buy my injuries, to be friends:
Pays dear for my offences.

[Exit.]

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathsomeness to depart would grow: Adieu!

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Look here, love;
This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;
But keep it till you woo another wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How! how! another?
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And sear up¹ my embracements from a next
With bonds of death!—Remain, remain thou here

[Putting on the Ring.]

While sense² can keep it on! And sweetest, fairest,
As I my poor self did exchange for you,

1 'I say I do not fear my father, so far as I may say it without breach of duty.'

2 'He gives me a valuable consideration in new kindness, (purchasing, as it were, the wrong I have done him), in order to renew our amity, and make us friends again.'

3 Shakespeare poetically calls the cere-cloths, in which the dead are wrapped, the bonds of death. There was no distinction in ancient orthography between sear, to dry, to wither; and sear, to dress or cover with wax. Cere-cloth is most frequently spelled sear-cloth. In Hamlet we have—

'Why, thy canonized bones heaped in death
Have burst their cements.'

4 I.e. while I have sensation to retain it. There can be no doubt that it refers to the ring, and it is equally obvious that sear would have been more proper. Whether this error is to be laid to the poet's charge or to that of careless printing, it would not be easy to decide. Malone, however, has shown that there are many passages in these plays of equally loose construction.

5 I.e. renovate my youth, make me young again

To your so infinite loss; so, in our trifles
I still win of you: For my sake, wear this;
It is a manacle of love; I'll place it
Upon this fairest prisoner.

[Putting a Bracelet on her Arm.]

Imo. O, the gods!
When shall we see again?

Enter CYMBELINE and Lords.

Post. Alack, the king!
Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence, from my sight!

If, after this command, thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou diest: Away!
Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you!
And bless the good remainders of the court!
I am gone. [Exit.]

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharp than this is.

Cym. O, disloyal thing,
That should'st repair¹ my youth; thou heapest
A year's age on me!

Imo. I beseech you, sir,
Harm not yourself with your vexation: I Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience?
Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way, past grace.

Cym. That might'st have had the sole son of my queen!

Imo. O, bless'd, that I might not! I chose an eagle,

And did avoid a puttock.²

Cym. Thou look'st a beggar; would'st have made my throne
A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added

A lustre to it.

Cym. O, thou vile one!

Imo. Sir,
It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus:
You bred him as my playfellow; and he is
A man, worth any woman: overbays me
Almost the sun he pays.³

Cym. What!—art thou mad?

Imo. Almost, sir: Heaven restore me!—Would

I were

A neat-herd's daughter! and my Leonatus
Our neighbour shepherd's son!

Re-enter Queen.

Cym. Thou foolish thing!—
They were again together: you have done

[To the Queen.]

Not after our command. Away with her,

And pen her up.

Queen. 'Beseech your patience:—Peace,
Dear lady daughter, peace; Sweet sovereign,

¹ To repare (according to Barret) is to restore to the first state, to renew.' So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

'—thou heapest remorse
To talk of your good father.'

2 Sir Thomas Hammer reads:—

'—thou heapest money
A year's age on me?'

Some such emendation seems necessary.

3 'A touch more rare' is 'a more exquisite feeling, a superior sensation.' So in The Tempest:—

'Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions.'

And in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us.'

A passage in King Lear will illustrate Imogen's meaning:—

'—where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt.'

4 A puttock is a mean degenerate species of hawk too worthless to deserve training.

5 'My worth is not half equal to his'

Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort
Out of your best advice.¹

Cym. Nay, let her languish
A drop of blood a day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly!² [Exit.]

Enter PISANTO.

Queen. Fie!—you must give way:
Here is your servant.—How now, sir? What news?
Pis. My lord, your son drew on my master.

Queen. Ha!
No harm, I trust, is done?

Pis. There might have been,
But that my master rather play'd than fought,
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on't.
Imo. Your son's my father's friend: he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!—
I would they were in Afric both together;
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: He would not suffer me
To bring him to the haven: left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When it pleas'd you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour,
He will remain so.

Pis. I humbly thank your highness.
Queen. Pray, walk a while.

Imo. About some half hour hence,
I pray you, speak with me: you shall, at least,
Go see my lord aboard: for this time, leave me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A public Place. Enter CLOTEN, and two Lords.

1 Lord. Sir, I would advise you to take a shirt;
the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: Where air comes out, air comes in:
there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.
Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift it!—
Have I hurt him?

2 Lord. No, faith; not so much as his patience.
[Aside.]

1 Lord. Hurt him? his body's a passable carcass, if he be not hurt: it is a thoroughfare for steel if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. His steel was in debt; it went o' the backside the town. [Aside.]

Clo. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. No; but he fled forward still, toward your face. [Aside.]

1 Lord. Stand you! you have land enough of your own: but he added to your having; gave you some ground.

2 Lord. As many inches as you have oceans:
Puppies! [Aside.]

Clo. I would, they had not come between us.

2 Lord. So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground. [Aside.]

Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!

2 Lord. If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned. [Aside.]

1 Advice is consideration, reflection. Thus in Measure for Measure:—

'But did repent me after more advice.'

2 This is a bitter form of malediction, almost congenial to that in Othello:—

'—may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day.'

3 'Her beauty and her sense are not equal.' To understand the force of this idea, it should be remembered that anciently almost every sign had a motto, or some attempt at a witicism underneath. In a subsequent scene Isachian, speaking of Imogen, says:—

'All of her that is out of door, most rich!
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird'

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: She's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.³

2 Lord. She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll to my chamber: 'Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt. [Aside.]

Clo. You'll go with us?

1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Clo. Nay, come, let's go together.

2 Lord. Well, my lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. *A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.
Enter IMOGEN and PISANIO.*

Imo. I would thou grew'st unto the shores o' the haven,

And question'dst every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost

As offer'd mercy is.⁴ What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pis. 'Twas, His queen, his queen!

Imo. Then wad'st his handkerchief?

Pis. And kiss'd it, madam

Imo. Senseless linen! happier therein than I!—

And that was all?

Pis. No, madam; for so long

As he could make me with this eye or ear⁵

Distinguish him from others, he did keep

The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,

Still waving, as the fits and starts of his mind

Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,

How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou should'st have made him

As little as a crow, or less,⁶ ere left

To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings;

crack'd them, but

To look upon him; till the diminution

Of space⁷ had pointed him sharp as my needle:

Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from

The smallness of a gnat to air; and then

Have turn'd mine eye, and wept.—But, good Pi-sanio,

When shall we hear from him?

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,

With his next vantage.⁸

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had

Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,

How I would think on him, at certain hours,

Such thoughts, and such; or I could make him swear

The shes of Italy should not betray

Mine interest, and his honour; or have charg'd him,

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,

To encounter me with orisons, for then

I am in heaven for him:⁹ or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,

And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,

Shakes all our buds from growing.¹⁰

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company.

⁴ 'Its loss would be as fatal as the loss of intended mercy to a condemned criminal.' A thought resembling this occurs in All's Well that Ends Well:—

'Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried.'

⁵ The old copy reads, 'his eye or ear.'

⁶ This comparison may be illustrated by the following in King Lear:—

'—the crows and choughs that wing the midway air,

Seem scarce so gross as beetles.'

⁷ The diminution of space is the diminution of which space is the cause.

⁸ Opportunity.

⁹ I. e. 'to meet me with reciprocal prayer, for then my solicitations ascend to heaven on his behalf.'

¹⁰ I. e. our buds of love, likened to the buds of flowers.

So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,

May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.'

Imo. Those things I bid you do, got them despatch'd.—

I will attend the queen.

Pis.

Madam, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House. Enter PHILARIO, IACHIMO, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.¹

Jack. Believe it, sir: I have seen him in Britain; he was then of a crescent note, expected to prove so worthy, as since he hath been allowed the name of; but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration; though the catalogue of his endowments had been tumbled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Pis. You speak of him when he was less furnished, than now he is, with that which makes² him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there, could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Jack. This matter of marrying his king's daughter, (wherein he must be weighed rather by her value, than his own,) words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.³

French. And then his banishment:—

Jack. Ay, and the approbation of those, that weep this lamentable divorce, under her colours, are wonderfully to extend⁴ him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without more⁵ quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Pis. His father and I were soldiers together; to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life:—

Enter POSTHUMUS.

Here comes the Briton: Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suits, with gentlemen of your knowing, to a stranger of his quality.—I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you, as a noble friend of mine: How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'er-rate my poor kindness: I was glad I did stone⁶ my countryman and you; it had been pity, you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose, as then each bore, upon importance⁷ of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller: rather shunn'd to go even with what I heard, than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences:⁸ but, upon my mended judgment, (if I offend not to say it is mended,) my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. 'Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such too, that would, by all likelihood, have confounded⁹ one the other, or have fallen both.

Jack. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

¹ This enumeration of persons is from the old copy; but Mynter and the Dos are mute characters.

² I. e. accomplishes him.

³ Words him—a great deal from the matter.' makes the description of him very distant from the truth.

⁴ I. e. to magnify his good qualities. See Act I. Sc. 1.

⁵ The old copy reads, less. The poet has in other places entangled himself with the force of this word in construction. Thus in the Winter's Tale:—

— I ne'er heard yet

That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to galsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

⁶ I. e. reconcile.

⁷ Importance is importance.

⁸ Rather studied to avoid conducting himself by the opinions of others, than to be guided by their experience.

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses: This gentleman at that time vouching, (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation,) his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less attemptable, than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Jack. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and I my mind.

Jack. You must not so far prefer her 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.¹⁰

Jack. As fair, and as good, (a kind of hand-in-hand comparison,) had been something too fair, and too good, for any lady in Britain. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours out-lustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe¹¹ she excelled many: but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her, as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Jack. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Jack. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outstri'd¹² by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold, or given; if there were wealth enough for the purchase, or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Jack. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Jack. You may wear her in title yours: but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds. Your ring may be stolen, too: so, of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual: a cunning thief, or a that-way accomplished courtier, would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince¹³ the honour of my mistress; if, in the holding or loss of that, you term her frail. I do nothing doubt, you have store of thieves; notwithstanding I fear not my ring.

Pis. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior, I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Jack. With five times so much conversation, I should get round of your fair mistress: make her go back, even to the yielding; had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Jack. I dare, thereon, pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'er-values it something. But I make my wager rather against your confidence, than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

⁹ I. e. destroyed. So in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iii. Sc. 2:—

'What willingly he did confound he walf'd.'

¹⁰ Friend and lover were formerly synonymous. Posthumus means to bestow the most exalted praise on Imogen, a praise the more valuable as it was the result of reason, not of amorous dotage. I make my avowal, says he, in the character of her adorer, not of her possessor. I speak of her as a being I reverence, not as a beauty I enjoy. I rather profess to describe her with the devotion of a worshipper, than the raptures of a lover. This sense of the word also appears in a subsequent remark of Iachimo:—

'You are a friend, and therein the wiser.'

I. e. you are a lover, and therefore show your wisdom in opposing all experiments that may bring your lady's chastity into question.

¹¹ The old copy reads, 'I could not believe she excell'd many.' Mr. Heath proposed to read, 'I could but believe,' &c. The emendation in the text is Malone's.

¹² I. e. overcome.

Post. You are a great deal abused¹ in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of, by your attempt.

Jack. What's that?

Post. A repulse: Though your attempt, as you call it, deserves more; a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray, you, be better acquainted.

Jack. 'Would I had put my estate, and my neighbour's, on the approbation² of what I have spoke.

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Jack. Yours; whom in constancy, you think, stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring, that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers, which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold, gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Jack. You are a friend,³ and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting: But, I see, you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Jack. I am the master of my speeches; and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—Let there be covenants drawn between us: My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Jack. By the gods, it is one: If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so is your diamond too. If I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours:—provided, I have your commendation, for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us:—only, thus far you shall answer. If you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevailed, I am no further your enemy, she is not worth our debate; if she remain unseduced, (you not making it appear otherwise,) for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword.

Jack. Your hand; a covenant: We will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain; lest the bargain should catch cold, and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed. [Exeunt Post. and JACK.]

French. Will this hold, think you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Britain. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace. Enter Queen, Ladies, and CORNELIUS.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground, gather those flowers;
Make haste: Who has the note of them?

1 i. e. deceived.

'The Moor's abused by some most villainous knave.'

Othello.

2 i. e. proof

'—how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.'

King Henry V.

3 See note 10 in the preceding page.

4 'I know what I have said; I said no more than I meant.'

5 Conclusions are experiments. 'I commend (says Wakon) an angle that trieth conclusions, and improves his art.'

6 'This thought would probably have been more amplified, had our author lived to be shocked with such

1 Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despatch.—— [Exeunt Ladies.]
Now, master doctor; have you brought those drugs?

Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam: [Presenting a small Box.]

But I beseech your grace, (without offence; My conscience bids me ask;) wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds, Which are the movers of a languishing death; But, though slow, deadly?

Queen. I do wonder, doctor, Thou ask'st me such a question: Have I not been Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so, That our great king himself doth woo me oft For my confections? Having thus far proceeded, (Unless thou think'st me devilish,) is't not meet That I did amplify my judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging, (but none human,) To try the vigour of them, and apply Allayments to their act; and by them gather Their several virtues, and effects.

Cor. Your highness, Shall from this practice but make hard your heart? Besides, the seeing these effects will be Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O, content thee.—

Enter PISANIO.

Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him [Aside. Will I first work: he's for his master, And enemy to my son.—How now, Pisanio?— Doctor, your service for this time is ended; Take your own way.

Cor. I do suspect you, madam; But you shall do no harm. [Aside.]

Queen. Hark thee, a word.— [To PISANIO.]

Cor. [Aside.] I do not like her. She doth think she has

Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit, And will not trust one of her malice with A drug of such damn'd nature: Those, she has Will stupefy and dull the sense awhile: Which first, perchance, she'll prove on cats, and dogs;

Then afterward up higher: but there is No danger in what show of death it makes, More than the locking up the spirits a time, To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd With a most false effect; and I the truer, So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor, Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think, in time

She will not quench; and let instructions enter Where folly now possesses? Do thou work; When thou shalt bring me word, she loves my son, I'll tell thee, on the instant, thou art then As great as is thy master: greater; for His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp: Return he cannot, nor Continue where he is; to shift his being,⁹ Is to exchange one misery with another;

experiments as have been published in later times, by a race of men who have practised tortures without pity, and related them without shame, and are yet suffered to erect their heads among human beings.'

'Cape saxa manu, cape robora, pastor.'

Johnson.

7 This soliloquy is pronounced by Johnson to be 'very inartificial, and that Cornelius makes a long speech to tell himself what himself knows.' The great critic forgot that it was intended for the instruction of the audience, to relieve their anxiety at mischievous ingredients being left in the hands of the Queen. It is no less useful to prepare us for the return of Imogen to life.

8 i. e. grow cool.

9 To change his abode.

And every day, that comes, comes to decay
A day's work in him: What shalt thou expect,
To be dependor on a thing that leans? ¹
Who cannot be new built; nor has no friends.

[The Queen drops a Box: PISANIO takes it up.
So much as but to prop him?—Thou tak'st up
Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour:
It is a thing I made, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial:—Nay, I pry thee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good
That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do't, as from thyself.
Think what a chance thou changest on; ² but think
Thou hast thy mistress still; to boot, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee; I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preferment, such
As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To load thy merit richly. Call my women; Think on my words. [Exit PISA.]—A sly and constant knave;
Not to be shak'd: the agent for his master;
And the remembrancer of her, to hold
The hand fast to her lord.—I have given him that,
Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of liegers ³ for her sweet; and which she, after,
Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd

Re-enter PISANIO, and Ladies.

To taste of too.—So, so;—well done, well done:
The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet:—Fare thee well, Pisanio;
Think on my words. [Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Pis. And shall do:—

But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you. [Exit.

SCENE VII. Another Room in the same. Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. A father cruel, and a step-dame false;
A foolish suitor to a wedded lady,
That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that husband!
My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable
Is the desire that's glorious: ⁴ Blessed be those,
How mean soe'er, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be? Fie!

Enter PISANIO and IACHIMO.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome;
Comes from my lord with letters.

Jack. Change you, madam?

The worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greets your highness dearly. [Presents a letter.

Imo. Thanks, good sir:

You are kindly welcome.

Jack. All of her, that is out of door, most rich! [Aside.

If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird; and I
Have lost the wager. Baldness be my friend.
Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather, directly fly.

Imo. [Reads.]—He is one of the noblest men, to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.

LEONATUS.

So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.—
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have words to bid you; and shall find it so,
In all that I can do.

Jack. Thanks, fairest lady.—
What! are men mad? Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich crop
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twin'd stones
Upon the number'd beach? ⁵ and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious 'Twixt fair and foul?

Imo. What makes your admiration?
Jack. It cannot be i' the eye; for apes and monkeys
'Twixt two such shes, would chatter this way, and Contemn with mows ⁶ the other: Nor i' the judgment;
For idiots, in this case of favour, would
Be wisely definite: Nor i' the appetite;
Sluttish, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness,
Not so allow'd to feed. ⁷

Imo. What is the matter, trow?

Jack. The cloyed wild,
(That satiate yet unsatisfied desire,
That tub both fill'd and running,) ravening first
The lamb, longs after for the garbage.

Imo. What, dear sir,
Thus raps you? Are you well?

Jack. Thanks, madam; well:—Beseech you, sir, desire [To PISANIO.
My man's abode where I did leave him: he
Is strange and peevish. ⁸

Pis. I was going, sir,
To give him welcome. [Exit PISANIO.

Imo. Continues well my lord? His health, beseech you?

Jack. Well, madam.

Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope, he is.

Jack. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger there
So merry and so gamesome: he is call'd
The Briton reveller.

Imo. When he was here,
He did incline to sadness; and oft-times
Not knowing why.

Jack. I never saw him sad.
There is a Frenchman his companion, o'er,
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves

² Think with what a fair prospect of mending your fortunes you now change your present service.' It has been opposed to read:—

'Think what a chance thou chancest on.'

And, 'Think what a change thou chancest on.'

But there seems to be no necessity for alteration.

³ A lieger ambassador is one that resides in a foreign court to promote his master's interest. So in Measure for Measure:—

'Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting lieger.'

⁴ Some words, which rendered this sentence less abrupt, and perfected the metre of it, appear to have been omitted in the old copies.

⁵ Imogen's sentiment appears to be, 'Had I been stolen by thieves in my infancy, I had been happy. But how pregnant with misery is that station which is called glorious, and so much desired. Happier far are those, how mean soever their condition, that have their honest will; it is this which seasons comfort.' (I. e. tempers it, or makes it more pleasant and acceptable.) See Hamlet, Act I. Sc 3:—'My blessing seasons this in you.'

⁶ The old copy reads, mows. The emendation was suggested by Mason; is defended by Stevens; and, of course, opposed by Malone.

⁷ We must either believe that the poet by 'number'd beach' means 'numerous beach,' or else that he wrote 'th' unnumber'd beach; which, indeed, seems most probable.

⁸ To mow or moe, is to make mouths.

¹⁰ I. e. he is a foreigner and foolish, or silly. Iachimo says again at the latter end of this scene:—

'And I am something curious, being strange
To have them in safe stowage.'

Here also strange means a stranger or foreigner.

A Gallian girl at home : he furnaces¹
The thick sighs from him ; whiles the jolly Briton, (Your lord, I mean,) laughs from's free lungs, cries, O !

*Can my sides hold, to think, that man,—who knows
By history, report, or his own proof,
If that woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be,—will his free hours languish for Assured bondage ?*

Imo. Will my lord say so ?

Isach. Ay, madam ; with his eyes in flood with laughter.

It is a recreation to be by,
And hear him mock the Frenchman : But, heavens knew,

Some men are much to blame.

Imo. Not he, I hope.

Isach. Not he : But yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be us'd more thankfully. In himself 'tis much ;²
In you,—which I count his, beyond all talents,— Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, sir

Isach. Two creatures, heartily.

Imo. Am I one, sir ?

You look on me ; What wreck discern you in me,
Deserves your pity ?

Isach. Lamentable ! What !
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' the dungeon by a smuff ?

Imo. I pray you, sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me ?

Isach. That others do.
I was about to say, enjoy your——But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on't.

Imo. You do seem to know
Something of me, or what concerns me ; 'Pray you (Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do : For certainties
Either are past remedies ; or, timely knowing,³
The remedy then born,) discover to me
What both you spur and stop.⁴

Isach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips upon ; this hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch, would force the feeler's soul
To the oath of loyalty ; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here : should I, (damn'd then,) Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol ; join griipes with hands Made hard with hourly falsehood,⁵ (falsehood, as
With labour ;) then lie peeping in an eye,
Base and unlostrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow ; it were fit,
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Isach. And himself. Not I,
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce

1 We have the same expression in Chapman's preface to his translation of the Shield of Homer, 1696 :—
'Pernaceth the universal sighs and complaints of this transposed world.' And in As You Like It :

'Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad.'

2 'If he merely regarded his own character, without any consideration of his wife, his conduct would be unpardonable.'

3 It seems probable that knowing is here an error of the press for known.

4 'The information which you seem to press forward and yet withhold.' The allusion is to horsemanship. So in Sidney's Arcadia :—'She was like a horse desirous to runne, and miserably spurred, but so short-reined, as he cannot stirre forward.'

5 Hard with falsehood is hard by being often griped with frequent change of hands.

6 Empery is a word signifying sovereign command, now obsolete. Shakespeare uses it in King Richard III. :—

'Your right of birth, your empire your own.'

The beggary of his change ; but 'tis your graces
That, from my mutest conscience, to my tongue,
Charms this report out.

Imo. Let me hear no more.

Isach. O, dearest soul ! your cause doth strike my heart

With pity, that doth make me sick. A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,⁶
Would make the great'st king double ! to be partner'd

With tomboys,⁷ hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield ! with disease'd ventures,

That play with all infirmities for gold,
Which rottenness can lend nature ! such boil'd stuff,⁸

As well might poison poison ! Be reveng'd ;
Or she, that bore you, was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng'd !

How should I be reveng'd ? If this be true,
(As I have such a heart, that both mine ears Must not in haste abuse,) if it be true,
How should I be reveng'd ?

Isach. Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest, betwixt cold sheets ;
Whiles he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse ? Revenge it.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure ;
More noble than that runagate to your bed ;
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close, as sure.

Imo. What ho, Pisanio !

Isach. Let me my service tender on your lips.
Imo. Away !—I do condemn mine ears, that have
So long attended thee.—If thou wert honourable,
Thou would'st have told this tale for virtue, not
For such an end thou seek'st ; as base, as strange.
Thou wrong'st a gentleman, who is as far
From thy report, as thou from honour ; and Solicit'st here a lady, that disdains
Thee and the devil alike. What ho, Pisanio !—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault : if he shall think it fit,
A saucy stranger, in his court, to mart
As in a *Romish*⁹ stew, and to expound
His beastly mind to us ; he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter whom
He not respects at all.—What ho, Pisanio !

Isach. O, happy Leonatus ! I may say ;
The credit, that thy lady hath of thee,
Deserves thy trust ; and thy most perfect goodness
Her assur'd credit !—Blessed live you long !
A lady to the worthiest sir, that ever
Country call'd his ! and you his mistress, only
For the most worthiest fit ! Give me your pardon.
I have spoke this, to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted ; and shall make your lord,
That which he is, new o'er ; And he is one
The truest manner'd ; such a holy witch,
That he enchants societies unto him :¹⁰
Half all men's hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

7 We still call a forward or rude hoyden a tomboy. But our ancestors seem to have used the term for a wanton.

'What humorous tomboys be these ?—'

The only gallant Messalinas of our age.'

Lady Alimony.

8 This allusion has been already explained. See Timon of Athens, Act II. Sc. 3.

9 Romish for Roman was the phraseology of Shakespeare's age. Thus in Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607 :—'In the lascivious Romish stewes, Drant, in his translation of the first epistle of the second book of Horace, 1607, has—'

'The Romische people wise in this, in this point only just.'

And in other places we have the 'Romish cirque,' &c.

10 '—he bid in the general bosom reign
Of young and old, and sexes both enchanted—
Consents bewitch'd, are he desire, have granted

Jack. He sits 'mongst men, like a descended god :¹ He hath a kind of honour sets him off, More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry, Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd To try your taking of a false report ; which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment In the election of a sir so rare.

Which, you know, cannot err : The love I bear him Made me to fan you thus ; but the gods made you, Unlike all others, chaffless. Pray your pardon.

Imo. All's well, sir : Take my power i' the court for yours.

Jack. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot To entreat your grace but in a small request, And yst of moment too, for it concerns Your lord ; myself, and other noble friends, Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is't ?

Jack. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord, (The best feather of our wing,²) have mingled sums, To buy a present for the emperor ; Which I, the factor for the rest, have done In France : 'Tis plate, of rare device ; and jewels, Of rich and exquisite form ; their values great ; And I am something curious, being strange,³ To have them in safe stowage ; May it please you To take them in protection ?

Imo. Willingly ;

And pawn mine honour for their safety : since My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them In my bed-chamber.

Jack. They are in a trunk, Attended by my men : I will make bold To send them to you, only for this night ; I must abroad to-morrow.

Imo. O, no, no.

Jack. Yes, I beseech ; or I shall short my word, By length'ning my return. From Gallia I cross'd the seas on purpose, and on promise To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains ;

But not away to-morrow ?

Jack. O, I must, madam :

Therefore, I shall beseech you, if you please To greet your lord with writing, do't to-night : I have outstod my time ; which is material To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.

Send your trunk to me ; it shall safe be kept, And truly yielded you : You are very welcome.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Court before Cymbeline's Palace.—Enter CLOTEN, and two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck ! when I kissed the jack upon an upcast,⁴ to be hit away ! I had a hundred pound on't : And then a whoreson jackanapes must take me up for swearing ; as if I borrowed nine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 Lord. What got he by that ? You have broke his pate with your bowl.

2 Lord. If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have ran all out. [Aside.]

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths : Ha ?

2 Lord. No, my lord ; not [Aside] crop the ears of them.

¹ So in Chapman's version of the twenty-third book of the Odyssey :—

“— as he were

And in Hamlet :—
“— a station like the herald Mercury
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.”

² “You are so great you would faine march in fields,
That world should judge you feathers of one wing.”
Churchyard's Warning to Wanderers, 1603.

³ See note 10, p. 314, ante.

⁴ He is describing his fate at bowls. The jack is the Clo. Whoreson dog !—I give him satisfaction ? 'Would, he had been one of my rank !

2 Lord. To have smelt like a fool.⁵ [Aside.]

Clo. I am not more vexed at any thing in the earth,—A pox on't ! I had rather not be so noble as I am ; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother : every jack-alave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

2 Lord. You are a cock and capon too ; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.⁶ [Aside.]

Clo. Sayest thou ?

1 Lord. It is not fit, your lordship should undertake every companion⁷ that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that : but it is fit, I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger, that's come to court to-night ?

Clo. A stranger ! and I know not on't !

2 Lord. He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not. [Aside.]

1 Lord. There's an Italian come ; and, 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus ! a banished rascal ; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger ?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit, I went to look upon him ? Is there no derogation in't ?

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. You are a fool granted ; therefore your issues being foolish, do not derogate. [Aside.]

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian : What I have lost to-day at bowls, I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exeunt CLOTEN and first Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother Should yield the world this ass ! a woman, that Bears all down with her brain ; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess, Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st ! Betwixt a father by thy step-dame govern'd ; A mother hourly coining plots ; a wooer, More hateful than the foul expulsion is Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act Of the divorce he'd make ! The heavens hold firm The walls of thy dear honour ; keep unshak'd That temple, thy fair mind ; that thou may'st stand, To enjoy thy banish'd lord, and this great land !

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Bedchamber ; in one part of it a Trunk. IMOGEN reading in her Bed ; a Lady attending.

Imo. Who's there ? my woman Helen ?

Lady. Please you, madam.

Imo. What hour is it ?

Lady. Almost midnight, madam.

Imo. I have read three hours, then ; mine eyes are weak :—

Fold down the leaf where I have left : To bed :

Take not away the taper, leave it burning ;

And if thou canst awake by four o' the clock,

I prythee, call me. Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.

[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods !

small bowl at which the others are aimed : he who is nearest to it wins. ‘To kiss the jack’ is a state of great advantage. The expression is of frequent occurrence in the old comedies. The jack is also called the mis-tress.

⁵ The same quibble has occurred in As You Like It, Act i. Sc. 2 :—

“Thouk. Nay, if I kept not my rank.

Res. Thou loost thy old smell.”

⁶ That is, in other words, you are a cockcomb.

⁷ The use of companion was the same as of fellow now. k was a word of contempt.

From farries, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. IACHIMO, from the Trunk.

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'erlabour'd sense

Repairs itself by rest: Our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes,¹ ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded.—Cytheres,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd,
How dearly they do't!—'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus:² The flame o' the taper
Bows toward her; and would underpeep her lids,
To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows:³ White and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct.⁴—But my design?
To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—
Such, and such, pictures:—There the window:—
Such

The adornment of her bed:—The arras, figures, Why, such, and such:—And the contents o' the story,—

Ay, but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand meaner moveables
Would testify, to enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off;—

As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard!—
'Tis mine; and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
I' the bottom of a cowslip: Here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock, and ta'en
The treasure of her honour. No more.—To what end?

Why should I write this down, that's riveted,
Screw'd to my memory? She hath been reading late
The tale of Toreus; ⁵ here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomel gave up;—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night!⁶—that dawning

May bare the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

One, two, three.—Time, time!

[Goes into the Trunk. The Scene closes.

SCENE III. An Ante-Chamber adjoining Imogen's Apartment. Enter CLOTEN and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turn'd up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient, after the noble temper of your lordship; You are most hot, and furious, when you win.

1 It was anciently the custom to strew chambers with rushes. This passage may serve as a comment on the 'ravishing strides' of Tarquin, in Macbeth, as it shows that Shakespeare meant 'swiftly stealing strides'

2 '—no lips did seem so fair

In his conceit; through which he thinks doth lie

So sweet a breath that doth perfume the air.'

Pygmalion's Image, by Marston, 1598.

3 That is, her eyelids. So in Romeo and Juliet—

'Thy eyes' windows fall

Like death when he shuts up the day of life.'

4 Warburton wished to read:—

'—White with azure lac'd,

The blue of heaven's own tinct.'

But there is no necessity for change. It is an exact description of the eyelid of a fair beauty, which is white tinged with blue, and laced with veins of darker blue.
By azure our ancestors understood not a dark blue, but a light glaucous colour, a tinct or effusion of a blue colour.

5 Toreus and Progne is the second tale in A Petite Palace of Petite his Pleasure, 4to 1766. The story is related in Ovid, Metam. i. vi.; and by Gower in his Confessio Amantis, b. v. fol. 112, b.

6 The task of drawing the chariot of Night was as-

Clo. Winning would put any man into courage:
If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough: It's almost morning, is't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o' mornings; they say, it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we'll try with tongue, too. if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er.
First, a very excellent good-conceited thing; after,
a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark! hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,¹

And Phœbus 'gins arise,

His steeds to water at those springs

On chalic'd flowers that tie;

And winking Mary-buds begin

To ope their golden eyes;

With every thing that pretty bin:

My lady sweet, arise;

Arise, arise.

So, got you gone: If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better:² if it do not, it is a vice in her ears, which horse-hairs, and cat-guts, nor the voice of unpaved ensuch to boot, can never amend.

[Exeunt Musicians.

Enter CYMBELINE and Queen.

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad, I was up so late; for, that's the reason I was up so early: He cannot choose but take this service I have done, fatherly,—Good morrow to your majesty, and to my gracious mother.

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?

Will she not forth?

Clo. I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new;
She hath not yet forgot him: some more time
Must wear the print of his remembrance out,
And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king;

Who lets go by no vantages, that may
Prefer you to his daughter: Frame yourself
To orderly solicits; and be friend'd
With aptness of the season:³ make denials Increase your services: so seem, as if You were inspir'd to do those duties which
You tender to her; that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your dismission tends,
And therein you are senseless.

Clo.

Senseless? not so.

signed to dragons, on account of their supposed watchfulness. Milton mentions 'the dragon yoke of night' in Il Penseroso; and in his Comus:—

'—the dragon womb

Of Stygian darkness.'

Again, in Obitum Præcelsis Elenæ:—

'—sub pedibus deam

Vidi triforem, dum cœrebat suos

Frænis dracones aureis.'

It may be remarked that the whole tribe of serpents sleep with their eyes open, and therefore appear to exert a constant vigilance.

7 The same hyperbole occurs in Milton's Paradise

Lost, book v.—

'—ye birds

That singing up to heaven's gate ascend.'

And in Shakespeare's 29th Sonnet:—

'Like to the lark at break of day arising

From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate.'

8 The morning dries up the dew which lies in the cups of flowers called calices, or chalcies. The marigold is one of those flowers which closes itself up at sunset.

'—the day is waxen olde,

And 'gins to shut up with the marigold.'

Brown's; Britania's Pastora.

9 i. e. I will pay you more amply for it.

10 'With solicitations not only proper but well timed.'

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome ; The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow, Albeit he comes on angry purpose now ; But that's no fault of his : We must receive him According to the honour of his render ; And towards himself his goodness forespent on us We must extend our notice.¹—Our dear son, When you have given good morning to your mistress, Attend the queen, and us ; we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt Cym. Queen, Lords, and Mess.]

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her ; if not, Let her lie still, and dream.—By your leave, ho !—

[Knocks.]

I know her women are about her ; What If I do lose one of their hands ? 'Tis gold Which buys admittance ; off it doth ; yea, and makes

Diana's rangers false² themselves, yield up Their deer to the stand of the stealer ; and 'tis gold Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves the thief ;

Nay, sometime, hangs both thief and true man : What

Can it not do, and undo ? I will make One of her women lawyer to me ; for I yet not understand the case myself. By your leave.

[Knocks.]

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there, that knocks ?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more ?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours, Can justly boast of : What's your lordship's pleasure ?

Clo. Your lady's person : Is she ready ?

Lady. Ay, To keep her chamber.

Clo. There's gold for you : sell me your good report.

Lady. How ! my good name ? or to report of you What I shall think is good ?—The princess—

Enter IMOGEN.

Clo. Good morrow, fairest sister : Your sweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow, sir : You lay out too much pains

For purchasing but trouble : the thanks I give, Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still, I swear, I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me : If you swear still, your recompense is still That I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent,

I would not speak. I pray you, spare me : I' faith, I shall unfold equal discourtesy To your best kindness ; one of your great knowing Should learn, being taught, forbearance.³

Clo. To leave you in your madness, 'twere my sin : I will not.

¹ That is, we must extend towards himself our notice of his goodness heretofore shown to us. Shakespeare has many similar ellipses. Thus in Julius Cæsar :—

'Thine honourable metal may be wrought From what it is dispos'd [to].'

See the next Scene, note 6.

² False is not here an adjective, but a verb. Thus in Tambrulaine, Part II. :—

'And make him false his faith unto the king.'

Shakespeare has one form of the verb to faise in: The Comedy of Errors, Act II. Sc. 2 :—'Nay, not sure in a thing falsing.'

³ I. e. 'a man of your knowledge, being taught forbearance, should learn it.'

⁴ This, as Cloten very well understands it, is a covert

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.⁴

Clo. Do you call me fool ?

Imo. As I am mad, I do :

If you'll be patient, I'll no more be mad ; That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal :⁵ and learn now, for all, That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce, By the very truth of it, I care not for you ; And am so near the lack of charity, (To accuse myself,) I hate you : which I had rather You felt, than make't my boast.

Clo. You sin against Obedience, which you owe your father. For The contract you pretend with that base wretch, (One, bred of alms, and foster'd with colic diseases, With scraps o' the court,) it is no contract, none : And though it be allow'd in meaner parties, (Yet who, than he, more mean ?) to knit their souls, (On whom there is no more dependency But brats and beggary,) in self-figur'd knot ;⁶ Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by The consequence o' the crown ; and must not soil The precious note of it with a base slave, A hilding⁷ for a livery, a squire's cloth, A pantler, not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow ! Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more, But what thou art, besides, thou wert too base To be his groom : thou wert dignified enough, Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made, Comparative for your virtues,⁸ to be styl'd The under-hangman of his kingdom ; and hated For being preferr'd so well.

Clo. The south-fog rot him !

Imo. He never can meet more mischance than come To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment, That ever bath but clipp'd his body, is dearer, In my respect, than all the hairs above thee, Were they all made such men.—How now, Pisanio ?

Enter PISANIO.

Clo. His garment ? Now, the devil—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman his thee presently :—

Clo. His garment ?

Imo. I am sprighted⁹ with a fool, Frighted, and anger'd worse :—Go, bid my woman Search for a jewel, that too casually Hath left mine arm ; it was thy master's : 'shrew me, If I would lose it for a revenue Of any king's in Europe. I do think I saw't this morning : Confident I am, Last night 'twas on mine arm ; I kiss'd it : I hope, it be not gone, to tell my lord That I kiss aught but he.

Pis. 'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so : go, and search. [Exit Pis.]

Clo. You have abus'd me :—

His meanest garment ?

Imo. Ay ; I said so, sir.

If you will make't an action, call witnesses to't.

Clo. I will inform your father.

Imo. Your mother too : She's my good lady ;¹⁰ and will conceive, I hope, But the worst of me. So I leave you, sir, To the worst of discontent. [Exit.] mode of calling him a fool. The meaning implied is this : 'If I am mad, as you tell me, I am what you can never be.' 'Fools are not mad folks.'

⁵ I. e. so verbose, so full of talk.

⁶ In knots of their own tying.

⁷ A low fellow only fit to wear a livery.

⁸ 'If you were to be dignified only in comparison to your virtues, the under-hangman's place is too good for you.'

Johnson says, that 'the rudeness of Cloten is not much undermatched' in that of Imogen ; but he forgets the provocation her gentle spirit undergoes by this persecution of Cloten's addresses, and the abuse bestowed upon the idol of her soul.

⁹ I. e. haunted by a fool as by a spirit.

¹⁰ This is said ironically. 'My good lady' is equivalent to 'my good friend.'

Clo. I'll be reveng'd :—
His meanest garment ?—Well. [Exit.]
SCENE IV. Rome. An Apartment in Philario's House. Enter POSTHUMUS and PHILARIO.

Post. Fear it not, sir : I would, I were so sure
To win the king, as I am bold, her honour
Will remain here.

Phi. What means do you make to him ?

Post. Not any ; but abide the change of time ;
Quake in the present winter's state, and wish
That warmer days would come : in these fear'd hopes,
I barely gratify your love ; they failing,
I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness, and your company,
O'erpays all I can do. By this, your king
Hath heard of great Augustus : Caius Lucius
Will do his commission thoroughly : And, I think,
He'll grant the tribute, send the arrarages,
Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe,
(Statist² though I am none, nor like to be,)
That this will prove a war ; and you shall hear
The legions now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing Britain, than have tidings
Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen
Are men more order'd, than when Julius Cæsar
Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at : Their discipline, (Now mingled with their courages,) will make known

To their approvers,³ they are people, such
That mend upon the world.

Enter IACHIMO.

Phi. See ! Iachimo ?
Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by land :
And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.

Post. I hope the briefness of your answer made
The speediness of your return.

Iach. Your lady
Is one of the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And, therewithal, the best ; or let her beauty
Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their tenor good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.

Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court,
When you were there ?⁴

Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.—

Sparkles this stone as it was wont ? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing ?

Iach. If I have lost it,

I should have lost the worth of it in gold.

I'll make a journey twice as far to enjoy

A second night of such sweet shortness, which
Was mine in Britain ; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit.

Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir,
Your loss your sport : I hope, you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must,
If you keep covenant : Had I not brought
The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant
We were to question further : but I now
Profess myself the winner of her honour,
Together with your ring ; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent
That you have tasted her in bed, my hand,
And ring is yours : if not, the foul opinion
You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword, or mine ; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances,
Being so near the truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to believe : whose strength
I will confirm with oath ; which, I doubt not,
You'll give me leave to spare, when you shall find
You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bed-chamber (Where, I confess, I slept not ; but, profess,
Had that was well worth watching,) it was hang'd
With tapestry of silk and silver ; the story,
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for
The press of boats, or pride : a piece of work
So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive
In workmanship, and value : which, I wonder'd,
Could be so rarely and exactly wrought,
Since the true life on't was—

Post. This is true ;
And this you might have heard of here, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or do your honour injury.

Iach. The chimney
Is south the chamber ; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian, bathing : never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves : the cutter
Was as another nature, dumb ;⁵ outwent her,
Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing,
Which you might from relation likewise reap ;
Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o' the chamber
With golden cherubins is fretted.⁶ Her andirons
(I had forgot them,) were two winking Cupids
Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely
Depending on their brands.⁷

1 Or stands here for ere. Respecting the tribute here alluded to, see the Preliminary Remarks.

2 I. e. statesman.
3 That is, 'to those who try them.' The old copy, by a common typographical error in the preceding line, has wingled instead of mingled, which odd reading Stevens seemed inclined to adopt, and explains it, 'their discipline borrowing wings from their courage.'

4 This speech is given to Posthumus in the old copy ; but Posthumus was employed in reading his letters, and was too much interested in the end of Iachimo's journey to put an indifferent question of this nature. It was transferred to Philario at the suggestion of Stevens.

5 I. e. 'that which was well worth watching or lying awake [for].' See the preceding scene.

6 Mason proposes to read :—
'Such the true life on't was.'

It is a typographical error easily made : and the emendation deserves a place in the text.

Johnson observes, that 'Iachimo's language is such as a skilful villain would naturally use ; a mixture of airy triumph and serious deposition. His gayety shows his seriousness to be without anxiety, and his seriousness proves his gayety to be without art.'

7 I. e. so near speech. A speaking picture is a common figurative mode of expression. The meaning of the latter part of the sentence is : 'The sculptor was as nature dumb ; he gave every thing that nature gives but breath and motion. In breath is included speech.'

8 Stevens says, 'this tawdry image occurs in King Henry VIII. :—

— their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins all gilt.'

By the very mention of cherubins his indignation is moved. 'The sole recommendation of this Gothic idea, (says he,) which is critically repeated by modern artists, seems to be, that it occupies but little room on canvass or marble ; for chubby unmeaning faces, with ducks' wings tucked under them, are all the circumstances that enter into such infantine and absurd representations of the choirs of heaven.'

9 It is well known that the andirons of our ancestors were sometimes costly pieces of furniture ; the standards were often, as in this instance, of silver, and representing some terminal figure or device ; the transverse or horizontal pieces, upon which the wood was supported, were what Shakespeare here calls the brands, properly

Post. This is her honour!—
Let it be granted, you have seen all this (and praise
Be given to your remembrance,) the description
Of what is in her chamber, nothing saves
The wager you have laid.

Jack. Then, if you can,
(Pulling out the Bracelet.)
Be pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel: See!—
And now 'tis up again: it must be married
To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Post. Jove!—
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Jack. Sir (I thank her,) that:
She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet;
Her pretty action did outsell her gift,
And yet enrich'd it too: She gave it me, and said,
She priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off,
To send it me.

Jack. She writes so to you? doth she?

Post. O, no, no, no; 'tis true. Here, take this too; (Gives the Ring.)

It is a basilisk unto mine eye,
Kills me to look on't:—Let there be no honour,
Where there is beauty; truth, where semblance;
love,

Where there's another man: 'The vows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues: which is nothing:—
O, above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, sir,
And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won:
It may be probable, she lost it; or,
Who knows if one of her women, being corrupted,
Hath stolen it from her.

Post. Very true;
And so, I hope, he came by't:—Back my ring;—
Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Jack. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Hark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears.
'Tis true;—nay, keep the ring—'tis true: I am sure,

She would not lose it: her attendants are All sworn² and honourable—They induc'd to steal it!

And by a stranger?—No, he hath enjoy'd her.
The cognizance³ of her incontinency
Is this,—she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.—

There, take thy hire: and all the fiends of hell
Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient:
This is not strong enough to be believ'd
Of one persuaded well of—

Post. Never talk on't;
She hath been colted by him.

Jack. If you seek
For further satisfying, under her breast
(Worthy the pressing,) lies a mole, right proud
Of that most delicate lodging: By my life,
I kiss'd it: and it gave me present hunger
To feed again, though full. You do remember
This stain upon her?

brandirone. Upon these the Cupids which formed the standards nicely depended, seemed to stand on one foot.

1 The meaning seems to be, 'If you ever can be pale—be pale now with jealousy.'

2 'Pale jealousy, child of insatiate love.'
Not, as Johnson says, 'forbear to flush your cheek with rage.' Mr. Boswell's conjecture that it means, 'If you can control your temper, if you can restrain yourself within bounds,' is surely inadmissible.

3 It was anciently the custom for the servants of great families (as it is now for the servants of the king) to take an oath of fidelity on their entrance into office. See Percy's Northumberland Household Book, p. 49.

4 The badge, the token, the visible proof. So in King
Henry IV. Part I.—

'As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate.'

4 l. a. overt his wrath from himself, prevent him from injuring himself in his rage.

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Jack. Will you hear more?
Post. Spare your arithmetic; never count the turns;

Once, and a million!
Jack. I'll be sworn,—

Post. No swearing.
If you will swear you have not done't, you lie;
And I will kill thee, if thou dost deny
Thou hast made me cuckold.

Jack. I will deny nothing.
Post. O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal!

I will go there, and do't; I'll the court; before
Her father:—I'll do something— [Exit.]

Phi. Quite besides

The government of patience!—You have won:
Let's follow him, and pervert⁴ the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Jack. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. Another Room in the same. Enter POSTHUMUS.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women Must be half-workers? We are bastards all;
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where
When I was stamp'd; Some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit: Yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my wife
The nonpareil of this.—O, vengeance, vengeance!
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me, oft, forbearance: did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought her

As chaste as unsunn'd snow;—O, all the devils!—
This yellow Iachimo, in an hour,—was't not?—
Or less,—at first: Perchance he spoke not; but,
Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted: found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman's part in me! For there's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: Be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longings, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be nam'd, nay, that hell knows,
Why, hers, in part, or all; but, rather, all:
For ev'n to vice

They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them: Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.' [Exit.]

5 Milton was probably indebted to this speech for one of the sentiments which he has imputed to Adam, Par.
Lost, b. x.:

'O, why did God,
Creator wise, that peopled highest heaven
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature, and not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine,
Or find some other way to generate Mankind?'

See Rhodomonie's invective against women in the Orlando Furioso; and above all a speech which Euripides has put into the mouth of Hippolytus, in the tragedy of that name.

6 We have the same image in Measure for Measure:—
'Their saucy sweetens, that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid.'

See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, Part III. Sect. 2.

than in this world to grant him his own foolish wishes'

Sir T. More's Comfort against Tribulation

ACT III.

SCENE I. Britain. A Room of State in Cymbeline's Palace. Enter CYMBELINE, Queen, CLOTEN, and Lords, at one door; and at another, CAIUS LUCIUS, and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Cæsar with us?

Luc. When Julius Cæsar, (whose remembrance yet Lives in men's eyes; and will to ears, and tongues, Be theme, and hearing ever,) was in this Britain, And conquer'd it, Cassibelan, thine uncle (Famous in Cæsar's praises, no whit less Than in his feats deserving it,) for him, And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately Is left untender'd.

Queen. And, to kill the marvel, Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Cæsars, Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay, For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity, Which then they had to take from us, to resume We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege, The kings your ancestors; together with The natural bravery of your isle; which stands As Neptune's park, ribbed and pale'd in With rocks unscaleable, and roaring waters; With sands, that will not bear your enemies' boats, But suck them up to the top-mast. A kind of con-quest Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag Of come, and see, and overcome; with shame, (The first that ever touch'd him,) he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping, (Poor ignorant baubles!) on our terrible seas, Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd As easily 'gainst our rocks: for joy whereof, The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point, (O, gilot! fortune!) to master Cæsar's sword, Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright, And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: Our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Cæsars: other of them may have crook'd noses: but, to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassibelan; I do not say, I am one; but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Cæsar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know, Till the injurious Romans did extort This tribute from us, we were free: Cæsar's ambition

(Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch The sides o' the world,) against all colour,¹ here Did put the yoke upon us; which to shake off,

¹ O, false and inconstant fortune! A gilot was a strumpet. So in Measure for Measure:—'Away with those gilot too.' And in Hamlet:—

'Out, out, thou strumpet fortune!'

The poet has transferred to Cassibelan an adventure which happened to his brother Nennius. See Holinshed, book iii. ch. xiii. 'The same historie also maketh mention of Nennius, brother to Cassibelan, who in fight happened to get Cæsar's sword fastened in his shield, by a blow which Cæsar stroke at him. But Nennius died, within 15 daies after the battel, of the hurt received at Cæsar's hand; although after he was hurt he slew Labienus, one of the Roman tribunes.'

² i. e. without any pretence of right.

³ Some few hints for this part of the play are taken from Holinshed.

⁴ i. e. at the extremity of defiance. So in Helyas Knight of the Swanne bk l. no date:—'Here is my

Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon Ourselves to be. We do say then to Cæsar, Our ancestor was that Mulmutius, which Ordain'd our laws; whose use the sword of Cæsar. Hath too much mangled; whose repair, and franchise,

Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, (Though Rome be therefore angry;) Mulmutius made our laws,

Who was the first of Britain, which did put His brows within a golden crown, and call'd Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline, That I am to pronounce Augustus Cæsar (Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants, than Thyself domestic officers,) thine enemy: Receive it from me, then:—War, and confusion, In Cæsar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look For fury not to be resisted:—Thus defied, I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome, Caius. Thy Cæsar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour; Which he, to seek of me again, perforce, Behoves me keep at utterance; I am perfect, That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for Their liberties, are now in arms: a precedent Which, not to read, would show the Britons cold: So Cæsar shall not find them.

Luc. Let proof speak.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day, or two, longer: If you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our crowns shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he mine:

All the remain is, welcome.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another Room in the same. Enter PISANIO.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write you not What monster's her accuser?—Leonatus!

O, master! what a strange infection Is fallen into thy ear? What false Italian (As poisonous tongue'd, as handed,) hath prevail'd On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal? No: She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes, More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults As would take in some virtue.—O, my master Thy mind to her is now as low, as were Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her? Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command?—I, her?—her blood? If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I, That I should seem to lack humanity, So much as this fact comes to? Do't: The letter

[Reading.]

That I have sent her, by her own command Shall give thee opportunity:—O, damn'd paper! Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble, gave to sustain it to the utterance, and befight it to the death.'

⁵ Well informed.

⁶ To take in is to conquer. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'— cut the Ionian seas

And take in Tomyne.'

⁷ Thy mind compared to hers is now as low as thy condition was compared to hers. According to modern notions of grammatical construction, it should be 'thy mind to hers.'

⁸ The words here read by Pisanio from his master's letter (as it is afterwards given in prose) are not found there, though the substance of them is contained in it. Malone thinks this a proof that Shakespeare had no view to the publication of his pieces—the inaccuracy would hardly be detected by the ear of the spectator, though it could hardly escape an attentive reader

Art thou a feodary¹ for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.

Enter IMOGEN.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.²

Imo. How now, Pisanio?

Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord? Leonatus?
O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer,
That knew the stars, as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not,
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,—
(Some griefs are med'cinable;) that is one of them,
For it doth physic love;—of his content,
All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave:—Bless'd be,
You bees, that make these locks of counsel! Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.—Good news, gods!
[Reads.]

*Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me as you, O the dearest of creatures, would not even renew me with your eyes. Take notice, that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven. What your own love will out of this, advise you, follow. So, he wishes you all happiness, that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love,*⁴ LEONATUS POSTHUMUS.

O, for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou, Pisanio?
He is at Milford Haven: Read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?—Then, true Pisanio,
(Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st—
O, let me 'bate,—but not like me:—yet long'st,—
But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond⁵) say, and speak thick:⁶
(Love's counsellor should fill the pores of hearing,
To the smothering of the sense,) how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: And, by the way,
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
To inherit such a haven: But, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and, for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going,
And our return, to excuse:—but first, how get
hence:

Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?⁷
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

1 i. e. a subordinate agent, as a vassal to his chief. A feodary, however, meant also 'a prime agent, or steward, who received aids, reliefs, suits of service, &c. due to any lord.'—Glossographia Anglicana Nova, 1719. Yet after all, it may be doubted whether Shakspeare does not use it to signify a confederate or accomplice, as he does feodary in The Winter's Tale, Act II. Sc. 1:—

'More, she's a traitor, and Camillo is A feodary with her.'

2 i. e. I am unpractised in the arts of murder. So in King Henry IV. Part I. 1:—

'O, I am ignorance itself in this.'

3 He is here used for that. See Julius Caesar, Act I. Sc. 2. The word not in the next line, being accidentally omitted in the old copy, was supplied by Malone.

4 We should now write 'yours, increasing in love,' Your is to be joined in construction with Leonatus Posthumus, and not with increasing; the latter is a participle present, and not a noun.

5 i. e. her longing is further than beyond; beyond any thing that desire can be said to be beyond.

6 i. e. 'speak quick.'

7 That is 'in consequence of our going hence and returning back.' So in Coriolanus, Act II. Sc. 1:—

'He cannot temperately support his honours
From where he should begin and end.'

8 i. e. before the act is done for which excuse will be necessary.

9 This practice was, perhaps, not much less prevalent in Shakspeare's time than it is at present. Fynes Morison, speaking of his brother's putting out money

Pis. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to his execution, man, Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding wagers,⁸

Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run 'i' the clock's behalf!⁹—But this is foolery:—

Go, bid my woman feign a sickness, say
She'll home to her father: and provide me, presently,

A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
A frankin's¹⁰ housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best¹¹ consider.

Imo. I see before me, man, nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through.¹² Away, I pr'ythee;
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Wales. A mountainous Country, with a Cave. Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ANTIAGUS.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys: This gate

Instructs you how to adore the heavens; and bows
you

To a morning's holy office: The gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet¹³ through
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good morrow to the sun—Hail, thou fair heaven!
We house 'i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gai. Hail, heaven!

Ans. Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now, for our mountain sport: Up to you hill,
Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats. Consider,

When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens, and sets off.
And you may then revolve what tales I have told
you,

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd.¹⁴ To apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit from all things we see:
And often to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded¹⁵ beetle in a safer hold
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a brabe;¹⁶

to be paid with interest on his return from Jerusalem (or, as we should now speak, travelling thither for a wager), defends it as an honest means of gaining the charges of his journey, especially when 'no means lords, and lords' sonnes, and gentlemen in our court, put out money upon a horse-race under themselves, yea, upon a journey aloote.'

10 It may be necessary to apprise the reader that the sand of an hour-glass used to measure time is meant. The figurative meanings, swifter than the flight of time.

11 A franklin is a yeoman.

12 That is 'you'd best consider.'

13 'I see neither on this side nor on that, nor beheld me; but find a fog in each of those quarters that my eye cannot pierce. The way to Milford is alone clear and open: Let us therefore instantly set forward.' By 'what ensues,' Imogen means what will be the consequence of the step I am going to take.

14 Strut, walk proudly. So in Twelfth Night, 'How he jets under his advanced plumes.' The idea of a giant was, among the readers of romances, who were almost all the readers of those times, always confounded with that of a Saracen.

15 'In any service done, the advantage rises not from the act, but from the allowance (i. e. approval) of it.'

16 i. e. scaly-winged beetle. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act III. Sc. 2. The epithet full-winged, applied to the eagle, sufficiently marks the contrast of the poet's imagery; for whilst the bird can soar beyond the reach of human eye, the insect can but just rise above the surface of the earth, and that at the close of day.

17 The old copy reads brabe; the uncommon word brabe not being familiar to the compositor. A brabe is a contemptuous or proud look, word, or gesture; quest, a brabe.

Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk:
Such gain the cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd; no life to ours.¹

Gui. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor unfedg'd,

Have never wing'd from view o' the nest; nor know not

What air's from home. Haply, this life is best,
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known: well corresponding
With your stiff age; but, unto us, it is
A cell of ignorance; travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit.²

Imo. What should we speak of,³
When we are old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing:
We are beastly; subtle as the fox, for prey;
Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat:
Our valour is, to chase what flies; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!⁴
Did you but know the city's usuries,
And felt them knowingly: the art of the court,
As hard to leave, as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery, that
The fear's as bad as falling: the toil of the war,
A pain than only seems to seek out danger
If the name of fame, and honour; which dies it the search;

And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times,
Doth ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Must court'sy at the censure:—O, boys, this story
The world may read in me: My body's mark'd
With Roman swords: and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: Then was I as a tree, Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but in one night,

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,
And left me bare to weather.⁵

Gui. Uncertain favour!
Bel. My fault being nothing, (as I have told you off.)

But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline,
I was confederate with the Romans: so,
Follow'd my banishment; and, this twenty years,
This rock, and these demones, have been my world:

Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all
The fore-end of my time.—But, up to the mountains;
This is not hunters' language:—He, that strikes
The venison first, shall be the lord o' the feast;
To him the other two shall minister;
And we will fear no poison, which attends

1 I. e. compared to ours.

2 To stride a limit is to overpass his bound.

3 'This dread of an old age unsupplied with matter for discourse and meditation, is a sentiment natural and noble. No state can be more desolate than that of him, who, when the delights of sense forsake him, has no pleasures of the mind.'—Johnson.

4 Otway seems to have taken many hints for the conversation which passes between Acasto and his sons from the scene before us.

5 Thus in Timon of Athens:—

'That numberless upon me stack, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fallen from their boughs, and left me, open, cure,
For every storm that blows.'

6 ——— nulla aconita, bibuntur
Mcilibus; tunc illa time, cum pocula sumes
Gemmata, et lato Setinum ardebit in auro.'

Juv.

7 'Shakspeare seems to intend Belarius for a good character, yet he makes him forget the injury which he

In place of greater state.⁶ I'll meet you in the valleys. [Exeunt Gui. and Anv.]

How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature!
These boys know little, they are sons to the king;
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
They think, they are mine: and, though train'd up thus meanly

For the cave, wherein they bow, their thoughts do hit
The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them,
In simple and low things, to prince it, much
Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore,
The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom
The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove!
When on my three-foot stool I sat, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out Into my story: say,—These mine enemy fell;
And thus I set my foot on his neck; even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture
That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal, (Once Arrivagus,) in as like a figure,
Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more
His own conceiving. Hark! the game is rous'd!—
O, Cymbeline! heaven, and my conscience, knows,
Thou didst unjustly banish me: whereon,
At three, and two years old, I stole these babes;⁷
Thinking to bar thee of succession, as Thou rest'st me of my lands. Euriphile, Thou wast their nurse; they look thee for their mother,

And every day do honour to her grave:⁸
Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd,
They take for natural father. The game is up.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Near Milford Haven. Enter PISANIO and IMOGENE.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse,
the place
Was near at hand: Ne'er long'd my mother so
To see me first, as I have now:—Pisanio! Man!
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind,
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh

From the inward of thee? One, but painted thus,
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond self-explication: Put thyself
Into a haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanquish my staid senses. What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with
A look untender? If it be summer news,
Smile to't before: if wintery, thou need'st
But keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand!

That drug-damn'd Italy hath out-crafted him,
And he's at some hard point.—Speak, man; thy tongue

May take off some extremity, which to read
Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Please you, read;
And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing
The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] Thy mistress, Pisanio, hath played the strumpet in my bed; the testimonies whereof lie bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surmises;

has done to the young princes, whom he has robbed of a kingdom, only to rob their father of heirs. The latter part of this soliloquy is very artificial, there being no particular reason why Belarius should now tell to him self what he could not know better by telling it.—John son.

8 I. e. to the grave of Euriphile; or to the grave of 'their mother,' as they supposed it to be. The grammatical construction requires that the poet should have written 'to thy grave;' but we have frequent instances of this change of persons, not only in Shakspeare, but in all the writings of his age.

9 The true pronunciation of Greek and Latin names was not much regarded by the writers of Shakspeare's age. The poet has, however, differed from himself, and given the true pronunciation when the name first occurs, and in one other place:—

'To his protection; call him Posthumus.'
'Struck the main-top! O, Posthumus! alas'

from proof as strong as my grief, and as certain as I expect my revenge. That part, thou, Pisanio, must eat for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life: I shall give thee opportunities at Milford Haven: she hath my letter for the purpose; Where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my sword? the paper
Hath cut her throat already.—No, 'tis slander; Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms¹ of Nile; whose breath Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,² Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave This viperous slander enters.—What cheer, madam?
Imo. False to his bed! What is it, to be false? To lie in watch there, and to think on him? To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge nature,
To break it with a fearful dream of him, And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed? Is it?

Pis. Alas, good lady!
Imo. I false? Thy conscience witnesses:—Iachimo, Thou didst accuse him of incontinency; Thou then look'dst like a villain; now, methinks, Thy favour's good enough.—Some jay of Italy, Whose mother was her painting,³ hath betray'd him:

Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion; And, for I am richer than to hang by the walls,⁴ I must be ripp'd:—to pieces with me!—O, Men's vows are women's traitors! All good seeming, By thy revolt, O, husband, shall be thought Put on for villany; not born, where't grows; But worn, a bait for ladies.

Pis. Good madam, hear me.
Imo. True honest men being heard, like false Æneas,
Were, in his time, thought false: and Sinon's weeping
Did scandal many a holy tear: took pity
From most true wretchedness: So, thou, Posthumus,
Wilt lay the leaven on all proper men:⁵ Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and perjur'd, From thy great fall.—Come, fellow, be thou honest: Do thou thy master's bidding: when thou seest him,

1 It has already been observed that worms was the general name for all the serpent kind. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act v. Sc. 2

2 i. e. persons of the highest rank.

3 Putta, in Italian, signifies both a jay and a whore. We have the word again in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—"Teach him to know turtles from jays." Some jay of Italy, whose mother was her painting, i. e. made by art; the creature not of nature, but of painting. In this sense painting may be said to be her mother. Steevens met with a similar phrase in some old play:—"A parcel of cancelled feather-caps, whose fathers were their garments."

4 That is, to be hung up as useless among the neglected contents of a wardrobe. So in Measure for Measure:—

"That have, like unaccour'd armour, hung by the wall." Clothes were not formerly, as at present, made of slight materials, were not kept in drawers, or given away as soon as lapse of time or change of fashion had impaired their value. On the contrary, they were hung up on wooden pegs, in a room appropriated to the sole purpose of receiving them; and though such cast off things as were composed of rich substances were occasionally ripp'd for domestic uses, articles of inferior quality were suffered to hang by the walls till age and moths had destroyed what pride would not permit to be worn by servants or poor relations:—

"Comitem horridulum trita donare lacerna," seems not to have been customary among our ancestors. When Queen Elizabeth died, she was found to have left

A little witness my obedience: Look!

I draw the sword myself: take it; and hit The innocent mansion of my love, my heart: Fear not: 'tis empty of all things, but grief: Thy master is not there; who was, indeed, The riches of it; Do his bidding: strike. Thou may'st be valiant in a better cause; But now thou seem'st a coward.

Pis. Hence, vile instrument!

Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Imo. Why, I must die; And if I do not by thy hand, thou art No servant of thy master's: Against self-slaughter There is a prohibition so divine, That cravens my weak hand.⁶ Come, here's my heart;

Something's afore't: Soft, soft; we'll no defence; Obedient as the scabbard.—What is here? The scriptures⁷ of the loyal Leonatus, All turn'd to heresy? Away, away, Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more Be stomachers to my heart! Thus may poor fools Believe false teachers: Though those that are betray'd

Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor Stands in worse case of woe. And thou, Posthumus, thou that didst set up My disobedience 'gainst the king my father, And make me put into contempt the suits Of princely fellows,⁸ shalt hereafter find It is no act of common passage, but A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself, To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her That now thou tir'st⁹ on, how thy memory Will then be pang'd by me.—Pity thee, despatch: The lamb entreats the butcher: Where's thy knife? Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding, When I desire it too.

Pis. O, gracious lady, Since I receiv'd command to do this business, I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed then.

Pis. I'll wake mine eyeballs blind first.¹⁰

Imo. Wherefore then

Didst undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd So many miles with a pretence? this place? Mine action, and thine own? our horses' labour? The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court, For my being absent; whereunto I never Purpose return? Why hast thou gone so far, To be unbent,¹¹ when thou hast ta'en thy stand, The elected deer before thee?

above three thousand dresses behind her. Steevens once saw one of these repositories at an ancient manster in Suffolk, which (thanks to a succession of old maids!) had been preserved with superstitious reverence for almost a century and a half.

5 "Wilt lay the leaven on all proper men."

The leaven is, in Scripture phraseology, 'the whole wickedness of our sinful nature.' See 1 Corinthians, v. 6, 7, 8. 'Thy failure, Posthumus, will lay falsehood to the charge of men without guile: make all suspected.'

6 'That makes me afraid to put an end to my own life.' Hamlet exclaims:—

"O, that the everlasting had not fix'd His canon 'gainst self-slaughter."

7 Shakespeare here means Leonatus's letters, but there is an opposition intended between scripture, in its common signification, and heresy.

8 Fellows for equals; those of the same princely rank with myself.

9 "—when thou shalt be disedg'd by her

That now thou first on."

It is probable that the first, as well as the last, of these metaphorical expressions is from falconry. A bird of prey may be said to be disedged when the keenness of its appetite is taken away by firing, or feeding, upon some object given to it for that purpose. Thus in Hamlet:—

"Op! You are keen, my lord, you are keen."

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off mine edge."

10 Blind, which is not in the old copy, was supplied by Hamner.

11 To have thy bow unbent, alluding to a hunter. So

Pis. But to win time
To close so bad employment: in the which
I have consider'd of a course; Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary; speak:
I have heard, I am a strumpet: and mine ear,
Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like;
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so, neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be,
But that my master is abus'd:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art
Hath done you both this coursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtesan.

Pis. No, on my life
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: You shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where bide? How live?
Or in my life what comfort, when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—
Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing:

That Cleten, whose love-sun hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day, night,
Are they not but in Britain? 'Tis the world's volume
Our Britain seems as of it, but not in it;
In a great pool, a swan's nest; Pr'ythee, think There's livers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford Haven
To-morrow: Now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is;¹ and but disguise
That, which, to appear itself, must not yet be,
But by self-danger; you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view:² yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus: so night, at least,
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means!
Though peril to my modesty, not death on't,
I would adventure.

In one of Shakspeare's poems in The Passionate Pilgrim, 1599:—

'When as thine eye hath chose the dame

And stail'd the deer that thou shouldst strike.

1 This line requires some word of two syllables to complete the measure. Steevens proposed to read:—

'With that harsh, noble, simple, nothing, Cleten;

That Cleten,' &c.

2 The poet may have had in his mind a passage in Livy's Euphros, which he has imitated in King Richard II.

3 To wear a dark mind is to carry a mind impenetrable to the search of others. Darkness, applied to the mind, is secrecy; applied to the fortune, in obscurity. The next lines are obscure. 'You must (says Pisanio) disguise that greatness which, to appear hereafter in its proper form, cannot yet appear without great danger to itself.'

4 Full of view appears to mean of ample prospect, affording a complete view of circumstances which it is your interest to know. Thus in Pericles, 'Full of face' appears to signify 'amply beautiful'; and Duncan assures Banquo that he will labour to make him 'full of growing,' i. e. of 'ample growth.'

5 So in King Henry IV. Part I

'A vessel hath not such a deal of spleen

As you are toss'd with.'

The character of the vessel is not mentioned by naturalists. Vessels were formerly, it appears, kept in

Pis. Well, then, here's the point:

You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear and niceness,
(The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self,) into a waggish courage;
Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the weasel:¹ say, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it, (but, O, the harder heart!
Alack no remedy!) to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan:² and forget
Your labourous and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief:
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one,
Fore-thinking this, I have already fit
(Tis in my cloak-bag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them: Would you, in their serving,
And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him
Wherein you are happy, which you'll make him

know,
If that his head have ear in music,) doubtless,
With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable,
And, doubting that, most holy. Your means abroad
You have me,³ rich; and I will never fail
Beginning, nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with.⁴ Pr'ythee, away:
There's more to be consider'd; but we'll even!⁵
All that good time will give us: This attempt
I am soldier to,⁶ and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pr'ythee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short farewell.
Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the court. My noble mistress,
Here is a box; I had it from the queen
What's in't is precious; if you are sick at sea,
Or stomach-qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.—To some shade.
And fit you to your manhood:—May the gods
Direct you to the best!

Imo. Amen: I thank thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.— Enter CYMBELINE, Queen, CLOTEN, LUCIUS, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.
My emperor hath wrote; I must from hence;
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

houses instead of cats, for the purpose of killing vermin. Phædrus notices this their feline office in the first and fourth fables of his fourth book. The poet, no doubt, speaks from observation; while a youth he would have frequent opportunities to ascertain their disposition. Perhaps this note requires the apology which Steevens has affixed to it:—'Erivola hæc fortassis culpam et nimis levis esse videatur sed curiositas nihil recusat.'—Vopiscus in Vita Aureliani, c. 1.

6 Thus in Othello:—

'The bawdy wind that kisses all it meets.'

So in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. iii. 'And beautiful might have been if they had not suffered greedy Phæbus over often and hard to kiss them.'

7 I. e. wherein you are accomplished.

8 'As for your subsistence abroad, you may rely on me.'

9 Steevens has a note on this passage no less disgusting than absurd, making the pure Imogen allude to the spare regimen prescribed in some diseases. The interpretation was at once gross and erroneous. When Iago talks of dieting his revenge, he certainly does not mean putting it on a spare diet. This, and a note on a former passage of this play by Mr. Whalley, which could only have been the offspring of impure imaginations, were justly stigmatized and degraded by the late Mr. Boswell, at the suggestion of Mr. Douce.

10 We'll make our work even with our time; we'll do what time will allow.

11 I. e. equal to, or have ability for it.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke : and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unkinglike.

Lac. So, sir, I desire of you
A conduct over land, to Milford Haven.—
Madam, all joy befall your grace, and you !¹

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office :
The due of honour in no point omit :—
So, farewell, noble Lucius.

Lac. Your hand, my lord.
Clo. Receive it friendly : but from this time forth
I wear it as your enemy.

Lac. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner ; Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my
lord,

Till he have cross'd the Severn.—Happiness !

[Exeunt Lucius, and Lords.
Queen. He goes hence frowning : but it honours us,
That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better ;
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor
How it goes here. It fits us, therefore, ripe,ly,
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness :
The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves
His war for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business ;
But must be lock'd to speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus,
Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter ? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day : She looks un-like
A thing more made of malice, than of duty :
We have noted it.—Call her before us ; for
We have been too slight in sufferance.

[Exit an Attendant.
Queen. Royal sir,

Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd
Hath her life been ; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis time must do. 'Beseech your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her : she's a lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter an Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir ? How Can her contempt be answer'd ?

Atten. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd ; and there's no answer
That will be given to loud'st of noise we make.

Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close ;
Whereto constrain'd by her infirmity,
She should that duty leave unpaid to you,
Which daily she was bound to proffer : this
She wish'd me to make known ; but our great court
Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her doors lock'd ?
Not seen of late ? Grant, heavens, that which I
Fear² prove false !

[Exit.
Queen. Son, I say, follow the king.

Clo. That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant,
I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after.—
[Exit CLOTEN.

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus !—
He hath a drug of mine : I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that ; for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone ? Haply, despair hath seized her ;

Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus : Gone she is
To death, or to dishonour ; and my end
Can make good use of either : She being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter CLOTEN.

How now, my son ?

Clo. 'Tis certain, she is fled ;
Go in, and cheer the king ; he rages ; none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better ; May
This night forestall him of the coming day !³

[Exit QUEEN.
Clo. I love and hate her ; for she's fair and royal ;
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady, ladies, woman ;⁴ from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outells them all : I love her therefore ; But,
Disdaining me, and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus, slanders so her judgment,
That what's else rare, is chok'd ; and, in that point,
I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when fools

Enter PISANIO.

Shall—Who is here ? What ! are you packing, sirrah ?

Come hither : Ah, you precious pander ! Villain,
Where is thy lady ? Is a word ; or else
Thou art straightway with the fowls.

Pis. O, good my lord !

Clo. Where is thy lady ? or, by Jupiter
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus ?
From whose so many weights of baseness cannot
A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord,
How can she be with him ? When was she mis'd ?
He is in Rome.

Clo. Where is she, sir ? Come nearer ;
No further halting : satisfy me home,
What is become of her ?

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord !

Clo. All-worthy villain !

Discover where thy mistress is, at once,
At the next word.—No more of worthy lord,— Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, sir,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight. [Presenting a Letter.

Clo. Let's see't :—I will pursue her
Even to Augustus' throne.

Pis. Or this, or perish.⁵
She's far enough ; and what he learns by this, } Aside.
May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. Humph !
Pis. I'll write to my lord she's dead. O, Imogen, Safe may'st thou wander, safe return again !

[Aside.
Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true ?

Pis. Sir, as I think.
Clo. It is Posthumus' hand ; I know't.—Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a villain, but do me true service ; undergo those employments, wherein I should have cause to use thee, with a serious industry,—that is, what villainy so'er I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly,—I would think thee an honest man : thou should'st neither want my means for thy relief, nor my voice for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good lord.
Clo. Wilt thou serve me ? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune

¹ We should apparently read 'His grace and you,' or 'your grace and yours.'

² Fear must be pronounced as a dissyllable to complete the measure.

³ i. e. may his grief this night prevent him from ever seeing another day, by anticipated and premature destruction. Thus in Milton's Comus :—

'Perhaps forestalling night prevented them.'

⁴ Than any lady, than all ladies, than all women-kind. There is a similar passage in All's Well that Ends Well, Act II. Sc. 3 :—

'To any count ; so all counts ; to what is man.'
⁵ By these words it is probable Pisanio means 'I must either practice this deceit upon Cloten or perish by his fury.' Dr. Johnson thought the words should be even to Cloten.

of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not in the course of gratitude but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Cla. Give me thy hand, here's my purse. Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Cla. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither; let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord.

[Exit.]

Cla. Meet thee at Milford Haven:—I forgot to ask him one thing; I'll remember't anon:—Even there, thou villain, Posthumus, will I kill thee.—I would these garments were come. She said upon a time, (the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart,) that she held the very garment of Posthumus as more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back, will I ravish her: First kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust hath dined, (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,) to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter PISANIO, with the Clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Cla. How long is't since she went to Milford Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Cla. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee: the third is, that thou shalt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but dutious, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—My revenge is now at Milford: 'Would, I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true.

[Exit.]

Pis. Thou bidd'st me to my loss: for, true to thee, Were to prove false, which I will never be, To him that is most true.—To Milford go, And find not her whom thou pursu'st. Flow, flow, Thou heavenly blessings, on her! This fool's speed Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his meed!

[Exit.]

SCENE VI. Before the Cave of Belarius. Enter IMMOGEN, in Boy's Clothes.

Imo. I see, a man's life is a tedious one: I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick, But that my resolution helps me.—Milford, When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd thee, Thou wast within a ken: O, Jove! I think, Foundations fly the wretched:¹ such, I mean, Where they should be reliev'd.² Two beggars told me,

I could not miss my way: Will poor folks lie, That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis A punishment, or trial? Yes; no wonder, When rich ones scarce tell true: To lapse in fulness Is sorer,³ than to lie for need; and falsehood

Is worse in kings, than beggars.—My dear lord! Thou art one o' the false ones: Now I think on thee My hunger's gone; but even before, I was At point to sink for food.—But what is this? Here is a path to it: 'Tis some savage hold: I were best not call; I dare not call; yet famine, Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant. Plenty, and peace, breeds cowards; hardness ever Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's here? If any thing that's civil,⁴ speak; if savage, Take, or lend.—Ho!—No answer? then I'll enter. Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on't. Such a foe, good heavens! [She goes into the Cave.]

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVERGUS.

Bel. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman,⁵ and Are master of the feast: Cadwal, and I, Will play the cook and servant; 'tis our match. The sweat of industry would dry, and die, But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs Will make what's homely, savoury: Weariness Can snore upon the flint, when restle' sloth Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be here, Poor house, that keep'st thyself!

Gui.

I am thoroughly weary.

Arv. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i' the cave; we'll browse on that,

Whilst what we have kill'd be cook'd.

Bel. Stay; come not in: [Looking in.]

But that it eats our victuals, I should think

Here were a fairy.

Gui.

What's the matter, sir?

Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not, An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness No older than a boy!

Enter IMMOGEN.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not: Before I enter'd here, I call'd: and thought To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took: Good troth,

I have stolen nought; nor would not, though I had found

Gold strew'd i' the floor.⁶ Here's money for my meat:

I would have left it on the board, so soon

As I had made my meal; and parted With prayers for the provider.

Gui.

Money, youth?

Arv. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt

As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those Who worship dirty gods.

Imo.

I see, you are angry:

Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should

Have died, had I not made it.

Bel.

Whither bound?

Imo. To Milford Haven.

Bel.

What is your name?

Imo. Fidele, sir: I have a kinsman, who Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford; To whom being going, almost spent with hunger, I am fallen i' this offence.

Bel.

Pr'ythee, fair youth,

Think us no churls; nor measure our good minds By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!

¹ Pisanio, notwithstanding his master's letter commanding the murder of Imogen, considers him as true, supposing, as he has already said to her, that Posthumus was abused by some villain equally an enemy to them both.

² Thus in the fifth Æneid—

'Italem sequimur fugientem.'

³ I. e. a greater or heavier crime.

⁴ Civil is here civilised, as opposed to savage, wild, rude, or uncivilized. 'If any one dwell here.'

⁵ A woodman in its common acceptation, as here, signifies a hunter. So in The Rape of Lucrece—

'He is no woodman that doth bend his bow Against a poor unseasonable doe.'

⁶ I. e. our compact.

⁷ Restie, which Steevens unwarrantably changed to restive, signifies here dull, heavy, as it is explained in Bullokar's Expensor, 1616. So Milton uses it in his Eloquence, sec. 24. 'The master is too resty, or too rich, to say his own prayers, or to bless his own table.' What between Malone's 'resty, rank, mouldy,' and Steevens's 'restive, stubborn, refractory,' the reader is misled and the passage left unexplained; or what is worse, explained erroneously in all the variorum editions.

⁸ Hammer altered this to 'e' the floor,' but unnecessarily—in was frequently used for on in Shakespeare's time, as in the Lord's Prayer, 'Thy will be done on earth.'

⁹ In for into, as in Othello—

'Fallen in the practice of a cursed slave'

'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer
Ere you depart; and thanks, to stay and eat it.—
Boys, bid him welcome.

Gwi. Were you a woman, youth,
I should woo hard, but be your groom.—In honesty,
I bid for you, as I'd buy.

Arv. I'll make't my comfort,
He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—
And such a welcome as I'd give to him,
After long absence, such is yours:—Most welcome!
Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Imo. 'Mongst friends,
If brothers!—'Would, it had been so,
that they
Had been my father's sons! then had my } Aside.
prize!
Been less; and so more equal ballasting
To thee, Posthumus.

Bel. He wrings^a at some distress.
Gwi. 'Would, I could free't!

Arv. Or I; whate'er it be,
What pain it cost, what danger! Gods!

Bel. Hark, boys.
[Whispering.]

Imo. Great men,
That had a court no bigger than this cave,
That did attend themselves, and had the virtue Which their own conscience seal'd them, (laying by That nothing gift of differing^b multitudes,)
Could not out-peer these twain. Pardon me, gods!
I'd change my sex to be companion with them,
Since Leonatus false.^c

Bel. It shall be so:
Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair yet, come in:
Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have sup'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story,
So far as thou wilt speak it.

Gwi. Pray draw near.
Arv. The night to the owl, the morn to the lark, less welcome.

Imo. Thanks, sir.
Arv. I pray, draw near. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Rome. Enter Two Senators and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenor of the emperor's writ;
That since the common men are now in action
'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians;
And that the legions now in Gallia
Full weak to undertake our wars against
The fallen off Britons; that we do incite
The gentry to this business: He creates
Lucius pro-consul: and to you, the tribunes,
For this immediate levy, he commands
His absolute commission.^d Long live Cæsar!

Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?

2 Sen. Ay.

Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?

1 Sen. With those legions
Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy
Must be suppliant: The words of your commission
Will tie you to the numbers, and the time
Of their despatch.

Tri. We will discharge our duty.
[Exeunt.]

1 I have elsewhere observed that prize, prise, and price were confounded, or used indiscriminately by our ancestors. Indeed it is not now uncommon at this day, as Malone observes, to hear persons above the vulgar confound the words, and talk of high-pris'd and low-pris'd goods. Prize here is evidently used for value, estimation. The reader who wishes to see how the words were formerly confounded, may consult Baret's Alvearte, in v. price.

2 To wring is to writhe. So in Much Ado about Nothing, Act v. Sc. 1:—

'To those that wring under the load of sorrow.'

3 Differing multitudes are varying or wavering multitudes. So in the Induction to the Second Part of King Henry VI.—

'The still discordant wavering multitude.'

4 Malone says, 'As Shakespeare has used in other places Menelaus' text, and thy mistress' ear for 'Mene-lauses text,' and 'thy mistress's ear': it is probable

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The Forest, near the Cave. Enter CLOTEN.

Cl. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather, (saving reverence of the word,) for^a 'tis said, a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself, (for it is not vain-glory for a man and his glass to confer; in his own chamber, I mean,) the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperseverant thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off; thy mistress enforced; thy garments cut to pieces before thy face:^b and all this done, spurn her home to her father: who may, haply, be a little angry for my so rough usage: but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe: Out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meeting-place: and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Before the Cave. Enter, from the Cave, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, and IMOGEN.

Bel. You are not well: [To IMOGEN.] remain here in the cave:

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. Brother, stay here:
[To IMOGEN.]

Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be;
But clay and clay differs in dignity,
Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gwi. Go you to hunting. I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not; yet I am not well:
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seem to die, ere sick: So please you leave me,
Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom
Is breach of all.^c I am ill; but your being by me
Cannot amend me: Society is no comfort
To one not sociable: I'm not very sick,
Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here:
I'll rob none but myself; and let me die,
Stealing so poorly.

Gwi. I love thee; I have spoke it:
How much the quantity, the weight as much,
As I do love my father.

Bel. What? how? how?

Arv. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me that he used 'since Leonatus' false' for 'since Leonatus is false.' Steevens doubts this, and says that the poet may have written 'Since Leonate is false,' as he calls Enobarbus, Enobarbe; and Prospero, Prosper, in other places.

6 He commands the commission to be given you. So we say, I ordered the materials to the workmen.
6 i. e. cause.

7 'In single combat.' So in King Henry IV. Part I. Act I. Sc. 3:—

'In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.'

An opposite, in the language of Shakespeare's age, was the common phrase for an antagonist.

Imperseverant probably means no more than perseverant, like imboomed, impassioned, immasked.

8 Warburton thought we should read, 'before her face.' Malone says, that Shakespeare may have intentionally given this absurd and brutal language to Cloten. The Clown in The Winter's Tale says, 'If thou'lt see a thing to talk of after thou art dead.'

9 'Keep your daily course uninterrupted; if the stated plan of life is once broken, nothing follows but confusion.'—Johnson.

In my good brother's fault: I know not why I love this youth; and I have heard you say, Love's reason's without reason; the bier at door, And a demand who is't shall die, I'd say, My father, not this youth.

Bel. O, noble strain! [Aside.] O, worthiness of nature! breed of greatness! Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base: Nature hath meal, and bran; contempt, and grace. I am not their father: yet who this should be, Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.— 'Tis the ninth hour o' the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arv. You health.—So please you, sir.

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures. Gods, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say, all's savage, but at court: Experience, O, thou disprove'st report! The imperious¹ seas breed monsters; for the diash, Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish. I am sick still; heart-sick:—Pisanio, I'll now taste of thy drug.

Gui. I could not stir him; He said, he was gentle,² but unfortunate; Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest.

Arv. Thus did he answer me: yet said, hereafter I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field:— We'll leave you for this time; go in, and rest.

Arv. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick,

For you must be our housewife.

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Bel. And shalt be ever.

[Exit Imogen.] This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears, he hath had Good ancestors.

Arv. How angel-like he sings!

Gui. But his neat cookery! He cut our roots in characters;

And sauc'd our broths, as Juno had been sick, And he her dieter.

Arv. Nobly he yokes A smiling with a sigh; as if the sigh Was that it was, for not being such a smile; The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly From so divine a temple, to commix With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note, That grief and patience, rooted in him both, Mingle their spurs³ together.

Arv. Grow, patience! And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine His perishing root, with the increasing vine!⁴

Bel. It is great morning.⁵ Come; away.—Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates; that villain Hath mock'd me: I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates! Means he not us? I partly know him; 'tis Cloten, the son of the queen. I fear some ambush. I saw him not these many years, and yet I know 'tis he:—We are held as outlaws:—Hence.

¹ Here again Malone asserts that 'imperious' was used by Shakespeare for 'imperial.' This is absurd enough when we look at the context: what has imperial to do with seas? Imperious has here its usual meaning of proud, haughty. See Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 5.

² 'I could not move him to tell his story.' Gentle is of a gentle race or rank, well born.

³ Spurs are the longest and largest leading roots of trees. We have the word again in The Tempest:—

'—The strong base'd promontory Have I made shake, and by the spurs Pluck'd up the pine and cedar.'

⁴ How much difficulty has been made to appear in this simple figurative passage! which to me appears sufficiently intelligible without a note. 'Let patience grow, and let the stinking elder, grief, untwine his

Gui. He is but one: You and my brother search What companies are near: pray you away; Let me alone with him.

[Exit BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.]

Clo. Soft! What are you That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers? I have heard of such. What slave art thou?

Gui. A thing More slavish did I ne'er, than answering A slave, without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber,

A law-breaker, a villain: Yield thee, thief. Gui. To who? to thee? What art thou? Have not I

An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

Thy words, I grant, are bigger; for I wear not My dagger in my mouth.⁶ Sa', what thou art; Why I should yield to thee?

Clo. Thou villain base, Know'st me not by my clothes?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal, Who is thy grandfather; he made those clothes, Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clo. Thou precious varlet, My tailor made them not.

Gui. Her ce, then, and thank The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool; I am loath to beat thee.

Clo. Thou injurious thief,

Hear but my name, and tremble.

Gui. What's thy name?

Clo. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name, I cannot tremble at it; were't toad, or adder, spider, 'Twould move me sooner.

Clo. To thy further fear, Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know I'm son to the queen.

Gui. I'm sor'y for't; not seeming So worthy as thy birth.

Clo. Art not afraid?

Gui. Those that I reverence, those I fear; the wise:

At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death:

When I have slain thee with my proper hand, I'll follow those that even now fled hence, And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads.⁷ Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exit, fighting.]

Enter BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. No company's abroad.

Arv. None in the world: You did mistake him, sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him, But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour Which then he wore; the smatches in his voice, And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute, 'Twas very Cloten.

Arv. In this place we left them: I wish my brother make good time with him, You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up, I mean, to man, he had not apprehension Of roaring terrors; for defect of judgment Is oft the cure⁸ of fear: But see, thy brother.

perishing root from those of the increasing vine, patience.' I have already observed, that with, from, and by, are almost always convertible words.

⁵ The same phrase occurs in Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 2. It is a Gallicism:—'Il est grand matin.' 6 I. e. than answering that abusive word slave.

⁷ So in Solymann and Perseda, 1699:—

'I fight not with my tongue: this is my oratrix'

Macduff says to Macbeth:—

'—I have no words;

My voice is in my sword.'

⁸ See a note on a similar passage in a former scene, p. 324, Act iii. Sc. 4.

⁹ The old copy reads, 'Is oft the cause of fear;' but this cannot be right: Belarius is assigning a reason for Cloten's fool-hardy desperation, not accounting for his cowardice. The emendation adopted is Hamner's

Re-enter GUIDERIUS, with CLOTEN'S Head.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool: an empty purse,
There was no money in't: not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had none:
Yet, I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head, as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gui. I am perfect, 'what': cut off one Cloten's head;

Son to the queen, after his own report;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer; and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in,¹ Displace our heads, where, (thank the gods!) they grow,

And set them on Lud's town.

Bel. We are all undone.

Gui. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose,
But that he swore to take, our lives? The law
Protects not us: Then why should we be tender
To let an arrogant piece of flesh threat us;
Play judge, and executioner, all himself;
For² we do fear the law? What company
Discover you abroad?

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on, but, in all safe reason, [mour-
He must have some attendants. Though his hu-
Was nothing but mutation; ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd,
To bring him here alone: Although, perhaps,
It may be heard at court, that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head: the which he hearing,

(As it is like him,) might break out, and swear
He'd fetch us in; yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we fear,
If we do fear this body hath a tail
More perilous than the head.

Ar. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresee it: howsoe'er,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth.³

Gui. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en
His head from him: I'll throw't into the creek
Behind our rock; and let it to the sea,
And tell the fishes, he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.

Bel. I fear, 'twill be reveng'd:
'Would, Polydore, thou had'st not done't! though valour

Becomes thee well enough.

Ar. 'Would, I had done't,
So the revenge alone pursued me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly; but envy much,
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would,
revenges, [through,
That possible strength might meet,⁴ would seek us
And put us to our answer.

1 'I am well informed what.'

2 I.e. conquer, subdue us.

3 For again in the sense of cause. See note on Act
iv. Sc. 1.

4 The old copy reads, 'his honour.' The emendation is Theobald's. Malone has shown that the words honour and honour have been erroneously printed for each other in other passages of the old editions.

5 'Fidele's sickness made my walk forth from the cave tedious.' So in King Richard III. :—
'—our crosses on the way
Have made it tedious,' &c.

6 'Such pursuit of vengeance as fell within any possibility of opposition.'

7 'To restore Fidele to the bloom of health, to recall the colour into his cheeks, I would let the blood of a whole party, or any number of such fellows as Cloten.' A phrase is a common phrase for a great number.

8 Heaven give you joy, sweet master Palatine.

And to you, sir, a whole parish of children.

The Wife, by Deaneau, p. 222.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:—

We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee, to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Ar. Poor sick Fidele!

I'll willingly to him: To gain his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens blood,⁵
And praise myself for charity. [Exit.

Bel. O, thou goddess,
Thou divine Nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs, blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head: and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchas'd, as the rud'st wind,
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd: honour untaught;
Civility not seen from other; valour,
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sow'd! Yet still it's strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends;
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter GUIDERIUS.

Gui. Where's my brother?
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
In embassy to his mother; his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn music.

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion! Hark!

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.
Gui. What does he mean? since death of my dear'st mother

It did not speak before. All solemn things Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing, and lamenting toys,⁶
Is jollity for apes, and grief for boys;
Is Cadwal mad?

Re-enter ARVIRAGUS, bearing IMOGÈS, as dead, in his arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
Of what we blame him for!

Ar. The bird is dead,
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gui. O, sweetest, fairest lily!
My brother wears thee not the one half so well.
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? And
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish crare⁷
Might easiest harbour in?—Thou blessed thing!
Jove knows what man thou might'st have made!
but I,⁸

Thou diedst, a most rare boy, of melancholy!—
How found you him?

Ar. Start,⁹ as you see:

8 Toys are trifles.

9 A crare was a small vessel of burthen, sometimes spelled crayer, crayer, and even craye. The old copy reads, erroneously, '—thy sluggish care.' The emendation was suggested by Symphon in a note on The Captain of Beaumont and Fletcher:—
'—let him venture

In some decay'd crare of his own.
10 We should most probably read, 'but as.' It is always printed as: in the first folio, and other books of the time. Hence, perhaps, I, which was used for the affirmative particle ay, crept into the text. 'Heaven knows (says Belarius) what a man thou wouldst have been hadst thou lived; but, alas! thou did'st of melancholy, while yet only a most accomplished boy.'

11 Start means entirely cold and stiff.

'And many a nobleman lies start—
Under the hooks of vaulting enemies.'

King Henry IV Part I

Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek
Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arv. O' the floor;
His arms thus leagu'd: I thought, he slept: and put

My clouted brogues¹ from off my feet, whose rudeness

Answer'd my steps too lead.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps:²
If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.³

Arv. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: Thou shalt not lack
The flower, that's like thy face, pale primrose; nor
The azur'd harebell, like thy veins; no, nor
The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock⁴ would,
With charitable bill (O, bill, sore-aching
Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!) bring thee all this;
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are none,
To winter-ground⁵ thy corpse.

Gui. Pr'ythee, have done;
And do not play in wench-like words with that
Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protect with admiration what
Is now due debt.—To the grave.

Arv. Say, where shall's lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphile, our mother.

Arv. Be't so:
And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,
As once our mother; use like note, and words,
Save that Euriphile must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal,
I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee:
For notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Than priests and flutes that lie.

Arv. We'll speak it then.
'Bd. Great grief, I see, medicine the less:⁶ for Cloten

² 'I cannot forbear (says Steevens) to introduce a passage somewhat like this from Webster's White Devil, or Victoria Coromona [1612], on account of its singular beauty:—

'Oh, thou soft natural death! thou art joint twin
To sweetest slumber! no rough-bearded comet
Stares on thy mild departure: the dull owl
Beats not against thy casement: the hoarse wolf
Scans not thy carrion:—pity winds thy corpse,
While horror waits on princes!'

³ Steevens imputes great violence to this change of person, and would read, 'come to him;' but there is no impropriety in Guiderius's sudden address to the body itself. It might, indeed, be ascribed to our author's careless manner, of which an instance like the present occurs at the beginning of the next act, where Posthumus says,

'—you married ones,
If each of you would take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves.'
Douce.

⁴ The ruddock is the red-breast.

⁵ To winter-ground appears to mean to dress or decorate thy corpse with 'furred moss,' for a winter covering, when there are no flowers to strew it with. In Cornucopia, or Divers Secrets, &c. by Thomas Johnson, 4to. 1686, sig. E. it is said, 'The rotten red-breast, if he finds a man or woman dead, will cover all his face with moss; and some think that if the body should remain unburied that he would cover the whole body also.' The reader will remember the pathetic old ballad of the Children in the Wood.

⁶ So in a former passage of this play:
Subdues all pangs and fears.'

And in King Lear:—

'—Where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce fix'd.'

Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys:
And, though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid⁷ for that: Though mean and mighty, resting

Together, have one dust: yet reverence,⁸
(That angel of the world,) doth make distinction Of place 'twixt high and low. Our foe was princely;

And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui. Pray you, fetch him hither.

Therites' body is as good as Ajax,

When neither are alive.

Arv. If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

[Exit BALARIUS.]

Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east;

My father hath a reason for't.

Arv. 'Tis true.

Gui. Come on, then, and remove him.

Arv. So,—begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,⁹
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and to'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arv. Fear no more the frown o' the great,
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to clothe, and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.¹⁰

Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Arv. Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Gui. Fear not slander, censure rash;
Arv. Thou hast finish'd joy and woean:
Both. All lovers young, all lovers must Consign¹¹ to thee, and come to dust.

Gui. No sorceries¹² harm thee!

Arv. Nor no witchcraft charm thee!

Gui. Ghost unlaid forbear thee!

Arv. Nothing ill come near thee!

Both. Quiet consummation¹³ have;
And renowned be thy grave!¹⁴

⁷ i. e. punished. Falstaff, after having been beaten, when in the dress of an old woman, says, 'I pay'd nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.'

⁸ Reverence, or due regard to subordination, is the power that keeps peace and order in the world.

⁹ This is the topic of consolation that nature dictates to all men on these occasions.

¹¹ To 'consign to thee' is to 'seal the same contract with thee'; i. e. add their names to thine upon the register of death. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'—seal
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.

¹² It has already been observed that sorceries anciently signified a person who could raise spirits, not one who lays them.

¹³ Consummation is used in the same sense in King Edward III. 1566:—

'My soul will yield this castle of my flesh,
This mingled tribute, with all willingness.
To darkness, consummation, dust, and worms.'

Milton, in his Epitaph on the Marchioness of Winchester, is indebted to the passage before us:—

'Gentle lady, may thy grave
Peace and quiet ever have.'

¹⁴ 'For the obsequies of Fidele (says Dr. Johnson) a song was written by my unhappy friend, Mr. William Collins of Chichester, a man of uncommon learning and abilities. I shall give it a place at the end, in honour of his memory.'

Re-enter BELARUS, with the Body of CLOTEN.

Clot. We have done our obsequies: Come lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers, but about midnight, more:

The herbs, that have on them cold dew o' the night,

Are strevings fitt'at graves.—Upon their faces: 'You were as flowers, now wither'd; even so

These herb'lets shall, which we upon you strow.—Come on, away: apart upon our knees.

The ground, that gave them first, has them again; Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exeunt BEL. GUL. and ARV.]
Imo. [Awaking.] Yes, sir, to Milford Haven;

Which is the way?—

I thank you.—By you burh?—Pray, how far thence? 'Ods pittikins!—Can it be six miles yet?

I have gone all night:—Faith, I'll lay down and sleep.

But, soft! my bedfellow:—O, gods and goddesses!

[Seeing the Body.]
These flowers are like the pleasures of the world; This bloody man, the car on't!—I hop, I dream; For, so, I thought I was a cave-keeper; And cook to honest creatures: But 'tis not so; 'Twas but a boat of nothing, shot at nothing, Which the brain makes of fumes. Our very eyes Are sometimes like our judgments, blind. Good faith,

I tremble still with fear: 'Ere if there be Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it! The dream's here still; even when I wake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt. A headless man!—The garments of Posthumus! I know the shape of his leg; 'tis his hand; His foot Mercurial; his Martial thigh:

The brawns of Hercules: but his Jove's face— Murder in heaven?—How?—'Tis gone.—Pisano, All curses madd'd Hecuba gave the Greeks, And mine to boot, be darted on thee! Thou, Conspir'd with that irregular⁴ devil, Cloten, Hast here cut off my lord.—To write, and read, Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisano Hath with his forged letters, damn'd Pisano— From this most bravest vessel of the world Struck the main-top!—O, Posthumus! alas, Where is thy head? where's that? Ah me! where's that?

Pisano might have kill'd thee at the heart, And left this head on.—How should this be? Pisano?

'Tis he, and Cloten: malice and lucre in them Have laid this woe here. O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant! The drug he gave me, which, he said, was precious And cordial to me, have I not found it?

Murderous to the senses? That confirms it home: This is Pisano's deed, and Cloten's! O!— Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,

1 Malone observes, that 'Shakespeare did not recollect when he wrote these words, that there was but one face on which the flowers could be strewed.' It is one of the poet's lapses of thought, and will countenance the passage remarked upon in Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 This diminutive adjunction is derived from God's pity, by the addition of kin. In this manner we have also 'Ods bodikins.'

3 'Jovial face' here signifies such a face as belongs to Jove. The epithet is frequently so used in the old dramatic writers; particularly Heywood:—

'—Alcides here will stand
To plague you all with his high Jovial hand.'

4 Irregular must mean lawless, licentious, out of rule. The word has not hitherto been met with elsewhere: but in Reynolds's God's Revenge against Adultery, ed. 1671, p. 121, we have 'irregulated lust.'

5 This is another of the poet's lapses, unless we attribute the error to the old printers, and read, 'thy head on.' We must understand by 'this head,' the head of Posthumus; the head that did belong to this body.

6 i. e. 'tis a ready, apposite conclusion.

7 Shakespeare appears to have meant brother to the

That we the horridor may seem to those Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!

Enter LUCIUS, a Captain, and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them: the legions garrison'd in Gallia,
After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending
You here at Milford Haven, with your ships:
They are here in readiness.

Luc. But what from Rome?
Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners,
And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits,
That promise noble service; and they come
Under the conduct of bold Iachimo, Sienna's brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.

Luc. This forwardness
Makes our hopes fair. Command, our present numbers

No muster'd; bid the captains look to't.—Now, sir,
What have you dream'd, of late, of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me vision:

(I fast,⁸ and pray'd, for their intelligence,) Thus:—
I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the ep'ny⁹ south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends
Unless my sins abuse my divination,
Success to the Roman host.

Luc. Dream often so,
And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here,
Without his top? The trunk speaks, that sometimes
It was a worthy building.—How! a page!—
Or a lord, or sleeping on him? But dead, rather:
For nature doth abhor to make his bed
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—
Let's see the boy's face.

Cap. He is alive, my lord.
Luc. He'll then instruct us of this body.—Young
one,

Inform us of thy fortunes: for it seems
They crave to be demand'd: Who is this,
Thou mak'st thy bloody pillow? Or who was he,
That, otherwise than noble nature did,¹¹
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy int'rest
In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?
What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing: or, if not,
Nothing to be were better. This was my master,
A very valiant Briton, and a good,
That here by mountains lies slain:—Alas!
There are no more such masters: I may wander
From east to occident, cry out for service,
Try many, and all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc. 'Luck, good youth!
Thou mov'st no less with thy complaining than Thy master in bleeding: Say his name, good friend.

Imo. Richard du Chauncy.¹² If I do lie, and do prince of Sienna. He was not aware that Sienna was a republic, or possibly did not know it.

8 It was no common dream, and sent from the very gods, or the gods themselves.

9 Fast for fasted, as we have in another place of this play lift for lifted. In King John we have least for heated, vraft for wasted, &c. Similar phraseology will be found in the Bible, Mark, i. 31; John, xiii. 18; Exodus, xii. 8, &c.

10 Milton has availed himself of this epithet in Comus:—

'—Thus I hurl

'My dazzling spells into the ep'ny air.'

11 Who has altered this picture, so as to make another wise than nature did it? Olivia, speaking of her own beauty as of a picture, asks Viola if 'it is not well done?'

12 Shakespeare was indebted for his modern names (which sometimes are mixed with ancient ones), as well as for his anachronisms, to the fashionable novels of his time. Steevens cites some amusing instances from a Petite Palace of Petite his Pleasure, 1576. But the absurdity was not confined to novels: the drama would afford numerous examples.

No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope

[Aside.]

They'll pardon it. Say you, sir?

Luc.

Thy name?

Imo.

Fidole, sir.

Luc. Thou dost approve thyself the very same: Thy name well fits thy faith; thy faith, thy name. Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say, Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure, No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters, Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner Than thine own worth prefer thee: Go with me.

Imo. I'll follow, sir. But first, an't please the gods, I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep As these poor pickaxes¹ can dig; and when With wild wood-leaves and weeds I have strew'd his grave,

And on it said a century of prayers,

Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep, and sigh;

And, leaving so his service, follow you,

So please you entertain me.

Luc.

Ay, good youth;

And rather father thee, than master thee.—

My friends,

The boy hath taught us many duties: Let us

Find out the prettiest daisied plot we can,

And make him with our pikes and partizans

A grave: Come, arm him.—Boy, he is prefer'd

By thee to us; and he shall be interr'd,

As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:

Some falls are means the happier to arise.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in Cymbeline's Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, LORDS, and PISANIO.

Cym. Again; and bring me word, how 'tis with her.

A fever with the absence of her son:
A madness, of which her life's in danger:—
Heavens,

How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone: my queen
Upon a desperate bed; and in a time
When fearful wars point at me, her son gone,
So needful for this present: It strikes me, past
The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Pis.

Sir, my life is yours,

I humbly set it at your will: But, for my mistress,
I nothing know where she remains, why gone,
Nor when she purposes return. 'Beseech your highness,

Hold me your loyal servant.

1 Lord.

Good my liege,

The day that she was missing, he was here:

I dare be bound he's true, and shall perform

All parts of his subjection loyally.

For Cloten,—

There wants no diligence in seeking him,

And will,² no doubt, be found.

² That is 'take him up in your arms.' So in Fletcher's Two Noble Kinsmen:—

'—Arm your prize,

I know you will not lose her.'

The prize was Emilia.

³ Perhaps we should read, 'he'll no doubt be found.' But this omission of the personal pronoun was by no means uncommon in Shakespeare's age. There are several other instances in these plays, especially in King Henry VIII.: take one example:—

'—which if granted,

As he made semblance of his duty, would

Have put his knife into him.'

See Lear, Act ii. S. 4.

⁴ 'My suspicion is yet undetermined; If I do not condemn you, I likewise have not acquitted you.' We now say, the cause is depending.

⁵ I. e. confounded by a variety of business.

⁶ 'Your forces are able to face such an army as we fear the enemy will bring against us.'

⁷ Sir Thomas Hanmer reads, 'Pis. had no letter.'

Cym. The time's troublesome:

We'll ship you for a season; but our jealousy

[To PISANIO.]

Does yet depend.⁴

1 Lord.

So please your majesty,

The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,

Are landed on your coast; with a supply

Of Roman gentlemen, by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son, and queen!

I am amaz'd with matter.⁵

1 Lord.

Good my liege,

Your preparation can affront no less

Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready:

The want is, but to put those powers in motion,
That long to move.

Cym.

I thank you: Let's withdraw;

And meet the time, as it seeks us. We fear not

What can from Italy annoy us; but

We grieve at chances here.—Away. [Exit.]

Pis.

I heard no letter⁷ from my master, since

I wrote him, Imogen was slain: 'Tis strange:

Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise

To yield me often tidings; Neither know I

What is betid to Cloten; but remain

Perplex'd in all. The heavens still must work:

Wherein I am false, I am honest; not true, to be true.

These present wars shall find I love my country,

Even to the note⁶ o' the king, or I'll fall in them.

All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd:

Fortune brings in some boats, that are not steer'd.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Before the Cave. Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Gui.

The noise is round about us.

Bel.

Let us from it.

Arv. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it
From action and adventure?

Gui.

Nay, what hope

Have we in hiding us? this way, the Romans

Must, or for Britons slay us; or receive us

For barbarous and unnatural revolts;⁸

During their use, and slay us after.

Bel.

Sons,

We'll higher to the mountains; there secure us.

To the king's party there's no going; newness

Of Cloten's death (we being not known, and

mustard⁹

Among the bands) may drive us to a render:¹⁰

Where we have liv'd; and so extort from us

That which we've done, whose answer would be death

Drawn on with torture.

Gui.

This is, sir, a doubt,

In such a time, nothing becoming you,

Nor satisfying us.

Arv.

It is not likely,

That when they hear the Roman horses neigh,

Behold their quarter'd fires,¹¹ have both their eyes

And ears so cloy'd importantly as now,

That they will waste their time upon our note,

To know from whence we are.

But perhaps 'no letter' is here used to signify 'no tidings,' not a syllable of reply.

⁵ 'I will so distinguish myself, the king shall remark my valour.'

⁶ I. e. revolters. As in King John:—

'Lead me to the revolts of England here.'

¹⁰ 'An account of our place of abode.' This dialogue is a just representation of the superfluous caution of an old man.

Render is used in a similar sense in a future scene of this play:—

'My boon is, that this gentleman may render

Of whom he had this ring.'

¹¹ I. e. the fires in the respective quarters of the Roman army. Their beacon or watch fire. So in King Henry V.:—

'Fire answers fire: and through their pale flames

Each battle sees the other's unbelov'd face'

Bel. O, I am known
Of many in the army: many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore
him
From my remembrance. And, besides, the king
Hath not deserv'd my service, nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding,
The certainty of this hard life: ay, hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot summer's tanlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter.

Gai. Than be so,
Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army:
I and my brother are not known; yourself,
So out of thought, and thereto so o'ergrown,
Cannot be question'd.

Are. By this sun that shines,
I'll thither: What thing is it, that I never Did see man die? scarce ever look'd on blood,
But that of coward hares, hot goats, and venom? *Never bestrid a horse, save one, that had
A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel? I am asham'd
To look upon the holy sun, to have
The benefit of his bleas'd beams, remaining
So long a poor unknown.*

Gai. By heavens, I'll go:
If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave,
I'll take the better care; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romans!

Are. So say I; Amen.
Bel. No reason I, since on your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys:
If is your country wars you chance to die,
That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie:
Lead, lead.—The time seems long; their blood thinks scorn, [Aside.]
Till it fly off, and show them princes born.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Field between the British and Roman Camps. Enter POSTHUMUS, with a bloody Handkerchief.

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee; for I wish'd
Thou should'st be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you would take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves,
For wrying¹ but a little?—O, Pisanio!
Every good servant does not all commands:
No bond, but to do just ones.—Gods! if you Should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never Had liv'd to put on² this: so had you saved
The noble Imogen to repent; and struck
Me, wretch, more worth your vengeance. But, slack,

1 That is, 'the certain consequence of this hard life.'

2 The bloody token of Imogen's death, which Pisanio, in the foregoing act, determined to send.

³ This is a soliloquy of nature, uttered when the effervescence of a mind agitated and perturbed, spontaneously and inadvertently discharges itself in words. The speech throughout all its tenor, if the last conceit be excepted, seems to issue warm from the heart. He first condemns his own violence; then tries to disburden himself by imputing part of the crime to Pisanio; he next soothes his mind to an artificial and momentary tranquillity, by trying to think that he has been only an instrument of the gods for the happiness of Imogen.—He is now grown reasonable enough to determine that, having done so much evil, he will do no more; that he will not fight against the country which he has already injured; but, as life is no longer supportable, he will die in a just cause, and die with the obscurity of a man who does not think himself worthy to be remembered.

—Johnson.

3 This uncommon verb is used by Stanyhurst in the third book of the translation of Virgil:—

—the maysters wrye their vessels.

And in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. i. ed. 1633, p. 67:—'That from the right line of virtue are wryed to these crooked shifts'

You snatch some hence for little faults; that's love
To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ill with ill, each elder worse;⁴
And make them dread it to the doer's thrift.⁵
But Imogen is your own: Do your best wills,
And make me bless'd to obey!—I am brought hither
Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom: 'Tis enough
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistresses; peace!
I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good heavens,
Hear patiently my purpose: I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight Against the part I come with; so I'll die
For thee, O, Imogen, even for whom my life
Is, every breath, a death: and thus, unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of peril
Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me, than my habits show.
Gods put the strength o' the Leonati in me!
To shame the guise o' the world, I will begin
The fashion, less without, and more within. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter at one side, LUCIUS, IACHIMO, and the Roman Army; at the other side, the British Army; LEONATUS POSTHUMUS following it, like a poor Soldier. They march over, and go out. Alarums. Then enter again in skirmish, IACHIMO and POSTHUMUS: he vanquisheth and disarmeth IACHIMO, and then leaves him.

Jack. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom
Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady,
The princess of this country, and the air on't
Revengefully ensoules me; Or could this Carl,⁶
A very drudge of nature's, have subdu'd me,
In my profession? Knights and honours, borne
As I wear mine, are titles but of scorn.
If that thy gentry, Britain, go before
This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is, that we scarce are men, and you are gods. [Exit.]

The Battle continues; the Britons fly; CYMBELINE is taken: then enter to his rescue, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage o'
the ground;

The lane is guarded: nothing routs us, but
The villany of our fears.

Gai. Are. Stand, stand, and fight!

Enter POSTHUMUS, and seconds the Britons: They rescue CYMBELINE, and exeunt. Then, enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, and IMOGEN.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save thyself;
For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such
As war were hoodwink'd.

Jack. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
Let's reinforce, or fly. [Exeunt.]

4 To put on is to incke, insatiate.

5 The last deed is certainly not the oldest; but Shakespeare calls the deed of an elder man an elder deed. Where corruptions are, they grow with years, and the oldest sinner is the greatest.

6 The old copy reads:—

'And make them dread it to the doer's thrift.' Which the commentators have in vain tortured themselves to give a meaning to. Mason endeavoured to give the sense of repentance to thrift: but his explanation better suits the passage as it now stands.—'Some you snatch hence for little faults: others you suffer to heap ill on ill, and afterwards make them dread having done so, to the eternal welfare of the doers.' Thrift is confession and repentance. The typographical error would easily arise in old printing, as and and it were frequently confounded.

7 Carl or charl, is a clown or countryman, and is used by our old writers in opposition to a gentleman. Falgrave, in his Eclaircissement de la Langue Francoise, 1630, explains the words carle, charle, charlie, by villain, villain lousdier, and charlyshnesse by villainie, rusticite. The thought seems to have been imitated in Philaster:—

'The gods take part against me; could this bear
Have held me thus else?'

SCENE III. Another Part of the Field. Enter POSTHUMUS and a British Lord.

Lord. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did:

Though you, it seems, come from the fiers.

Lord.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost, But that the heavens fought: 'The king himself Of his wings destitute,¹ the army broken, And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying Through a strait lane; the enemy full-hearted, Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having work More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling Merely through fear; that the strait pass was damn'd

With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards living To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord.

Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd, and wall'd with turf;

Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,—An honest one, I warrant; who deserv'd So long a breeding, as his white beard came to, In doing this for his country;—athwart the lane, He, with two striplings, (lads more like to run The country base,² than to commit such slaughter; With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer Than those for preservation cas'd, or shame,³) Made good the passage; cry'd to those that fled, Our Britain's hearts die flying, not our men: To darkness fleet, souls that fly backwards! Stand! Or we are Romans, and will give you that Like beasts, which you shun beastly; and may save, But to look back in from: stand, stand.—These three, Three thousand confident, in act as many, (For three performers are the file, when all The rest do nothing,) with this word, stand, stand, Accommodated by the place, more charming, With their own nobleness, (which would have turn'd A distaff to a lance,) gilded pale looks, Part, shame, part, spirit renew'd; that some, turn'd coward

But by example, (O, a sin in war, Damn'd in the first beginners!) 'gan to look The way that they did, and to grin like lions Upon the pikes o' the hunters. Then began A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon, A rout, confusion thick: Forthwith they fly Chickens, the way which they stoop'd eagles; slaves,

The strides they victors made: and now our cowards, (Like fragments in hard voyages), became The life o' the need; having found the back-door open

Of the unguarded hearts, Heavens, how they wound! Some, slain before; some, dying; some, their friends

O'erborne i' the former wave: ten, chas'd by one, Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty: Those, that would die or ere resist, are grown The mortal bug⁴ o' the field.

Lord.

This was strange chance:

A narrow lane! an old man, and two boys!

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: You are made

Rather to wonder at the things you hear,

1 The stopping of the Roman army by three persons is an allusion to the story of the Hays, as related by Holinshed in his History of Scotland, p. 153; upon which Milton once intended to have formed a drama. Shakspeare was evidently acquainted with it:—'Hale be holding the kings, with the most part of the nobles fighting with great valiance in the middle-ward, now destitute of the wings,' &c.

2 A country game called prison base, vulgarly prison-base.

3 Shame, for modesty, or shamefacedness.

4 I. e. terrors, bugbears. See King Henry VI. Part III. Act v. Sc. 2.

For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.

5 Alluding to the common superstition of charms being powerful enough to keep men unhurt in battle.

Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't, And vent it for a mockery? Here is one: Two boys, an old man twice a boy, a lane, Preserv'd the Britons, was the Romans' bane.

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post.

'Lack, to what end? Who dares not stand his foe, I'll be his friend: For if he'll do, as he is made to do, I know, he'll quickly fly my friendship too. You have put me into rhyme.

Lord.

Farewell, you are angry. [Exit. Post. Still going?—This is a lord! O, noble misery!]

To be i' the field, and ask, what news, of me! To-day, how many would have given their honours To have sav'd their carcasses? took heel to do't, And yet died too? I, in mine own wo charm'd,⁶ Could not find death, where I did hear him groan; Nor feel him, where he struck: Being an ugly monster,

'Tis strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds, Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we That draw his knives i' the war.—Well, I will find him:

For being now a favourer to the Roman, No more a Briton, I have resum'd again The part I came in: Fight I will no more, But yield me to the veriest hind, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Here made by the Roman; great the answer⁷ be Britons must take; For me, my ransom's death; On either side I come to spend my breath; Which neither here I'll keep, nor bear again, But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter Two British Captains, and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be prais'd! Lucius is taken.

'Tis thought, the old man and his sons were angela.

2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gave the affront⁸ with them.

1 Cap.

So 'tis reported: But none of them can be found.—Stand! who is there?

Post. A Roman;

Who had not now been drooping here, if seconds Had answer'd him.

2 Cap.

Lay hands on him; a dog!

A leg of Rome shall not return to tell

What crows have peck'd them here. He brags his service

As if he were of note: bring him to the king.

Enter CYMBELINE, attended: BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PISANIO, and Roman Captives. The Captains present POSTHUMUS to CYMBELINE, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: after which, all go out.

SCENE IV. A Prison. Enter POSTHUMUS, and Two Gaolers.

1 Gaol. You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you;¹⁰

So graze, as you find pasture.

2 Gaol.

Ay, or a stomach. [Exit Two Gaolers.

Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art a way,

I think, to liberty: Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' the gout: since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd

By the sure physician, death; who is the key

6 I. e. retaliation. As in a former scene:—

'That which we've done, whose answer would be death.'

7 Silly is simple or rustic. Thus in the novel of Bocaccio, on which this play is formed:—'The servant, who had no great good will to kill her, very easily grew pitifull, took off her upper garment, and gave her a poore ragged doublet, a silly chapperone.'

8 I. e. the encounter.

9 This stage direction for 'Inexplicable dumb show' is probably an interpolation by the players. Shakspeare has expressed his contempt for such mumfery in Hamlet.

10 The wit of the Gaoler alludes to the custom of putting a lock on a horse's leg when he is turned out to pasture.

To unbar these locks My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my shanks, and wrists: You good gods, give me
The penitent instrume it, to pick that bolt,
Then, free for ever! I't enough, I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in gyves,
Desir'd, more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me, than my all.¹
I know, you are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement; 't at's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life, take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coin'd it:
'Tween man and man, they weigh not every stamp;
Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: and so, great powers,
If you will take this adit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds.² O, Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence. [He sleeps.

Volens Music. Enter, as an Apparition, SICILIUS LEONATUS, Father to POSTHUMUS, an old Man, attired like a Warrior; leading in his hand an ancient Matron, his Wife, and Mother to POSTHU-MUS, with Music before them. Then, after other Music, follow the Two young Leonati, Brothers to POSTHUMUS, with wounds, as they died in the Wars.
They circle POSTHUMUS round, as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder master, show,
Thy spite on mortal flies:
With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
But thy adulteries

Rates and revenges.
Each my poor boy done ought but well,
Whose face I never saw?
I die'd, whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending Nature's law.
Whose father thou, (as men report,
Thou art) as father art,
Thou should'st have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.
Mach. Lavinia lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus rip'd,
Casting 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sici. Cite's nature, like his ancestry
Moulded the stuff so fair,
That he deserv'd the praise of the world,
As great Sicilius' heir.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel;
Or first of object be

In eyes of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity?
With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To exile'd and thrown
From Leonati's seat, and cast

1 This passage is very obscure, and I must say with Milesius, that I think it is so rendered either by the omission of a line, or some other corruption of the text.
I have no faith in Malone's explanation: that which Steevens offers is not much more satisfactory; but I have nothing better to offer. 'Posthumus questions whether exile is sufficient atonement for guilt. Then to satisfy the offended gods, he desires them to take no more than his present all, that is, his life, if it is the main part, the chief point, or principal condition of his freedom, i. e. of his freedom from future punishment.'

2 So in Macbeth—

'Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
That keeps me pale.'

There is an equivocation between the legal instrument and sounds of steel; a little out of its place in a passage of pathetic exclamation.

3 This Scene is supposed not to be Shakespeare's, but inserted in by the players for mere show. The great poet, who has conducted his fifth Act with such matchless

From her his dearest one,
Sweet Imogen?
Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight tining of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy:
And to become the geck⁴ and scorn
O' the other's villany?
2 Bro. For this, from stiller seats we came,
Our parents, and us twain,
That, striking in our country's cause,
Fell bravely, and were slain;
Our fealty, and Tenantius' right,
With honour to maintain.
1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hats
To Cymbeline perform'd:
Then Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why has thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due;
Being all to dolours turn'd?
Sici. Thy crystal window ope; look out,
No longer exercise,
Upon a valiant race, thy harsh
And potent injuries:
Mach. Since Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.
Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion, help:
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining synod of the rest,
Against thy deity.
2 Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

JUPITER descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an Eagle: he throws a Thunder-bolt. The Ghosts fall on their knees.

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of region low,
Offend our hearing; hush! How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt, you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest
Upon your never withering banks of flowers.
Be not with mortal accidents oppress;
No care of yours it is, you know, 'tis ours.
Whom best I love, I cross; to make my gift,
The more delay'd, delighted.⁵ Be content;
Your low-laid son our god-head will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent
Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in
Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!—
He shall be lord of lady Imogen,

And happier much by his affliction made.
This tablet lay upon his breast; wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine;
And so, away: no further with your din
Express impatience, lest you stir up mine.—
Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline. [Descends.

Sici. He came in thunder; his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Stoop'd, as to foot us: his ascension is
More sweet than our bless'd fields; his royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloy's his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All.

Thanks, Jupiter!

Sici. The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd skill, could never have designed the vision to be twice described by Posthumus, had this contemptible nonsense been previously delivered on the stage. It appears that the players indulged themselves sometimes in unwarrantable liberties of the same kind. Nashe, in his Lenten Stuffe, 1590, assures us, that in a play of his, called the Iale of Dogs, four acts, without his consent, or the least guess of his drift or scope, were supplied by the players. See the Prolegomena to Malone's Shakespeare, vol. ii.; article Shakespeare, Ford, and Jonson.

4 The fool.

5 Delighted for delightful, or causing delight.

6 I. e. to grasp us in his pounces.

'And till they foot and clutch their prey.'

Herbert.

7 In ancient language, the claws or claws of a bird or beast are the same with claws in modern speech. To claw their beaks is an accustomed action with hawks and eagles.

His radiant roof:—Away! and, to be blest,
Let us with care perform his great behest.

[Ghosts vanish.]

Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grand-sire, and begot

A father to me: and thou hast created
A mother and two brothers: But (O, scorn!)
Gone! they went hence so soon as they were born.
And so I am awake.—Poor wretches that depend
On greatness' favour, dream as I have done;
Wake, and find nothing.—But, alas, I swove:
Many dream not to find, neither deserve,
And yet are steep'd in favours; so am I,
That have this golden chance, and know not why.
What fairies haunt this ground? A book? O, rare one!

Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers: let thy effects
So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,
As a good promise.

[Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches, which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue, and brain not: either both, or nothing:
Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot unlie. Be what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which
I'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter Gaolers.

Gaol. Come, sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather: ready long ago.

Gaol. Hanging is the word, sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.

Gaol. A heavy reckoning for you, sir: But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more tavern bills; which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for the want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink; sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; purse and brain both empty: the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness: O! of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge:—Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters; so the acquittance follows.

Post. I am merrier to die, than thou art to live.

Gaol. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the tooth-ache: But a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think he would change places with his officer; for, look you, sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed, do I, follow.

Gaol. Your death has eyes in 's head, then; I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be

1 i.e. trifling. Hence new-fangled, still in use for new toys or wiles.

2 Paid, here means subdued or overcome by the liquor.

3 i.e. hazard.

4 Prone here signifies ready, prompt. As in Measure for Measure, Act I. Sc. 3.

5 ——— in her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as moves men.

Thus also in Lucan's Pharsalia, translated by Sir Arthur Gorges, l. vi.—

6 ——— Thessalian fierce steeds,

For use of war so prone and fit.

And in Wilfride Holme's poem, entitled The Fall and Evil Success of Rebellion, l. c. 1337:—

'With bombard and basilisk, with men prone and vigorous.'

directed by some that take upon them to know; or take upon yourself that, which I am sure you do not know; or jump² the after-inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct thee the way I am going, but such as wink, and will not use them.

Gaol. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes, to see the way of blindness! I am sure, hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bringest good news;—I am called to be made free.

Gaol. I'll be hanged then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gaoler; no bolts for the dead.

[Exit POSTHUMUS and Messenger.]

Gaol. Unless a man would marry a gallows, and begot young gibbets, I never saw one so prone.³ Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman: and there be some of them too, that die against their wills; so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses! I speak against my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment in't.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.⁴ Cymbeline's Tent. Enter CYMBELINE, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PISANIO, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made Preservers of my throne. Wo is my heart,

That the poor soldier that so richly fought,
Whose rage sham'd gilded arms, whose naked breast
Stepp'd before target of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him if
Our grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw
Such noble fury in so poor a thing;
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him?
Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and living,
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my grief, I am
The heir of his reward; which I will add
To you, the liver, heart, and brain of Britain,
[To BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARV.]
By whom, I grant, she lives; 'Tis now the time
To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria we were born, and gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees—
Arise, my knights o' the battle:⁵ I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter CORNELIUS and Ladies.

There's business in these faces.⁶—Why so sadly
Greet you our victory? you look like Romans,
And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king!

⁵ 'In the scene before us, all the surviving characters are assembled; and at the expense of whatever incongruity the former events may have been produced, perhaps little can be discovered on this occasion to offend the most scrupulous advocate for regularity: and as little is found wanting to satisfy the spectator by a catastrophe which is intricate without confusion, and not more rich in ornament than nature.'—Stevens.

⁶ Thus in Stowe's Chronicle, p. 164, edit. 1615:—
'Philip of France made Arthur Plantagenet Knight of the Field.'

⁷ So in Macbeth:—
'The business of this man looks out of him'

To sour your happiness, I mus' report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Whom worse than a physician
Would this report become? But I consider,
By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too.—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life;
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd,
I will report, so please you: These her women
Can trip me, if I err: who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Pr'ythee, say.
Cor. First, she confess'd she never lov'd you;
only

Affected greatness got by you, not you:
Married your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this:
And, but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand² to love
With such integrity, she did confess
Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O, most delicate fiend!
Who is't can read a woman?—Is there more?

Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess,
she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and, ling'ring,
By inches waste you: In which time she purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'ercome you with her show: yea, and in time
(When she had fitted you with her craft,) to work
Her son into the adoption of the crown.

But failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?
Lady. We did, so please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;
Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming; it had been vicious,

To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was folly in me, thou may'st say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, the Soothsayer, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded: POSTHUMUS behind, and IMOGEN.

Thou com'st not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss
Of many a bold one; whose kinsmen have made suit,

That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter
Of you their captives, which ourself have granted;
So, think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the day
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us,
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd

Our prisoners with the sword. But since the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom, let it come: suffice it,
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:
Augustus lives to think on't: And so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; My boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom'd: never master had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feat,³ so nurse-like: let his virtue join

With my request, which, I'll make bold, your highness

Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm,
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour⁴ is familiar to me.—
Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace,
And art mine own.—I know not why, nor wherefore,
To say live, boy:⁵ ne'er thank thy master; live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy state, I'll give it;
Yea, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta'en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.
Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet, I know, thou wilt.

Imo. No, no: alack,
There's other work in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdain me,
He leaves me, scorns me: Briefly die thy joys,
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.
Why stands he so perplei'd?

Cym. What would'st thou, boy?
I love thee more and more; think more and more What's best to ask. Know'st him thou look'st on?
speak,

Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?
Imo. He is a Roman; no more kin to me,
Than I to thy highness; who, being born your vassal,

Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so?
Imo. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. What's thy name?
Imo. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou art my good youth, my page;
I'll be thy master: Walk with me; speak freely.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN converse apart.
Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death?

Arr. One said another
Not more resembles: That sweet rosy lad,
Who died, and was Fidele:—What think you?

Gai. The same dead thing alive.
Bel. Peace, peace! see further; he eyes us not;
forbear;

Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am sure
He would have spoke to us.

Gai. But we saw him dead.

Bel. Be silent; let's see further.

Pis. It is my mistress: [Aside.
Since she is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

[CYMBELINE and IMOGEN come forward.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side;
Make thy demand aloud.—Sir, [To IACH.] step
you forth;

Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;
Or, by our greatness, and the grace of it,
Which is our honour, bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to him.

Imo. My boon is, that this gentleman may render
Of whom he had this ring.

Post. What's that to him?
[Aside.

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,
How came it yours?

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken that
Which, to be spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How! me?
Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that which

¹ This observation has already occurred in the Funeral Song, p. 331:—

'The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.'

² 'To bear in hand' is 'to delude by false appearances.'

³ Feat is ready, dexterous.

⁴ Comenance.

⁵ 'I know not what should induce me to say, live, boy.' The word nor was inserted by Rowe.

Torments me to conceal. By villany
I got this ring; 'twas Leonatus' jewel; Whom thou didst banish; and (which more may grieve thee,
As it doth me,) a nobler sir ne'er liv'd
'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more, my
lord?

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter,—
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quail¹ to remember,—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:

I had rather thou should'st live while nature will,
Than die ere I hear more: strive man and speak.

Iach. Upon a time (unhappy was the clock
That struck the hour!) it was in Rome (accurs'd
The mansion where!) 'twas at a feast, (O 'would
Our viands had been poison'd! or, at least,
Those which I heav'd to head!) the good Post-
humus,

(What should I say? he was too good to be
Where ill men were; and was the best of all Amongst the rare'st of good ones,) sitting sadly,
Hearing us praise our loves of Italy
For beauty that made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak: for feature,² laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature; for condition,
A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for; besides, that hook of wiving,
Fairness which strikes the eye;—

Cym. I stand on fire:
Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall,
Unless thou would'st grieve quickly.—This Post-
humus

(Most like a noble lord in love, and one
That had a royal lover,) took his hint;
And, not dispraising whom we prais'd (therein
He was as calm as virtue,) he began His mistress' picture; which by his tongue being made,

And then a mind put in't, either our brags
Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description
Prov'd us unspeaking sots.

Cym. Nay, nay, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's chastity—there it begins.
He spake of her as Dian had hot dreams,
And she alone were cold: Whereat, I, wretch!
Made scruple of his praise; and wager'd with him
Pieces of gold, 'gainst this which then he wore
Upon his honour'd finger, to attain
In suit the place of his bed, and win this ring
By hers and mine adultery: he, true knight,
No lesser of her honour confident
Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring;
And would so, had it been a carbuncle
Of Phoebus' wheel; and might so safely, had it
Been all the worth of his car.³ Away to Britain
Post I in this design: Well may you, sir,
Remember me at court, where I was taught
Of your chaste daughter the wide difference
'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd
Of hope, not longing, mine Italian brain
'Gan in your duller Britain operate
Most vilely; for my vantage, excellent;
And to be brief, my practice so prevail'd,
That I return'd with similar proof enough
To make the noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his belief in her renown
With tokens thus, and thus; averring notes⁴
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, this her bracelet,
(O, cunning, how I got it!) nay, some marks

Of secret on her person, that he could not
But tickle her bond of chastity quite crack'd,
I having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon,
Methinks, I see him now,—

Post.

Ay, so thou dost,
[Coming forward.]

Italian fiend!—Ah me, most credulous fool,
Egregious murderer, thief, any thing
That's due to all the villains past, in being,
To come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,
Some upright justicer! Thou, king, send out
For torments ingenious: it is I
That all the abhorred things o' the earth amend
By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy daughter:—villain like, I lie;
That caus'd a lesser villain than myself
A sacrilegious thief, to do't:—the temple
Of virtue was she; yea, and she herself.
Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villany less than 'twas!—O, Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O, Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Imo.

Peace, my lord; hear, hear—
Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful page,

There lie thy part. [Striking her; she falls.]

Pis.

O, gentlemen, help, help,
Mine, and your mistress:—O, my lord Posthumus!
You ne'er kill'd Imogen till now:—Help, help!—
Mine honour'd lady!

Cym.

Does the world go round?

Post. How comes these staggerers' on me?

Pis.

Wake, my mistress!

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me

To death with mortal joy.

Pis.

How fares my mistress?

Imo. O, get thee from my sight;

Thou gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow, hence!

Breathe not where princes are.

Cym.

The tune of Imogen!

Pis. Lady,

The gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if

That box I gave you was not thought by me

A precious thing; I had it from the queen.

Cym.

New matter still?

Imo.

It poison'd me.

Cor.

O, gods.

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,

Which must approve thee honest: If Pisanio

Have, said she, given his mistress that confession

Which I gave him for a cordial, she is serv'd

As I would serve a rat.

Cym.

What's this, Cornelius?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importun'd me

To temper⁵ poisons for her; still pretending

The satisfaction of her knowledge, only

In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs

Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose

Was of more danger, did compound for her

A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease

The present power of life: but, in short time,

All offices of nature should again

Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it?

Imo.

Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel.

My boys,

There was our error.

Gai.

This is sure, Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from

you?

Think, that you are upon a rock; and now

Throw me again.⁶ [Embracing him.]

Shakespeare has the word thrice in King Lear. And Warner, in his Albion's England, 1602, b. x. ch. 45:—

'Precelling his progenitors, a justicer upright.'

7 'Not only the temple of virtue, but virtue herself.'

8 I. e. this wild and delirious perturbation. It is still common to say 'I stagger'd me,' when we have been moved by any sudden emotion of surprise.

9 Mix, compound.

10 Imogen comes up to Posthumus as soon as she knows that the error is cleared up; and, hanging fondly

1 To quail is to faint, or sink into dejection.

2 Feature is here used for proportion.

3 As for as if. So in The Winter's Tale:—

'—he utters them as he had eaten ballads.'

4 'He had deserved it, were it carbuncled

Like Phoebus' car.' Antony and Cleopatra.

5 I. e. such marks of the chamber and pictures, as averred or confirmed my report.

6 Justicer was anciently used instead of justice.—

Poa. Hang there like fruit, my soul,
Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child?
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir,
[Kneeling.]

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye
not;

You had a motive for't. [To Gys. and Ans.

Cym. My tears that fall,
Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. O, she was sought: and 'long of her it was,
That we meet here so strangely: But her son
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.

Pis. My lord,
Now fear is from me, I'll speak troth. Lord Cloten,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn; foam'd at the mouth, and swore,

If I discover'd not which way she was gone,
It was my instant death: By accident,
I had a feigned letter of my master's
Then in my pocket; which directed him
To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;
Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My lady's honour: what became of him,
I further know not.

Gwi. Let me end the story:
I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forefend!
I would not thy good deeds should from my lips
Pluck a hard sentence: pry'thee, valiant youth,
Deny't again.

Gwi. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince.

Gwi. A most uncivil one: The wrongs he did me
Were nothing princelike; for he did provoke me
With language that would make me spurn the sea,
If it could roar so to me; I cut off his head;
And am right glad, he is not standing here
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee:
By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law: Thou art dead.

Imo. That headless man
I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,
And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king:
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyself; and hath
More of thee merited than a band of Clotens
Had ever scar for.—Let his arms alone;

[To the Guard.]
They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,
Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for,
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?

on him, says, not as upbraiding him, but with kindness and good humour, 'How could you treat your wife thus?' in that endearing tone which most readers, who are fathers and husbands, will understand, who will add poor to wife. She then adds, Now you know who I am, suppose we were on the edge of a precipice, and throw me from you; meaning, in the same endearing irony, to say, I am sure it is as impossible for you to be intentionally unkind to me, as it is for you to kill me. Perhaps some very wise persons may smile at part of this note; but however much black-letter books may be necessary to elucidate some parts of Shakespeare, there are others which require some acquaintance with those familiar pages of the book of Nature:

'Which learning may not understand,
And wisdom may disdain to hear.'

Pye.
1 The consequence is taken for the whole action; by tasting is by forcing us to make thee to taste.

2 As there is no reason to imagine that Belarius had assumed the appearance of being older than he really

Ans. In that he spoke too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three:

But I will prove, that two of us are as good
As I have given out him.—My sons, I must,
For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,
Though, haply, well for you.

Ans. Your danger is Ours.

Gwi. And our good him.

Bel. Have at it, then—
By leave;—Thou hadst, great king, a subject, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is
A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath Assum'd this age:—indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how, a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence;
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot;
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confiscate all so soon
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons?

Bel. I am too must and saucy: Here's my knee;
Ere I arise, I will prefer my sons;

Then, spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me father,
And think they are my sons, are none of mine;
They are the issue of your loins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue?

Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old Morgan,
Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my more offence,¹ my punishment

Itself, and all my treason: that I suffer'd,
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes
(For such, and so they are) these twenty year
Have I train'd up: those arts they have, as I Could put into them; my breeding was, sir, as
Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile,
Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children
Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to't;
Having receiv'd the punishment before,
For that which I did then: Beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason: Their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweetest companions in the world:—
The benedictions of these covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy
To inlay heaven with stars.²

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st³
The service, that you three have done, is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st: I lost my children;

If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleas'd a while.—

This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Gaius;
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand was, it must have a reference to the different appearance which he now makes in comparison with that when Cymbeline last saw him.

3 The old copy reads 'new offence;' the emendation is by Mr. Tyrwhitt. Belarius means to say 'My crime, my punishment, and all the treason that I committed, originated in, and were founded on, your caprice
only.'

4 'Take him and cut him into little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,' &c.
Romeo and Juliet.

5 'Thy tears give testimony to the sincerity of thy relation; and I have the less reason to be incredulous because the actions which you have done within my knowledge are more incredible than the story which you relate.' The king reasons very justly—John- son.

Of his queen mother, which, for more probation,
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guidertus had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star:
It was a mark of wonder.

Ed. This is he;
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp;
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.

Cym. O, what am I
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother
Rejoic'd deliverance mere:—Bless'd may you be,
That after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign in them now!—O, Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Ima. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by't.—O, my gentle brother,
Have we thus met? O, never say hereafter,
But I am truest speaker: you call'd me brother,
When I was but your sister; I you brothers,
When you were so indeed.

Cym. Did you o'er meet?
Ima. Ay, my good lord.

Gui. And at first meeting lov'd;
Continued so, until we thought he died.

Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd.

Cym. O, rare instinct!
When shall I hear all through? This fierce abridgement

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where? how liv'd
you?

And when came you to serve our Roman captive?
How parted with your brothers? how first met them?

Why fled you from the court? and whither? These,
And your three motives¹ to the battle, with
I knew not how much more, should be demanded;
And all the other by-dependencies,
From chance to chance; but not the time, nor
place,

Will serve our long interrogatories.² See,
Posthumus anchors upon Imogen;
And she, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting
Each object with a joy; the counterchange
Is severally in all. Let's quit this ground,
And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—
Thou art my brother; So we'll hold thee over.

[To BELARIUS.]
Ima. You are my father too; and did relieve me,
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All o'erjoy'd
Save these in bonds; let them be joyful too,
For they shall taste our comfort.

Ima. My good master,
I will yet do you service.

Luc. Happy be you!

Cym. The fiercest soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well become'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a king.

Post. I am, sir,
The soldier that did company these three
In poor beseeching: 'twas a fittest for

The purpose I then follow'd;—That I was he,
Speak, Iachimo; I had you down, and might
Have made you finish.

Iach. I am down again: [Kneeling]
But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee,
As then your force did, Take that life, beseech
you,

Which I so often owe: but, your ring first
And here the bracelet of the truest princess,
That ever swore her faith.

Post. Kneel not to me;
The power that I have on you, is to spare you;
The malice towards you, to forgive you: Live,
And deal with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd:
We'll learn our freeness of a son-in-law;
Pardon's the word to all.

Ima. You help us, sir,
As you did mean indeed to be our brother;
Joy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord of Rome,

Call forth your soothsayer: As I slept, methought,
Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back,
Appear'd to me, with other spritely shows³
Of mine own kindred: when I wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection⁴ of it; let him show
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmenus,—

Sooth. Here, my good lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Sooth. [Reads.] When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopp'd branches, which, being dead many years shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.

Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp;
The fit and apt construction of thy name,
Being Leo-natus, doth import so much:
The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,

[To CYMBELINE.]

Which we call mollis aer; and mollis aer
We term it suaviter: which suaviter I divine,
Is this most constant wife: who, even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline,
Personates thee; and thy lopp'd branches point
Thy two sons forth: who, by Belarius stolen,
For many years thought dead, are now reviv'd,
To the majestic cedar join'd; whose issue
Promises Britain peace and plenty.

Cym. Well,
My peace we will begin:—And, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar,
And to the Roman empire; promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen;
Whom heavens, in justice (both on her and hers),
Have laid most heavy hand.⁵

So the Queen in Hamlet says:—
— Her speech is nothing.

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection.⁶

Whose containing means the contents of which.

⁷ It should apparently be, 'By peace we will begin.
The Soothsayer says, that the label promised to Britain
'peace and plenty.' To which Cymbeline replies, 'We will begin with peace, to fulfil the prophecy.'

⁸ I. e. have laid most heavy hand on. Many such elliptical passages are found in Shakespeare. Thus in
The Rape of Lucrece:—

'Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on whom he looks [on] gainst law and duty.'
So in The Winter's Tale:—

'— The queen is spotless
In that which you accuse her [of]'

² I. e. which ought to be rendered distinct by an ample narrative.

³ 'Your three motives' means 'the motives of you three.' So in Romeo and Juliet, 'both our remedies' means 'the remedy for us both.'

⁴ Interrogatories was frequently used for interrogatories, and consequently as a word of only five syllables.
In The Merchant of Venice, near the end, it is also thus used:—

'And charge us there upon interrogatories.'

⁵ Spiritly shows are groups of sprites, ghostly appearances.

⁶ A collection is a corollary, a consequence deduced from premises. So in Davies's poem on The Immortality of the Soul:—

'When she from sundry arts one skill doth draw;
Gath'ring from divers sights one act of war;
From many cases like one rule of law:

These her collections, not the causes are.'

South. The fingers of the powers above do tune
The harmony of this peace. The vision
Which I made known to Lucius, ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd: For the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams o' the sun
So vanish'd; which forthwith our princely eagle,
The imperial Caesar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Land we the gods;
And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils
From our bless'd altars! Publish we this peace
To all our subjects. Set we forward: Let
A Roman and a British ensign wave
Friendly together: so through Lud's town march:
And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we'll ratify: seal it with feasts.—
Set on there:—Never was a war did cease,
Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace.

THIS play has many just sentiments, some natural dialogues, and some pleasing scenes, but they are obtained at the expense of much incongruity. To remark the folly of the fiction, the absurdity of the conduct, the confusion of the names and manners of different times, and the impossibility of the events in any system of life, were to waste criticism upon unresisting imbecility, upon faults too evident for detection, and too gross for aggravation.*

JOHNSON.

* Johnson's remark on the gross incongruity of names and manners in this play is just, but it was the common error of the age; in The Wife for a Month, of Beaumont and Fletcher, we have Frederick and Alphonso among a host of Greek names, not to mention the firing of a pistol by Demetrius Poliorcetes in The Humorous Lieutenant.—Pyc.

It is hardly necessary to point out the extreme inju-

A SONG,

SUNG BY GUIDERIUS AND ARVIRAGUS OVER DELE, SUPPOSED TO BE DEAD.

BY MR. WILLIAM COLLINS.

*To fair Fidele's grassy tomb,
Soft maids and village hands shall bring
Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom,
And rife all the breathing spring.*

*No waiting ghost shall dare appear
To vex with shrieks this quiet grove;
But shepherd lads assemble here,
And making virgins own their love.*

*No wither'd witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew:
The female fays shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.*

*The redoubt oft at evening hours
Shall kindly lend his little aid,
With hoary moss, and gather'd flowers,
To deck the ground where thou art laid.*

*When howling winds, and beating rain,
In tempests shake the sylvan cell;
Or midst the chase on every plain,
The tender thought on thee shall dwell.*

*Each lonely scene shall thee restore;
For thee the tear be duly shed;
Belov'd till life should charm no more;
And mourn'd till pity's self be dead.*

tice of the unfounded severity of Johnson's animadversions upon this exquisite drama. The antithesis will be found in the reader's appeal to his own feelings after reiterated perusal. It is with satisfaction I refer to the more just and discriminative opinion of a foreign critic, to whom every lover of Shakespeare is deeply indebted, cited in the preliminary remarks.

B. W. S.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

ON what principle the editors of the first complete edition of Shakespeare's works admitted this play to their volume, cannot now be ascertained. The most probable reason that can be assigned is, that he wrote a few lines in it, or gave some assistance to the author in revising it, or in some way or other aided in bringing it forward on the stage. The tradition mentioned by Ravenscroft, in the time of King James II., warrants us in making one or other of these suppositions. 'I have been told (says he, in his preface to an alteration of this play, published in 1687,) by some anciently conversant with the stage, that it was not originally his, but brought by a private author to be acted, and he only gave some master touches to one or two of the principal parts.'

'A book, entitled A Noble Roman Historie of Titus Andronicus, was entered at Stationers' Hall, by John Danter, Feb. 6, 1593-4. This was undoubtedly the play, as it was printed in that year (according to Langbaine, who alone appears to have seen the first edition,) and acted by the servants of the Earls of Pembroke, Derby, and Sussex. It is observable that in the entry no author's name is mentioned, and that the play was originally performed by the same company of comedians who exhibited the old drama, entitled The Coniunction of the Houses of York and Lancaster, The old Taming of a Shrew, and Marlowe's King Edward II.; by whom not one of Shakespeare's plays is said to have been performed.

From Ben Jonson's Induction to Bartholomew Fair, 1614, we learn that Andronicus had been exhibited twenty-five or thirty years before; that is, according to the lowest computation, in 1539; or, taking a middle period, which is perhaps more just, in 1537.

'To enter into a long disquisition to prove this piece not to have been written by Shakespeare would be an idle waste of time. To those who are not conversant with his writings, if particular passages were examined, more words would be necessary than the subject is worth; those who are well acquainted with his works cannot entertain a doubt on the question. I will, however, mention one mode by which it may be easily ascertained. Let the reader only peruse a few lines of Appius and Virginia, Tancred and Gismund, The Battle of Alcazar, Jeronimo, Sefimus Emperor of the Turks, The Wounds of Civil War, The Wars of Cyrus, Lochrine, Arden of Feversham, King Edward I., The Spanish Tragedy, Solyman and Perseda, King Lear, the old King John, or any other of the pieces that were exhibited before the time of Shakespeare, and he will at once perceive that Titus Andronicus was coined in the same mint.

'The testimony of Meres, [who attributes it to Shakespeare in his Palladis Tamia, or the Second Part of Wits Common Wealth, 1598,] remains to be considered. His enumerating this among Shakespeare's plays may be accounted for in the same way in which we may account for its being printed by his fellow comedians in the first folio edition of his works. Meres was, in 1598, when his book first appeared, intimately connected with Drayton, and probably acquainted with some of the dramatic poets of the time, from some or other of whom he might have heard that Shakespeare interested himself about this tragedy, or had written a few lines for the author. The internal evidence furnished by the piece itself, and proving it not to have been the production of Shakespeare, greatly outweighs any single testimony on the other side. Meres might have been misinformed, or inconsiderately have given credit to the rumour of the day. In short, the high antiquity of the piece, its entry on the Stationers' books, and being afterwards printed without the name of Shakespeare, as being performed by the servants of Lord Pembroke, &c.: the stately march of the versification, the whole colour of the composition, its resemblance to several of our most ancient dramas, the dissimilitude of the style from our author's undoubted plays, and the tradition mentioned by Ravenscroft when some of his contemporaries had not long been dead (for Lowin and Taylor, two of his fellow comedians, were alive a few years before the Restoration, and Sir Wm. Davenant did not die till April, 1669;) all these circumstances combined, prove with irresistible force that the play of Titus Andronicus has been erroneously ascribed to Shakespeare."—Malone.

'Mr. Malone, in the preceding note, has expressed his opinion that Shakespeare may have written a few lines in this play, or given some assistance to the author in revising it. Upon no other ground than this has he any claim to a place among our poet's dramas: Those passages in which he supposed the hand of Shakespeare may be traced, he marked with inverted commas. This system of seizing upon every line possessed of merit, as belonging of right to our great dramatist, is scarcely doing justice to his contemporaries; and resembles one of the arguments which Theobald has used in his preface to The Double Falsehood:—"My partiality for Shakespeare makes me wish that every thing which is good or pleasing in our tongue had been owing to his pen." Many of the writers of that day were men of high poetical talent; and many individual speeches are found in plays, which, as plays, are of no value, which would not have been in any way unworthy of Shakespeare himself; of whom, Dr. Johnson has observed, that "his real power is not shown in the splendour of particular passages, but by the progress of the fable and the tenour of his dialogue; and that he that tries to recommend him by select quotations will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen." Dr. Farmer has ascribed Titus Andronicus to Kyd, and placed it on a level with Lochner; but it appears to be much more in the style of Marlowe. His fondness for accumulating horrors upon other occasions, will account for the sanguinary character of this play; and it would not, I think, be difficult to show by extracts from his other performances, that there is not a line in it which he was not fully capable of writing."—Boswell.

The author, whoever he was, might have borrowed the story, &c. from an old ballad which is entered in the books of the Stationers' Company immediately after the play to John Dantier, Feb. 6, 1593; and again entered to Tho. Fawcett, April 19, 1592. The reader will find it in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. Painter, in his Palace of Pleasure, tom. ii. speaks of the story of Titus as well known, and particularly mentions the cruelty of Tamora. And there is an allusion to it in A Knack to Know a Knave, 1604. 'I have given the reader a specimen (in the notes) of the changes made in this play by Ravenscroft; and may add, that when the Empress stabs her child, he has supplied the Moor with the following lines:—

"She has undone me, ev'n in mine own art,
Outdone me in murder, kill'd her own child;
Give it me, I'll eat it."

'It rarely happens that a dramatic piece is altered with the same spirit that it was written; but Titus Andronicus has undoubtedly fallen into the hands of one whose feelings and imagination were congenial with those of the author.

'It was evidently the work of one who was acquainted with Greek and Roman literature. It is likewise deficient in such internal marks as distinguish the tragedies of Shakespeare from those of other writers; I mean that it presents no struggles to introduce the vein of humour so constantly interwoven with the business of his serious dramas. It can neither boast of his striking excellencies, nor of his acknowledged defects; for it offers not a single interesting situation, a natural character, or a string of quibbles, from first to last. That Shakespeare should have written without commanding our attention, moving our passions, or sporting with words, appears to me as improbable as that he should have studiously avoided disagreeable and disagreeable terminations in this play and in no other.

'Let it be likewise remembered that this piece was not published with the name of Shakespeare till after his death. The quartos [of 1600] and 1611 are anonymous.

'Could the use of particular terms, employed in no other of his pieces, be admitted as an argument that he was not its author, more than one of these might be found; among which is pallament for robe, a Latinism, which I have not met with elsewhere in any English writer, whether ancient or modern; though it must have originated from the mint of a scholar. I may add, that Titus Andronicus will be found on examination to contain a greater number of classical allusions, &c. than are scattered over all the rest of the performances on which the seal of Shakespeare is indubitably fixed.—Not to write any more about and about this suspected thing, let me observe, that the glitter of a few passages in it has, perhaps, misled the judgment of those who ought to have known that both sentiment and description are more easily produced than the interesting fabric of a tragedy. Without these advantages many plays have succeeded; and many have failed, in which they have been dealt about with lavish profusion. It does not follow that he who can carve a frieze with minuteness, elegance, and ease, has a conception equal to the extent, propriety, and grandeur of a temple.

'Whatever were the motives of Heming and Condell for admitting this tragedy among those of Shakespeare, all it has gained by their favour is, to be delivered down to posterity with repeated remarks of contempt—a Thersites babbling among heroes, and introduced only to be derided."—Steevens.

SCENE—Rome; and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Rome. Before the Capitol. The Tomb of the Andronici appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft, as in the Senate. Enter, below, SATURNINUS and his Followers, on one side; and BASSIANUS and his Followers on the other; with Drum and Colours.

Saturninus.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms;

And, countrymen, my loving followers,
Plead my successive title¹ with your swords:
I am his first-born son, that was the last
That wore the imperial diadem of Rome;
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age² with this indignity.

1 i. e. my title to the succession. 'The empire being elective and not successive, the emperors in being made profit of their own times.'—Raleigh.

2 Saturninus means his seniority in point of age. In

Ras. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right,—

If ever Bassianus, Caesar's son,
Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
Keep then this passage to the Capitol;
And suffer not dishonour to approach
The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility:
But let desert in pure election shine;
And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS aloft, with the Crown.

Mar. Princes that strive by factions, and by friends,

Ambitiously for rule and empery,—
Know, that the people of Rome, for whom we stand
A special party, have, by common voice,
In election for the Roman empery,
Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius,
For many good and great deserts to Rome;
A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls:
He by the senate is accited¹ home,
From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;
That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
Our enemies' pride: Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—By honour of his name,
Whom, worthily, you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your strength;
Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy nobler brother Titus, and his sons,
And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
And to my fortunes, and the people's favour,
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of BASSIANUS.]

Sat. Friends that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of SATURNIUS.]

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee.—
Open the gates, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes! and me, a poor competitor

[SAT. and BAS. go into the Capitol, and exeunt with Senators, MARCUS, &c.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans, make way; the good Andronicus,
Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumscribed with his sword,
And brought to yoke the enemies of Rome.

Flourish of Trumpets, &c. Enter MUTIUS and MARTIUS; after them two Men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then QUINTUS and LUCIUS. After them, TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TAMORA.

MORA, with ALARBUS, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People following. The Bearers set down the Coffin, and TITUS speaks.

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!

Lo, as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears;
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
Thou great defender of this Capitol,²
Stand gracious to the rights that we intend!
Romans, of five and twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains alive, and dead!
These, that survive, let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.

Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?—
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[The Tomb is opened.]

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O, sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,
That we may hew his limbs, and, on a pile,
Adorn nostrum sacrificium his flesh.
Before this earthly³ prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.⁴

Tit. I give him you; the noblest that survives,
The eldest son of this distressed queen. [Querer,

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious com-
Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion⁵ for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me.
Suffice it not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs, and return,
Captives to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?

O! if to fight for king and commonweal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.

Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?

Draw near them then in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge;

Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient⁶ yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain,
Religiously they ask a sacrifice:

To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shadows that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consumed.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with ALARBUS.]

Tam. O, cruel, irreligious piety!

Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.

Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening frowns.
Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withheld,
The selfsame gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy

4 It was supposed that the ghosts of unburied people appeared to solicit the rites of funeral.

5 i. e. in grief.

6 This verb is used by other old dramatic writers. Thus in Arden of Feversham, 1592:—

'Patient yourself, we cannot help k now'

a subsequent passage Tamora speaks of him as a very young man.

1 Summoned.

2 Jupiter, to whom the Capitol was sacred.

3 Earthly. Ed 1600.

With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent;¹
May favour Tamora, the queen of Goths,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen),
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUISTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky.
Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren,
And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.
[Trumpets sounded, and the Coffins laid in the Tomb.]

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no storms,
No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:

Enter LAVINIA.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!
Luc. In peace and honour live Lord Titus long:

My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears
I render, for my brethren's obsequies:
And at thy feet I kneel with tears of joy
Shed on the earth, for thy return to Rome:
O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome, thou hast thus lovingly reserv'd
The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!—
Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!²

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS, BASILIANUS, and others.

Mar. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,

You that survive, and you that sleep in fame.
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your swords:
But safer triumph is this funeral pomp,
That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,³
And triumphs over chance, in honour's bed.—
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune, and their trust,
This palliant⁴ of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire,
With these our late deceased emperor's sons:
Be candidatus then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits,
Than his, that shakes for age and feebleness:
What? should I don⁵ this robe, and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day?
To-morrow, yield up rule resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And buried one and twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that hold it last.

¹ Theobald says that we should read, 'In her tent;' i. e. in the tent where she and the other Trojan women were kept; for thither Hecuba by a wife had decoyed Polymnestor, in order to perpetrate her revenge. Steevens objects to Theobald's conclusion, that the writer gleaned this circumstance from the Hecuba of Euripides, and says, 'he may have been misled by the passage in Ovid—"vadiat ad artificem;" and therefore took it for granted she found him in his tent.' Yet on an-

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empery.
Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?—

Tit. Patience, Prince Saturnine.

Sat. Romans, do me right;—
Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor:—
Andronicus, 'would thou wert shipp'd to hell
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will feastore to thee
The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves.

Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
But honour thee, and will do till I die;
My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankful be: and thanks, to men
Of noble minds, is honourable meed.

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes here,
I ask your voices, and your suffrages;
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,
That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,
Reflect on Rome, as Titan's rays on earth,
And ripen justice in this commonweal:

Then if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say,—Long live our emperor!
Mar. With voices and applause of every sort,
Patricians, and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor;
And say,—Long live our emperor Saturnine!

[A long Flourish.]
Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day,
I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
And, for an onset, Titus, to advance
Thy name, and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:

Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and, in this match,
I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—
King and commander of our commonweal,
The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord:
Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
Rome shall record; and, when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor;
[To TAMORA.]

To him, that for your honour and your state,
Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose, were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance;
Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome.
Princely shall be thy usage every way.
Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam, he comforts you, other occasion he observes, that the writer has a plain allusion to the Ajax of Sophocles, of which no translation was extant in the time of Shakespeare.

² To 'outlive an eternal date' is, though not philosophical, yet poetical sense. He wishes that her life may be longer than his, and her praise longer than fame.

³ The maxim alluded to is, that no man can be pronounced happy before his death.

⁴ A robe.

⁵ I. e. do on, put it on.

Can make you greater than the queen of Goths.—
Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Law. Not I, my lord; with true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go:
Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.

Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Seizing LAVINIA.]

Tu. How, sir? Are you in earnest then, my lord?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts TAMORA in dumb show.]

Mar. Suum cuique is our Roman justice:

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tu. Traitors, avant! Where is the emperor's guard?

Treason, my lord; Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?

Bas. By him that justly may

Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exeunt MARCUS and BASSANIUS, with LAVINIA.]

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.]

Tu. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tu. What, villain boy!

Barr'st me my way in Rome! [Tit. kills MUT.]

Mut. Help, Lucius, help.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and more than so,
In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tu. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:

My sons would never so dishonour me:

Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will: but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promis'd love. [Exit.]

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,

Nor her, nor thee, nor any of the stock:

I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;

Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,

Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale² of,

But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that foul brag of thine,

That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tu. O, monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece

To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;

One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffe³ in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tu. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,—

That, like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs,

Dost overshine the gallant'st days of Rome,—

How be ye pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,

And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—

I it was a ploy to part a couple who seem to have corresponded in disposition so exactly as Saturninus and Lavinia. Saturninus, who has just promised to espouse her, already wishes he were to choose again; and she who was engaged to Bassanius (whom she afterward marries) expresses no reluctance when her father gives her to Saturninus. Her subsequent rallery to Tamora is of so coarse a nature, that if her tongue had been all she was condemned to lose, perhaps the author (whoever he was) might have escaped censure on the score of poetic justice.—Sterrens.

² A stale here signifies a stalking-horse. To make a stale of any one seems to have meant 'to make them an object of mockery.'

Sith priest and holy water are so near.

And tapers burn so bright, and every thing

In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—

I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,

Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear,

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,

She will a handmaid be to his desires,

A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon:—Lords, accompany

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,

Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:

There shall we consecrate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt SATURNINUS, and his Followers; TA-

MORA, and her Sons; AARON and Goths.]

Tu. I am not bid⁴ to wait upon this bride;—

Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,

Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see, what thou hast done.

In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tu. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—

Nor thou, nor these confederates in the deed

That hath dishonour'd all our family;

Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes,

Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tu. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.

This monument five hundred years hath stood,

Which I have sumptuously re-edified:

Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,

Repose in fame; none basely slain in brawls:—

Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impiety in you:

My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him;

He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tu. And shall! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouch't in any place but here.

Tu. What, would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee

To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tu. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honour thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;

So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mart. He is not with himself:⁵ let us withdraw.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.

[MARCUS and the Sons of TITUS kneel.]

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tu. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter

His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,

That died in honour and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous.

The Greeks, upon advice, did bury Ajax

That slew himself; and wise Laertes son

Did graciously plead for his funerals.⁶

³ To ruffe was to be tumultuous and turbulent. Thus Baret:—'A trouble or ruffing in the common-weale:
procella.'

⁴ I. e. invited.

⁵ 'He is not with himself.' This is much the same sort of phrase as he is beside himself, a genuine English idiom.

⁶ This passage alone would sufficiently convince me that the play before us was the work of one who was conversant with the Greek tragedies in their original language. We have here a plain allusion to the Ajax of Sophocles, of which no translation was extant in the

Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise :—
The dismal'st day is this, that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome !—
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[MUTIUS is put into the Tomb.]

Luc. There lie thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb !—

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius ;
He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.¹

Mar. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,—

How comes it, that the subtle queen of Goths
Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome ?

Tit. I know not, Marcus ; but, I know, it is ;
Whether by device, or no, the heavens can tell :
Is she not then beholden to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far ?
Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, SATURNINUS, attended ; TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and AARON : at the other, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize ;²
God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride.

Bas. And you of yours, my lord : I say no more,
Nor wish no less ; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,
My true betrothed love, and now my wife ?
But let the laws of Rome determine all ;
Meanwhile, I am possess'd of that is mine.

Sat. 'Tis good, sir ; You are very short with us ;
But, if we live, we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life.
Only this much I give you grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This noble gentleman, Lord Titus here,
Is in opinion, and in honour wrong'd ;
That, in the rescue of Lavinia,
With his own hand did slay his youngest son,
In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath
To be controll'd in that he frankly gave :
Receive him then to favour, Saturnine ;
That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,
A father, and a friend, to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds ;
'Tis thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me :
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine !

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora
Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,
Then hear me speak indifferently for all ;
And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What ! madam ! be dishonour'd openly,
And basely put it up without revenge ?

Tam. Not so, my lord ; The gods of Rome fore-fend,

I should be author to dishonour you !
But, on mine honour, dare I undertake
For good Lord Titus' innocence in all,
Whose fury, not dissembled, speaks his griefs :
Then, at my suit, look graciously on him.
Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose.
Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.
My lord, be rul'd by me, be won at last,
Dissemble all your griefs and discontents :
You are but newly planted in your throne ;
Lest then the people, and patricians too,

Aside.

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part
And so supplant us for ingratitude,
(Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,)
Yield at entreats, and then let me alone :
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family,
The cruel father, and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life ;
And make them know, what 'tis to make a queen

Aside.

Kneel in the streets, and beg for grace in vain.

Come, come, sweet emperor,—Come, Andronicus,
Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise ; my empress hath prevail'd,

Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord :
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.

This day all quarrels die, Andronicus ;—
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.—
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor,

That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia ;
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do ; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,

That, what we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tend'ring our sister's honour, and our own.

Mar. That on mine honour here I do protest.

Sat. Away, and talk not ; trouble us no more.—

Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends :

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace ;
I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,
And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults.

Stand up.
Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend ; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.

Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends :

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound, we'll give your grace bon jour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and grace my too. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Rome. Before the Palace. Enter
AARON.

Aar. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot : and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack, or lightning's flash ;
Advanc'd above pale envy's threat'ning reach.

As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glittering coach,
And overlooks the highest-peering hills ;
So Tamora.—

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.

Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch ; whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains ;
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes,

Upon her wit doth earthly honour wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.

time of Shakespeare. In that piece Agamemnon consents at last to allow Ajax the rites of sepulture, and Ulysses is the pleader whose arguments prevail in favour of his remains.—Stevens.

¹ This is evidently a translation of the distich of Ennius—

'Nemo me lacrimulis decoret : nec funera fletu
Fascit quær ? volio vivu' per ora virum.'

² To play a prize was a technical term in the ancient fencing schools.

³ In the quarto of 1600 the stage direction is 'Sounds trumpets, manet Moore.' In the quarto of 1611 the direction is 'Manet Aaron.' and he is before made to enter with Tamora, though he says nothing. This scene ought to continue the first act.—Johnson.

Then is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
Away with slavish words, and servile thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis;—this nymph,
This siren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck, and his commonweal's,
Holloa! what storm is this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, bowing.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd:
And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou dost overween in all:
And so in this, to bear me down with braves.

'Tis not the difference of a year, or two,
Makes me less gracious, those more fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou,

To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace;
And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.

Aar. Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd,
Gave you a dancing-rapier¹ by your side,
Are you so desperate grown, to threaten your friends?
Go to; have your lath glued within your sheath
Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,
Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave? [They draw.

Aar. Why, how now, lords?
So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?
Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge;
I would not for a million of gold,

The cause were known to them it most concerns:
Nor would your noble mother, for much more,
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
For shame, put up.

Dem. Not I: till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and, withal,
Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,
Foul-spoken coward! that thunder'st with thy tongue,

And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say.—

Now by the gods, that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.—
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
It is to jut upon a prince's right?

What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd,
Without contrivance, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware!—an should the empress know
This discord's ground, the music would not please.

1 This was the usual outcry for assistance, when any riot in the street happened.

2 It appears that a light kind of sword, more for show than use, was worn by gentlemen, even when dancing, in the reign of Elizabeth. So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

—no sword worn
But one to dance with.

And Greene in his Quip for an Upsart Courtier:—One of them carrying his cutting sword of choller the other his dancing-rapier of delight.

3 This phrase appears to have been adopted from Virgil, Æneid xi. 333:—

—Proinde tonsa clogeta, solum tibi—

4 Chiron appears to mean, 'that, had he a thousand lives, such was his love for Lavinia, he would propose to venture them all to achieve her.' Thus in the Taming of the Shrew:—

'Tranio, I burn, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.'

5 These two lines occur, with very little variation, in the First Part of King Henry VI.:—

'She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be wou'd.'

Chi. I care not, I, know she and all the world;
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love.⁴

Aar. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be wou'd;⁵

She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
What, man! more water gildeth by the mill⁶

Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:

Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have yet worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.

[Aside

Dem. Then why should he despair, that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?
What, hast thou not full often struck a doe,

And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?⁷
Aar. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch, or so,

Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. 'Would, you had hit it too;
Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.

Why, hark ye, hark ye,—And are you such fools,
To square⁸ for this? Would it offend you then

That both should speed?

Chi. I'faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me,

So I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends; and join for that you jar.

'Tis policy and stratagem must do

That you affect; and so must you resolve;
That what you cannot, as you would, achieve,

You must perform accomplish as you may.
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste

Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.

A speedier course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:

The forest walks are wide and spacious;
And many unfrequented plots there are,

Fitted by kind⁹ for rape and villany:
Single you thither then this dainty doe,

And strike her home by force, if not by words:
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.

Come, come, our empress, with her sacred¹⁰ wit,
To villany and vengeance consecrate,

Will we acquaint with all that we intend;

This circumstance has given rise to a conjecture that the author of the present play was also the writer of the original King Henry VI. Risson says that he 'should take Kyd to have been the author of Titus Andronicus, because he seems to delight in murders and scraps of Latin, though it must be confessed that in the first of those good qualities Marlowe's Jew of Malta may fairly dispute precedence with the Spanish Tragedy.'

6 There is a Scottish proverb, 'Mickle water goes by the miller when he sleeps.' Non omnia molitor quæ fluit unda videt. The subsequent line is also a northern proverb, 'It is safe taking a skive of a cut kaul.'

7 Mr. Holt is willing to infer that Titus Andronicus was one of Shakespeare's early performances, because the stratagems of the profession traditionally given to his youth seem here to have been fresh in the writer's mind. But when we consider how common allusions to sports of the field are in all the writers of that age there seems to be no real ground for the conclusion.

8 Quarrel.

9 By nature.

10 Sacred here signifies accursed; a Latinism.

And she shall file our engines with advice,¹
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, of ears :
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull ;
There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your
turns :

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye,
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fast out nefas, till I find the stream

To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,

*Per Styga, per manes vehor.*² [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.³ A Forest near Rome. A Lodge seen at a distance. Horns, and cry of Hounds heard.
Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, &c.
MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green :
Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince ; and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.
Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To tend the emperor's person carefully :
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns wind a Peal. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, and Attendants.

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty ;—
Madam, to you as many and as good :—
I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you ?

Lav. I say, no ;
I have been broad awake two hours and more.

Sat. Come on, then, horse and chariots let us have,

And to our sport :—Madam, now shall ye see
Our Roman hunting. [To TAMORA.]

Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top.

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound,

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A desert Part of the Forest. Enter
AARON, with a Bag of Gold.

Lar. He, that had wit, would think that I had none,

To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit⁴ it.

Let him, that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know, that this gold must coin a stratagem ;
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany ;

And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
[Hides the Gold.]

That have their aims out of the empress' chest.⁵

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,⁶

1 The allusion is to the operation of the file, which, by giving smoothness, facilitates the motion of the parts of an engine or piece of machinery.

2 These scraps of Latin are taken, though not exactly, from some of Seneca's tragedies.

3 'The division of this play into acts, which was first made in the folio of 1623, is improper. There is here an interval of action, and here the second act ought to have begun.'—Johnson.

4 i. e. posterity

5 "his is obscure It seems to mean only, that they

When every thing doth make a gleeful boast ?

The birds chant melody on every bush ;

The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,

And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground :

Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,

And—whilest the babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,

As if a double hunt were heard at once,—

Let us sit down and mark their yelling noise

And—after conflict, such as was suppos'd

The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,

When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,

And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—

We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,

Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber ;

Whilest hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,

Be unto us, as is a nurse's song

Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Lar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,

Saturn is dominator over mine :

What signifies my deadly standing eye,

My silence, and my cloudy melancholy ?

My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls

Even as an adder, when she doth unroll

To do some fatal execution ?

No, madam, these are no venerable signs ;

Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand

Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.

Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul,

Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,

This is the day of doom for Bassianus ;

His Philomel⁷ must lose her tongue to-day

Thy sons make pillage of her chastity,

And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.

Seest thou this letter ? take it up, I pray thee,

And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll :—

Now question me no more, we are espied ;

Here comes a parcel⁸ of our hopeful booty,

Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life.

Lar. No more, great empress, Bassianus comes :

Be cross with him ; and I'll go fetch thy sons

To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.]

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bas. Who have we here ? Rome's royal empress

Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeming troop ?

Or is it Dian, habited like her ;

Who hath abandoned her holy groves,

To see the general hunting in this forest ?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps !

Had I the power, that, some say, Dian had,

Thy temples should be planted presently

With horns, as was Actæon's ; and the hounds

Should drive upon thy new transformed limbs,

Unmannerly intruder as thou art !

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,

'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in horning ;

And to be doubted, that your Moor and you

Are singled forth to try experiments :

Jove shield your husband from his bounds to-day !

'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimme-rian⁹

Doth make your honour of his body's hue,

Spotted, detested, and abominable.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train

Dismounted from your snow-white goodly steed

And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,

Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,

If foul desire had not conducted you ?

who are to come at this gold of the empress are to suffer by it.—Johnson.

6 Malone remarks, that there is much poetical beauty in this speech of Tamora ; he thinks it the only part of the play which resembles the style of Shakspeare.

7 See Ovid's Metamorphoses, book vi.

8 i. e. a part.

9 Swarth is dusky. The Moor is called Cimærian from the affinity of blackness to darkness.

Laus. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her 'joy her raven-colour'd love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.

Laus. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long:

Good king! to be so mightily abus'd!

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother,

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale? These two have 'tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is:

The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe.
Here never shines the sun,¹ here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.

And, when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand heads, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,²
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.³

No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew;

And leave me to this miserable death.

And then they call'd me, foul adulteress,

Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms

That ever ear did hear to such effect.

And, had you not by wondrous fortune come,

This vengeance on me had they executed:

Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,

Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

Laus. Ay come, Semiramis,⁴—nay, barbarous Tamora!

For no name fits thy nature but thy own!

Tam. Give me thy poniard; you shall know, my boys,

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Dem. Stay, madam, here is more belongs to her;

First, thrash the corn, then after burn the straw:

This minion stood upon her chastity,

Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,

And with that painted hope⁵ braves your mightiness:

And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,

And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when you have the honey you desire,

Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam; we will make that sure.

Come, mistress, now perforce, we will enjoy

That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Laus. O, Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her.

Laus. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory

To see her tears: but be your heart to them,

As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Laus. O, Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's face,—

Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her.

Dem. Listen, fair madam: Let it be your glory

To see her tears: but be your heart to them,

As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Laus. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam?

O, do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee:
The milk, thou suck'd'st from her, did turn to marble;
Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.—
Yet every mother breeds not sons alike;
Do thou entreat her shew a woman pity.

[To CHIRON.]

Chi. What! would'st thou have me prove myself a bastard?

Laus. 'Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark:
Yet I have heard, (O, could I find it now!)
The lion mov'd with pity, did endure

To have his princely paws par'd all away.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,

The whilst their own birds famish in their nests:

O, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,

Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tam. I know not what it means; away with her.

Laus. O, let me teach thee: for my father's sake,

That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Had thou in person ne'er offended me,

Even for his sake am I pitiless:—

Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,

To save your brother from the sacrifice;

But fierce Andronicus would not relent.

Therefore away with her, and use her as you will,

The worse to her, the better lord of me.

Laus. O, Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,

And with thine own hands kill me in this place:

For 'tis not life, that I have begg'd so long;

Poor I was slain, when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou, then? fond woman, let me go.

Laus. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:

O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,

And tumble me into some loathsome pit;

Where never man's eye may behold my body:

Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee:

No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Dem. Away, for thou hast staid us here too long.

Laus. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly creature!

The blot and enemy to our general name!

Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth:—Bring thou her husband:

[Dragging off LAVINIA.]

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

[Exit.]

Tam. Farewell, my sons; see that you make her sure:

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,

Till all the Andronici be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,

And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. Enter AARON with

QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aar. Come on, my lords; the better foot before:

Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,

Where I esp'y'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'e'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; were't not for shame,

Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

[MARTIUS falls into the Pit.]

Aar. Come on, my lords; the better foot before:

Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,

Where I esp'y'd the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, what'e'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; were't not for shame,

Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

[MARTIUS falls into the Pit.]

¹ He had yet been married but one night. The true reading may be 'made her,' i. e. Tamora.

² Rowe seems to have thought on this passage in his 'ane Shore:—'

'This is the house where the sun never dawns,

The bird of night sits screaming o'er its roof,

Grim spectres sweep along the horrid gloom,

And nought is heard but wallings and lamentings.'

³ Hodgehog.

⁴ This is said in fabulous physiology of those that hear the groan of the mandrake when torn up. The same thought, and almost the same expression, occur in Re meo and Juliet.

⁵ The propriety of this address will be best understood by consulting Pliny's Nat. Hist. ch. 42. The incoherence of Semiramis has been already alluded to in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew, Sc. ii.

⁶ Painted hope is only specious hope, or ground of confidence more plausible than solid. Sussex thought that the word hope was interpolated, the sense being complete and the line more harmonious without it.

Quin. What, art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briars;
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?

A very fatal place it seems to me:—

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O, brother, with the dismalst object hurt
That ever eye, with sight, made heart lament.

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here:

That he thereby may give a likely guess,
How these were they that made away his brother.

[Exit AARON.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear:

A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;

My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold

The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise:

O, tell me how it is; for ne'er till now

Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here,

All on a heap like to a slaughter'd lamb,

In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear

A precious ring, that lightens all the hole,¹

Which, like a taper in some monument,

Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,

And shows the ragged entrails of this pit:

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,

When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.

O, brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—

If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—

Out of this fell devouring receptacle,

As hateful as Cocyus' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,

I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb

Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not loose

again,

Till thou art here aloft, or I below:

Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee.

[Falls in.]

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here.

And what he is, that now is leap'd into it.

Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend

Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus;

Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,

To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know, thou dost but jest:

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;

'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,

But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS ANDRONICUS, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord, the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing grief.

¹ Old naturalists assert that there is a gem called a carbuncle, which emits not reflected but native light. Boyle believed in the reality of its existence. It is often alluded to in ancient fable. Thus in the Gesta Romanorum:—"He farther beheld and saw a carbuncle, that lighted all the house." And Drayton in The Muse's Elysium:—

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound;

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ.

[Giving a Letter.]

The complot of this timeless^a tragedy;

And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold

In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] As if we miss to meet him hand somely,—

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,—

Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;

Thou know'st our meaning: Look for thy reward

Among the nettles at the elder tree,

Which overshadows the mouth of that same pit,

Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.

Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.

O, Tamora! was ever heard the like?

This is the pit, and this the elder tree

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

[Showing it.]

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [To Tit.] 'ell curse of bloody kind,

Have here bereft my brother of his life:—

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison;

There let them bide, until we have devis'd

Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit? O, wondrous thing!

How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed,

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,

Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see, it is apparent.—

Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail:

For by my father's reverend tomb, I vow,

They shall be ready at your highness' will,

To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them: see, thou follow me.

Some bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:

Let them not speak a word, the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,

That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king;

Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come: stay not to talk with them. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE V. The same. Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, ravished; her Hands cut off, and Tongue cut out.

Dem. So now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,

Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee.

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so:

And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.

Dem. See how with signs and tokens she can scowl.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash:

And so let's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An 'twere my case, I should go hang myself.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord.

[Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.]

^a Is that admired mighty stone, The carbuncle that's named; Which from it such a flaming light And radiancy ejecteth, That in the very darkest night The eye to it directeth.

² I. e. untimely. So in King Richard II.:—

'The bloody office of his timeless end.'

Enter MARCUS.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?

Cousin, a word; Where is your husband?—If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!

*If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—
Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches? those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in;*

*And might not gain so great a happiness,
As half thy love? Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy henny breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath defour'd thee;
And, lest thou should'st detect him, cut thy tongue.
Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
And notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face,
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so?
O, that I knew thy heart; and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him to ease my mind!
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue;
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A craftier Tereus, cousin, hast thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O, had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life:
Or, had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,
He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
Come, let us go, and make thy father blind:
For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
O, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exeunt.]*

ACT III.

SCENE I. Rome. A Street. Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution; TITUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!
For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought!
For two and twenty sons I never wept,
Because they died in honour's lofty bed.
For these, good tribunes, in the dust I write

[Throwing himself on the Ground.]
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears.
Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.
[Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, &c. with the Prisoners.]

1 'If this be a dream, I would give all my possessions to be delivered from it by waking.'

2 The old copies read, 'two ancient rivers.' The emendation is by Sir T. Hanmer

O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns;
Than youthful April shall with all his showers;
In summer's drought, I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS, with his Sword drawn.

O, reverend tribunes! gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.

Luc. O, noble father, you lament in vain;
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead:
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did mark,
They would not pity me; yet plead I must,
All bootless unto them.

Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And, were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.
A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones:

A stone is silent, and offendeth not;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death:
For which attempt, the judges have pronounc'd
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O, happy man! they have befriended thee.
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: How happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banish'd?
But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA

Mar. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break!
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me! this object kills me!

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her:—

*Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight!*
What fool hath added water to the sea?

*Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st,
And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds.—
Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;
And they have nurs'd this wo, in feeding life;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use;
Now, all the service I require of them
Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—
'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.*

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Mar. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,¹

That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage:
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Luc. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

3 This piece furnishes scarce any resemblances to Shakespeare's works; this one expression, however, is found in his Venus and Adonis:—

Once more the engine of her thoughts began

Mar. O, thus I found her, straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer,
That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he, that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are gone;
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man;
And here, my brother, weeping at my woes;
But that, which gives my soul the greatest spurn,
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have maddened me; What shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so?

Thou hast no hands, to wipe away thy tears;
Nor tongue, to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband he is dead: and for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this:—
Look, Marcus! ah, son Lucius, look on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks; as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her husband:

Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,
Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.—
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;

Or make some sign how I may do these ease:
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks
How they are stain'd? like meadows, yet not dry
With miry slime left on them by a flood?

And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And make a brine pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of further misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears; for, at your grief,

See, how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece;—good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine.

For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs:
Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say

That to her brother which I said to thee;

His napkin with his true tears all bewet,

Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.

O, what a sympathy of woe is this!

As far from help as limbo¹ is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—That, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he, for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive;
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?

With all my heart, I'll send the emperor
My hand:

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father; for that noble hand of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn:
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended
Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battleaxe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?

O, none of both but are of high desert:

My hand hath been but idle; let it serve

To ransom my two nephews from their death;

Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc.

By heaven, it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more; such wither'd herbs as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's,

Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar.

But I will use the axe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS and MARCUS.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both;

Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,

And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—

But I'll deceive you in another sort, [Aside.]

And that you'll say, ere half an hour can pass.

[He cuts off TITUS'S Hand.]

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now, stay your strife: what shall be, is despatch'd.—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:

Tell him it was a hand that ward'd him

From thousand dangers; bid him bury it;

More hath it merited, that let it have.

As for my sons, say, I account of them

As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;

And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand,

Look by-and-by to have thy sons with thee:—

Their heads, I mean.—O, how this villany [Aside.]

Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it!

Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,

Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit.]

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven,

And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:

If any power pities wretched tears,

To that I call:—What, wilt thou kneel with me?

[To LAVINIA.]

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers;

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,

And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds,

When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O! brother, speak with possibilities,

And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?

Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,

Then into limits could I bind my woes:

When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'er flow?

If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,

Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swoll'n face?

And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?

1 The Limbus patrum, as it was called, is a place that the schoolmen supposed to be in the neighbourhood of hell, where the souls of the patriarchs were detained, and those good men who died before our Saviour's resurrection. Milton gives the name of Limbo to his Paradise of Fools.

2 It appears from Grose on Antient Armour, that a casque was a kind of close helmet, probably so named from casquetel, old French.

I am the sea; bark, how her sighs do blow
 She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
 Then must my sea be moved with her sighs;
 Then must my earth with her continual tears
 Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd:
 For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
 But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
 Then give me leave; for losers will have leave
 To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with two Heads and a Hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
 For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.
 Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;
 And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back;
 Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd:
 That wo is me to think upon thy woes,
 More than remembrance of my father's death.

[Exit.]

Mar. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
 And be my heart an ever-burning hell!
 These miseries are more than may be borne!
 To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,
 But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat!
 That ever death should let life bear his name,
 Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

[LAVINIA kisses him.]

Mar. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless,
 As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Mar. Now, farewell, flattery: Die, Andronicus;
 Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two son's heads;
 Thy warlike hand: thy mangled daughter here;
 Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
 Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,
 Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
 Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs:
 Rent off thy silver hair, thy other hand
 Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
 The closing up of our most wretched eyes!
 Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
 Besides this sorrow is an enemy,
 And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
 And make them blind with tributary tears;
 Then which way shall I find revenge's cave?
 For these two heads do seem to speak to me;
 And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,
 Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
 Even in their throats that have committed them.
 Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
 You heavy people, circle me about;
 That I may turn me to each one of you,
 And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
 The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a head;
 And in this hand the other will I bear:
 Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
 Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.
 As for thee boy, go, get thee from my sight;
 Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:
 Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there:
 And, if you love me, as I think you do,
 Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA.]

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
 The woful'st man that ever liv'd in Rome!
 Farewell, proud Rome! till Lucius come again,
 He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
 Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;

O, 'would, thou wert as thou 'fore hast been!
 But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
 But in oblivion, and hateful griefs,
 If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
 And make proud Satorninus and his empress
 Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
 Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
 To be reveng'd on Rome and Satorninus. [Exit.]

SCENE II.¹ A Room in Titus's House. A Bonquet set out. Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and young LUCIUS, a Boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look, you eat no more Than will preserve just so much strength in us
 As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
 Marcus, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot;²
 Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
 And cannot passionate³ our tenfold grief
 With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
 Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
 And when my heart, all mad with misery,
 Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
 Then thus I thump it down.—

Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

[TV LAVINIA.]

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
 Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
 Wound it with sighing, girl; kill it with groans;
 Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
 And just against thy heart make thou a hole;
 That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall,
 May run into that sink, and, soaking in,
 Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
 Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote al ready?

Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.
 What violent hands can she lay on her life?
 Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;
 To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er,
 How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
 O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands;
 Lest we remember still, that we have none.—

Fie, fie, how frantically I square my talk!
 As if we should forget we had no hands,
 If Marcus did not name the word of hands!—
 Come, let's fall to: and, gentle girl, eat this:—
 Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says;—
 I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:—
 She says she drinks no other drink but tears,
 Brew'd with her sorrows, mesh'd⁴ upon her cheeks:
 Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
 In thy dumb action will I be as perfect
 As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
 Thou shalt not sigh nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
 Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
 But I, of these, will wrest an alphabet,
 And, by still practice, learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd
 Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling: thou art made a tears,
 And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[MARCUS strikes the Dish with a Knife.]
 What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd, my lord; a fly.
Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;
 Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
 A deed of death, done on the innocent,
 Becomes not Titus' brother: Get thee gone;
 I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

¹ This scene, which does not contribute any thing to the action, yet seems to be by the same author as the rest, is wanting in the quarto copies of 1600 and 1611, but found in the folio of 1623.

² So in The Tempest:—

'sitting;
 His arms in this sad knot.'

³ This obsolete verb is likewise found in Spenser:—

'Great pleasure mix'd with pitiful regard,
 That godly king and queen did passionate'

⁴ So in Trifolius and Cressida:—

'—thou
 Handfast in thy discourse, O that her hand'

⁵ A very coarse allusion to brewing.

Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother? How would he hang his slender gilded wings, And buzz lamenting doings in the air? Poor harmless fly! That, with his pretty buzzing melody, Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd him.

Mar. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-favour'd fly, Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O, Then pardon me for reprehending thee, For thou hast done a charitable deed. Give me thy knife, I will insult on him; Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor, Come hither purposely to poison me.— There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.— Ah, sirrah!¹

Yet I do think we are not brought so low, But that, between us, we can kill a fly, That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Mar. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him, He takes false shadows for true substances.

Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me: I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.— Come, boy, and go with me; thy sight is young, And thou shalt read, when mine begins to dazzle.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Before Titus's House.
Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter Young LUCIUS, LAVINIA running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia Follows me every where, I know not why:— Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes! Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Mar. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thine aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did.

Mar. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius:—Somewhat doth she mean:

See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither would she have thee go with her. Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee, Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.²

Canst thou not guess wherefore she pines thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess, Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her: For I have heard my grandsire say full oft, Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read that Hecuba of Troy Ran mad through sorrow: That made me to fear; Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did, And would not, but in fury, fright my youth: Which made me down to throw my books, and fly; Causeless, perhaps: But pardon me, sweet aunt: And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go, I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Mar. Lucius, I will.

[LAVINIA turns over the Books which LUCIUS has let fall.]

Tit. How now, Lavinia?—Marcus, what means this?

Some book there is that she desires to see:—

Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.— But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd; Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.— Why lifts she up her arms in sequence³ thus?

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than one

Confederate in the fact:—Ay, more there was:— Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she toseth so?

Boy. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis; My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone, Perhaps she cull'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see, how busily she turns the leaves! Help her:—

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?

This is the tragic tale of Philomel, And treats of Tereus' treason, and his rape?

And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.
Mar. See, brother, see; note how she quotes⁴ the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl, Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was, Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?— See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, (O, bad we never, never, hunted there!) Pattern'd by that the poet here describes, By nature made for murders, and for rapes.

Mar. O, why should nature build so foul a den, Unless the gods delight in tragedies!

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed: Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst, That left the camp to sin in Lucrece' bed?

Mar. Sit down, sweet niece;—brother, sit down by me.—

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury, Inspire me, that I may this treason find!— My lord, look here:—Look here, Lavinia: This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst, This after me, when I have writ my name Without the help of any hand at all.

[He writes his Name with his Staff, and guides it with his Feet and Mouth.]

Curs'd be that heart, that forc'd us to this shift!— Write thou, good niece: and here display, at last, What God will have discover'd for revenge! Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain, That we may know the traitors and the truth!

[She takes the Staff in her Mouth, and guides it with her Stumps, and writes.]

Tit. O, do you read, my lord what she hath writ? Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius.

Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. *Magne Dominator poli,*⁵

Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Mar. O, calm thee, gentle lord! although, I know, There is enough written upon this earth, To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts, And arm the minds of infants to exclaims.

My lord, kneel down with me: Lavinia, kneel; And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope; And swear with me,—as with the woful feere,⁶ And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame, Lord Junius Brutus swears for Lucrece' rape,— That we will prosecute, by good advice, Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths, And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

¹ Stevens conjectures that the words 'and mother' should be omitted. Elson proposes to read the line thus:—

² But! How if that fly had a father, brother?

³ This was formerly not a disrespectful expression. Poins uses the same address to the Prince of Wales in King Henry IV. Part I. Act I. Sc. 2.

⁴ Tully's Treatise on Eloquence, entitled Orator.

⁵ Succession.

⁶ To quote, is to observe.

⁷ Magne Regnator Deum, &c. is the exclamation of Hippolytus when Phædra discovers the secret of her incestuous passion, in Seneca's Tragedy.

⁸ Feere signifies a companion, and here metaphorically a husband, as in the old romance of Sir Eglamour of Artois, sig. A 4:

⁹ Christabel, your daughter free, When shall she have a feere?

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you knew how,
But if you hurt these bear-whelps, then beware :
The dam will wake ; and, if she wind you once,
She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And, when he sleeps, will she do what she list.
You're a young huntsman, Marcus ; let it alone ;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad¹ of steel will write these words,
And lay it by : the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sibyl's leaves, abroad,²
And where's your lesson then ?—Boy, what say you ?

Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe
For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.

Mar. Ay, that's my boy ! thy father hath full oft
For this ungrateful country done the like.

Boy. And, uncle, so will I, an if I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury ;
Lucius, I'll fit thee ; and, withal, my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents, that I intend to send them both :
Come, come ; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou
not ?

Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grand-sire.

Tit. No, boy, not so ; I'll teach thee another course.

Lavinia, come :—Marcus, look to my house ;
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court ;
Ay, marry, will we, sir : and we'll be waited on.

[Exeunt Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.]

Mar. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him ?
Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy ;
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield :
But yet so just, that he will not revenge :—
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus ! [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Aaron, Chiron, and Demetrius, at one Door ; at another Door, Young Lucius, and an Attendant, with a Bundle of Weapons, and Verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius ;
He hath some message to deliver to us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus ;—
And pray the Roman gods confound you both.

[Aside.]
Dem. Gramercy,³ lovely Lucius ; What's the news ?

Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that's the news,
For villains mark'd with rape. [Aside.] May it
please you,

My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome ; for so he bade me say ;
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well :
And so I leave you both, [aside] like bloody villains. [Exeunt Boy and Attendant.]

Dem. What's here ? A scroll ; and written round about ?

Let's see ;
*Integer vita, scelerisque purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.*

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace ; I know it well :
I read it in the grammar long ago.

1 A gad, in Anglo-Saxon, signified the point of a spear. It is here used for a similar pointed instrument.

2 — Folius tantum ne carmina manda,
Ne turbata violent rapidis ludibria ventis.

Æn. vi. 75.

Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace :—right, you have it.

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass !
Here's no sound jest !¹ the old man hath found their guilt ;
And sends the weapons wrapp'd about
with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.

But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.
But let her rest in her unrest awhile.—

And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height ?
It did me good, before the palace-gate
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, Lord Demetrius ?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly ?

Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here lacks but your mother for to say amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.

Dem. Come, let us go : and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aar. Pray to the devils ; the gods have given us o'er. [Aside. Flourish.]

Dem. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish thus ?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Dem. Soft ; who comes here ?

Enter a Nurse, with a Black-a-moor Child in her Arms.

Nur. Good morrow, lords :
O, tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor ?

Aar. Well, more, or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is : and what with Aaron now ?

Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone !

Now help, or woe betide thee evermore !

Aar. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep ?
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms ?

Nur. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye,
Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace ;
She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aar. To whom ?

Nur. I mean, she's brought to bed.

Aar. Well, God
Give her good rest ! What hath he sent her ?

Nur. A devil.

Aar. Why, then she's the devil's dam ; a joyful issue.

Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful
issue :

Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.

The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aar. Out, out, you whore ! is black so base a hue ?
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure.

Dem. Villain, what hast thou done ?

Aar. Done ! that which thou
Canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Dem. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice !
Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend !

Chi. It shall not live.

Aar. It shall not die.

Nur. Aaron, it must : the mother wills it so.

Aar. What, must it, nurse ? then let no man but I,
Do execution on my flesh and blood.

3 I. e. grand merci ; great thanks.

4 This mode of expression was common formerly.
So in King Henry IV. Part I. :—' Here's no fine villany !'

Dem. I'll broach¹ the tadpole on my rapier's point;

Nurse. give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aar. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up,

[Takes the Child from the Nurse, and draws.]

Stay, murderous villains! will you kill your brother?

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,

That shone so brightly when this boy was got,

He dies upon my scymetar's sharp point,

That touches this my first-born son and heir!

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus,²

With all his threatening band of Typhon's brood,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,

Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what; ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys!

Ye white-lim'd walls! ye alehouse painted signs!

Coal black is better than another hue,

In that it scorns to bear another hue:

For all the water in the ocean

Can never turn a swart's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood.

Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own; excuse it how she cast.

Dem. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;

The vigour, and the picture of my youth:

This, before all the world, do I prefer;

This, mangle all the world, will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.³

Nur. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.⁴

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears:

Fie, treacherous hue! that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the heart!⁵

Here's a young lad fram'd of another leer:⁶

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father;

As who should say, Old lad, I am thine own.

He is your brother, lords; sensibly fed

Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;

And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,

He is enfranchised and come to light:

Nay, he's your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy advice;

Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.

My son and I will have the wind of you:

Keep there: Now talk at pleasure of your safety.

[They sit on the Ground.]

Dem. How many women saw this child of his?

Aar. Why, so, brave lords; When we all join in league,

I am a lamb: but if you brave the Moor,

The chafed bear, the mountain lioness,

The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms.—

But, say again, how many saw the child?

Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,

And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:

Two may keep counsel, when the third's away:⁷

Go to the empress; tell her, this I said:—

[Stabbing her.]

Weke, weke!—so cries a pig, prepar'd to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore

didst thou this?

¹ In Luce's Dominion, by Marlowe, a play in its style bearing a near resemblance to Titus Andronicus, Eleazar, the Moor, a character of unmingled ferocity, like

Aaron, and, like him, the paramour of a royal mistress, exclaims:—

— Run, and with a voice

Erected high as mine, say thus, thus threaten

To Roderigo and the Cardinal,

Seek no queens here; I'll broach them, if they do,

Upon my falchion's point.

² A giant, the son of Titan and Terra.

³ A. this foul illegitimate child. So in King John—

— No escape of Nature.

Aar. O, lord, sir, 'tis a deed of policy:

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours?

A long-tongu'd babbling gossip? no, lords, no.

And now be it known to you my full intent.

Not far, one Muliteus lives,⁴ my countryman.

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed;

His child is like to her, fair as you are:

Go pack⁵ with him, and give the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all;

And how by this their child shall be advanc'd

And be received for the emperor's heir,

And substituted in the place of mine,

To calm this tempest whirling in the court;

And let the emperor dandle him for his own.

Hark ye, lords, ye see, that I have given her physick,

[Pointing to the Nurse.]

And you must needs bestow her funeral;

The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms:

This done, see that you take no longer days,

But send the midwife presently to me.

The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,

Then let the ladies tattle what they please.

Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air

With secrets.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,

Herself, and hers, are highly bound to thee.

[Exit DEM. and CHI. bearing off the Nurse.]

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow fies;

There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,

And secretly to greet the empress' friends.—

Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you

hence;

For it is you that puts us to our shifts:

I'll make you feed on berries, and on roots,

And feed on ords and whey, and suck the goat,

And cabin in a cave; and bring you up

To be a warrior, and command a camp. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A public Place. Enter

TITUS, bearing ARROUS, with Letters at the ends of them; with him MARCUS, Young LUCIUS, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come;—Kinsmen, this is the way:—

Sir boy, now let me see your archery;

Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight:

Terras Astrae reliquit:

Be you remember'd, Marcus, she's gone, she's fled

Sir, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets;

Happily you may find her in the sea;

Yet there's as little justice as at land:—

No; Publius and Sempronius, you must do it;

'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,

And pierce the inmost centre of the earth:

Then, when you come to Pluto's region,

I pray you deliver him this petition:

Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid:

And that it comes from old Andronicus,

Shaken with sorrows in ungrateful Rome.—

Ah, Rome!—Well, well; I made thee miserable,

What time I threw the people's suffrages

On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.—

Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,

And leave you not a man of war unsearch'd;

This wicked emperor may have shipp'd her hence,

And, kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Marc. O, Publius, is not this a heavy case,

To see thy noble uncle thus distract?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns,

⁴ I. e. ignominy.

⁵ Thus also in Othello:—

'They are close denotements working from the heart.'

⁶ Complexion.

⁷ This proverb is introduced in Romeo and Juliet,

Act II.

⁸ The word three, which is wanting in the old copies, was supplied by Rowe. Steevens thinks Muliteus a corruption for 'Muly three.'

⁹ To pack is to contrive insidiously. So in King

Learn:—

'Snuffs and packings of the duke's'

By day and night to attend him carefully ;
And feed his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.
Join with the Goths ; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius, how now ? how now, my masters ?
What,

Have you met with her ?

Pub. No, my good lord : but Pisto sends you word

If you will have revenge from hell, you shall :
Ma^{ny}, for Justice she is so employ'd,
He thinks, with Jove in heaven, or some where else,
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong, to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.—
Marcus, we are but shrubs, no cedars we ;
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclop's size :
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back ;
Yet wrung with wrongs, more than our backs can bear :

And sith there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven ; and move the gods,
To send down justice for to wreak¹ our wrongs :
Come, to this gear.² You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the Arrows.]

Ad Jovem, that's for you :—Here, ad Apollinam.—

Ad Martem, that's for myself ;—

Here, boy, to Pallas :—Here, to Mercury :
To Saturn, Caius,³ not to Saturnine.—
You were as good to shoot against the wind.—
To it, boy. Marcus, loose you when I bid :
O' my word, I have written to effect ;
There's not a god left unsolicited.

Mar. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court :⁴

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said, Lucius !

Good boy, in Virgo's lap ; give it Pallas.

Mar. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon ;
Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha ! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done ?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord : when Publius shot,

The bull being gall'd, gave Arius such a knock,
That down fell both the ram's horns in the court ;
And who should find them but the empress' villain ?
She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose

But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes : God give your lordship joy.

Enter a Clown, with a Basket and two Pigeons.

News, news from heaven ! Marcus, the post is come.

Sirrah, what tidings ? have you any letters ?

Shall I have justice ? what says Jupiter ?

Cl. Ho ! the gibbet-maker ? he says, that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hang'd till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee ?

Cl. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter ; I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier ?

Cl. Ay, of my pigeons, sir ; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven ?

1 Revenge.

2 Gear is here put for manner, business.

3 Caius appears to have been one of the kinsmen of Titus. Publius and Caius are again mentioned, Act v. Sc. 2. Steevens would read Cælius, as there was a Roman deity of that name.

4 In the ancient ballad, Titus Andronicus's Complaint, is the following passage :—

'Then past relief I up and downe did goe,
And with my teares wrote in the dust my woe :
I shot my arrowes towards heaven hie,
And for revenge to hell did often cry.'

Cl. From heaven ? alas, sir, I never came there : God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal plebe,⁵ to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Mar. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be, to serve for your oration ; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace ?

Cl. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither : make no more ado, But give your pigeons to the emperor : By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Hold, hold ;—mean while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me a pen and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication ?

Cl. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach, you must kneel ; then kiss his foot ; then deliver up your pigeons ; and then look for your reward, I'll be at hand, sir : see you do it bravely.

Cl. I warrant you, sir ; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife ? Come, let me see it.

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration ;

For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant :—

And when thou hast given it to the emperor, Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Cl. God be with you, sir ; I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let's go ;—Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Before the Palace. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, CHERON, DEMETRIUS, Lords, and others ; SATURNINUS with the Arrows in his Hand that TITUS shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these Wan ever seen

An emperor of Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, confronted thus : and, for the extent Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt ?

My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,
However these disturbers of our peace Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the wilful sons Of old Andronicus. And what as if His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his weakness,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness ?

And now he writes to heaven for his redress : See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury ; This to Apollo ; this to the god of war :

Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome ! What's this, but libelling against the senate,
And blazing our injustice every where ?

A goodly humour, is it not, my lords ? As who would say, in Rome no justice were.

But, if I live, his feigned ecstasies Shall be no shelter to these outrages :

But he and his shall know, that justice lives In Saturninus' health ; whom, if she sleep,

He'll so awake, as she in fury shall Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,
Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,
The effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,
Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scar'd his heart ;

And rather comfort his distressed plight,

Supposing the ballad to have been written before the play, this may be only a metaphorical expression, taken from Psalm lxxv. 3 :—'They shoot out their arrows, even bitter words.'

5 The Clown means to say, plebeian tribune ; i. e. a tribune of the people. Hamner supposes that he means tribunus plebe.

6 Equal.

Than prosecute the meanest, or the best,
For these contempts. Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to gloze¹ with all: [Aside.]
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,
Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

Enter Clowns.

How now, good fellow? would'st thou speak with us?
Clow. Yea, forsooth, an your mastership be imperial.
Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.
Clow. 'Tis he.—God, and saint Stephen, give you good den:—I have brought you a letter, and a couple of pigeons here. [Sat. reads the Letter.]
Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.
Clow. How much money must I have?
Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.
Clow. Hang'd! By'r lady, then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded.]

Sat. Despiteful and intolerable wrongs!
Shall I endure this monstrous villany?
I know from whence this same device proceeds;
May this be borne?—as if his traitorous sons,
That died by law for murder of our brother,
Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.—
Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor age, nor honour, shall shape privilege:
For this proud mock, I'll be thy slaughterman;
Sly frantic wretch, that holp'st to make me great,
In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter EMILIUS.

What news with thee, Emilius?
Emil. Arm, arm, my lords; Rome never had more cause!

The Goths have gather'd head; and with a power
Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;
Who threatens, in course of this revenge, to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?
These tidings nip me; and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms.
Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:
'Tis he the common people love so much;
Myself hath often overheard them say
(When I have walk'd like a private man)
That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,
And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius:
And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious,² like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that quails do fly in it?
The eagle suffers little birds to sing,
And is not careful what they mean thereby;
Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,
He can at pleasure stint³ their melody:
Even so may'st thou the giddy men of Rome.
Then cheer thy spirit; for know, thou emperor,
I will enchant the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous,
Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep;
When as the one is wounded with the bait,
The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then be will:
For I can smooth and fill his aged ear

With golden promises; that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.—
Go thou before, be our ambassador; [To Emil.]
Say, that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting,
Even at his father's house, the old Andronicus.
Sat. Emilius, do this message honourably:
And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best.

Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually.

[Exit EMILIUS.]

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper with him all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successfully, and plead to him.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Plains near Rome. Enter LUCIUS, and Goths, with Drum and Colours.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends,
I have received letters from great Rome,
Which signify, what hate they bear their emperor,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
Imperious, and impatient of your wrongs;
And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath,⁴
Let him make treble satisfaction.

1 Goth. Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus,

Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort;
Whose high exploits, and honourable deeds,
Ingrateful Rome requites with foul contempt,
Be bold in us: we'll follow where thou lead'st,—
Like stinging bees in hottest summer's day,
Led by their master to the flower'd fields,—
And be avenged on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.
But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth, leading AARON, with his Child in his Arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,

To gaze upon a ruinous monastery;⁵
And as I earnestly did fix mine eye
Upon the wasted building, suddenly
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noise; when soon I heard
The crying babe controll'd with this discourse:
Peace, tawny slave; half me, and half thy dam!
*Did not thy hus bewray whose brat thou art,
Had nature lent thee but thy mother's look,
Villain, thou might'st have been an emperor:
They never do beget a coal-black calf.
Peace, villain, peace!*—even thus he rates the babe,
For I must bear thee to a trusty Goth;
Who, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,
Will hold thee dearer for thy mother's sake.
With this, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
Surpris'd him suddenly; and brought him hither,
To use as you think needful of the man.

Luc. O, worthy Goth! this is the incarnate devil,
That robb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the pearl that pleas'd your empress' eye;⁶

chronology, that no very conclusive argument can be deduced from the particular absurdity of these anachronisms relative to the authenticity of Titus Andronicus. And yet the ruined monastery, the popish tricks, &c. that Aaron talks of, and especially the French salutation from the mouth of Titus, are altogether so very much out of place, that I cannot persuade myself that even our hasty poet could have been guilty of their insertion, or would have permitted them to remain, had he corrected the performance of another.⁷—Stevens.
7 Alluding to the proverb, 'A black man is a pearl in a fair woman's eye.'

1 Flatter.

2 See note on Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. Sc. 5; and Cymbeline, Act iv. Sc. 2.

3 I. e. stop their melody. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

—'I stilled, and cried—ay.'

4 K by honey-stalks river flowers are meant, it is an error to suppose that they produce the rot in sheep. Cows and oxen will indeed overcharge themselves with clover and die.

5 Strath is harm.

6 'Shakespeare has so perpetually offended against

And here's the base fruit of his burning lust.—
Say, wall-eyed slave, whither would'st thou convey
This growing image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speak? What! deaf? No; not a word?

A halter, soldiers; hang him on this tree,
And by his side his fruit of bastardy.

Arc. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood.

Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good.—
First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul withal.
Get me a ladder.

[A Ladder is brought, which AARON is obliged to ascend.]

Arc. Lucius, save the child;

And bear it from me to the empress.
If thou do this, I'll show thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to hear:
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
I'll speak no more; But vengeance rot you all!

Luc. Say on; and, if it please me which thou speak'st,

Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.

Arc. An if it please thee? why, assure thee,
Lucius,

'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason; villainies
Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd:¹
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say, thy child shall live.

Arc. Swear, that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no god;

That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Arc. What if I do not? as, indeed, I do not;
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience;
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,—
Therefore I urge thy oath:—For that, I know,
An idiot holds his bauble² for a god,
And keeps the oath, which by that god he swears;
To that I'll urge him:—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god soe'er it be,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverence,—
To save my boy, to nourish and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god, I swear, to thee I will.

Arc. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O, most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Arc. Tut, Lucius! this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon:
'Twas her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
And cut her hands; and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Arc. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd;
and 'twas

Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Arc. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them!
That coddling³ spirit had they from their mother,
As sure a card as ever won the set:

1 i. e. performed in a manner exciting commiseration.
2 Stevens thinks that the allusion is to a custom mentioned in Genesis, xxiv. 9.

3 i. e. lascivious.

4 That love of bed-sports.

5 An allusion to bull-dogs; whose generosity and courage are always shown by meeting the bull in front.

6 Amongst the dogs and bears he goes.

Where, while he skipping cries—To head,—to head!

Darville's Epigrams.

7 Perhaps Young had this speech in his thoughts when he made his Moor say:—

'I urg'd Don Carlos to resign his mistress;

I forg'd the letter; I dispos'd the picture;

I hated, I despis'd, and I destroy.'

That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at head.—
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay:
I wrote the letter that thy father found,⁴
And hid the gold within the letter mention'd,
Confederate with the queen and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?
I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand;
And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.
I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his;
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swoonded⁵ almost at my pleasing tale,
And, for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What! canst thou say all this, and never blush?

Arc. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Arc. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day (and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse,)

Wherein I did not some notorious ill;
As kill a man, or else devise his death;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself:
Set deadly enmity between two friends;
Make poor men's cattle break their necks;
Set fire on barns and haystacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved, in Roman letters,
Let not your sorrow die though I am dead.

Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;

And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.⁶

Luc. Bring down the devil; for he must not die⁷
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Arc. If there be devils, 'would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire;
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.—

Enter EMILIUS.

Welcome, Æmilius, what's the news from Rome?
Emil. Lord Lucius, and yea princes of the Goths.

The Roman emperor greets you all by me:

And, for he understands you are in arms,

He craves a parley at your father's house,

Willing you to demand your hostages,

And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

1 Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Æmilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March away.¹⁰ [Exeunt.]

7 The verb to swoond, which we now write swoon was anciently in common use.

8 Marlowe has been supposed to be the author of this play; and whoever will read the conversation between Barabas and Rhimoro, in the Jew of Malta, Act ii. and compare it with these sentences of Aaron, will perceive much reason for the opinion.

9 It appears from these words that the audience were entertained with part of the apparatus of an execution, and that Aaron was mounted on a ladder, as ready to be turned off.

10 Perhaps this is a stage direction crept into the text.

SCENE II. Rome. Before Titus's House. Enter TAMORA, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, disguised.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment, I will encounter with Andronicus ; And say, I am Revenge, sent from below, To join with him and right his heinous wrongs. Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps, To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge ; Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him, And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.]

Enter TITUS, above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation ? Is it your trick, to make me ope the door ; That so my sad decrees may fly away, And all my study be to no effect ?

You are deceiv'd : for what I mean to do, See here, in bloody lines I have set down ; And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No ; not a word : How can I grace my talk, Wanting a hand to give it action ? Thou hast the odds of me, therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou would'st at talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad ; I know thee well enough : Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines ;

Witness these trenches, made by grief and care ; Witness the tiring day, and heavy night ; Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well For our proud empress, mighty Tamora : Is not thy coming for my other hand ?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora ; She is thy enemy, and I thy friend : I am Revenge ; sent from the infernal kingdom, To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind, By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes. Come down, and welcome me to this world's light ; Confer with me of murder and of death : There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place, No vast obscurity, or misty vale, Where bloody murder, or detested rape, Can couch for fear, but I will find them out ; And in their ears tell them my dreadful name, Revenge, which makes the foul offender quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge ? and art thou sent to me, To be a torment to mine enemies ?

Tam. I am ; therefore come down and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee. Lo, by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stands ; Now give some 'surance that thou art Revenge. Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels ; And then I'll come, and be thy wagoner, And whirl along with thee about the globes. Provide thee proper palfreys, black as jet, To hale thy vengeful wagon swift away, And find out murderers in their guilty caves : And, when thy car is loaden with their heads, I will dismount, and by the wagon wheel Trot, like a servile footman, all day long ; Even from Hyperion's rising in the east, Until his very downfall in the sea. And day by day I'll do this heavy task, So thou destroy Rapine¹ and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are these² thy ministers ? what are they call'd ?

Tam. Rapine and Murder ; therefore called so, 'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are !

And you the empress ! But we worldly men

¹ Rape and rapine appear to have been sometimes used anciently as synonymous terms. Gower, De Confessione Amantis, lib. v. ver. 116, uses rapyne in the same sense :—

'For if thou be of suche covine
To get of love by rapyne,
Thy love,' &c.

Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes. O, sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee : And, if one arm's embracement will content thee, I will embrace thee in it by and by.

[Exit TITUS, from above]

Tam. This closing with him sets his lunacy : Whate'er I forge, to feed his brain-sick fits, Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches For now he firmly takes me for Revenge ; And being credulous in this mad thought, I'll make him send for Lucius, his son ; And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure, I'll find some cunning practice out of hand, To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths, Or, at the least, make them his enemies. See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter TITUS.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee . Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house ; Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too :— How like the empress and her sons you are ! Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor :— Could not all hell afford you such a devil ?— For, well I wot, the empress never wags, But in her company there is a Moor ; And, would you represent our queen aright, It were convenient you had such a devil : But welcome, as you are. What shall we do ?

Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus ?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.

Chi. Show me a villain, that hath done a rape, And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

Tam. Show me a thousand, that hath done thee wrong,

And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome ;

And when thou find'st a man that's like thyself, Good Murder, stab him ; he's a murderer.— Go thou with him ; and when it is thy hap, To find another that is like to thee, Good Rapine, stab him ; he is a ravisher.— Go thou with them ; and in the emperor's court There is a queen, attended by a Moor : Well may'st thou know her by thy own proportion, For up and down she doth resemble thee ; I pray thee, do on them some violent death, They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us ; this shall we do

But would it please thee, good Andronicus, To send for Lucius, thy thrice valiant son, Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths, And bid him come and banquet at thy house : When he is here, even at thy solemn feast, I will bring in the empress and her sons, The emperor himself, and all thy foes ; And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel, And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart. What says Andronicus to this device ?

Tit. Marcus, my brother !—'tis sad Titus calls

Enter MARCUS.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius ; Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths : Bid him repair to me, and bring with him Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths ; Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are : Tell him, the emperor and the empress too Feast at my house : and he shall feast with them. This do thou for my love ; and so let him, As he regards his aged father's life.

Mar. This will I do, and soon return again.

[Exit.]

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business, And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me ;

² Similar violations of syntax, according to modern notions, are not unfrequent in our elder writers. Thus Hobbes, in his History of the Civil Wars :—'If the king give us leave, you or I may as lawfully preach as them that do.'

Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you, boys? will you abide with him,

Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest?
Yield to his humour, smooth and speak him fair,

[Aside.

And tarry with him, till I come again.

Ti. I know them all, though they suppose me mad;

And will o'er-reach them in their own devices,
A pair of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam.

[Aside.

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure, leave us here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

[Exit TAMORA.

Ti. I know, thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Ti. Tut, I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Caius, and Valentine!

Enter PUBLIUS, and others.

Pub. What's your will?

Ti. Know you these two?

Pub. Th' empress' sons,
I take them, Chiron and Demetrius.

Ti. Fie, Publius, se! thou art too much deceiv'd;

The one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them:
Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it; therefore bind them sure;
And stop their mouths, if they begin to cry.

[Exit TITUS. PUBLIUS, &c. lay hold on CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Chi. Villains, forbear: we are the empress' sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.—

Stop close their mouths, let them not speak a word:
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.

Re-enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with LAVINIA; she bearing a Bason, and he a Knife.

Ti. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound;—

Sirs, stop their mouths, let them not speak to me;
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.—
O, villains, Chiron and Demetrius!

Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud;

This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband; and, for that vile fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death:
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that, more
dear

Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak?
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.

Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats;
Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
The bason, that receives your guilty blood.

You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad,—
Hark, villains; I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make a paste;
And of the paste a coffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;

And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.¹

This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd:
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia, come,

[He cuts their Throats.

Receive the blood: and, when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.
Come, come, be every one officious

To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaur's feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.

[Exeunt, bearing the dead Bodies.

SCENE III. The same. A Pavilion, with Tables, &c. Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and Goths, with AARON, Prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content.

I Goth. And ours, with thine,² befall what fortune will.

Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
Let him receive no sustenance, fester him,
Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings:
And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear, the emperor means no good to us.

Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!

Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unhallow'd slave!—
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.—

[Exeunt Goths, with AARON. Flouriish.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.

Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes, Senators, and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What boots it thee, to call thyself a sun?

Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break³ the parley;

These quarrels must be quietly debated.
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honourable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:
Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sat. Marcus, we will.

[Hautboys sound. The Company sit down at Table.

Enter TITUS, dressed like a Cook, LAVINIA, veiled, Young LUCIUS, and others. TITUS places the Dishes on the Table.

Ti. Welcome, my gracious lord: welcome, dread
queen;

Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius;

And welcome, all: although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?

Ti. Because I would be sure to have all well,

To entertain your highness and your empress.

Tam. We are beholden to you, good Andronicus.

Ti. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.

My lord the emperor resolve me this;

Was it well done of rash Virginias,

To slay his daughter with his own right hand,

Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflow'r'd?⁴

1 A coffin is the term for the crust of a raised pie.
2 I. e. her own produce. 'The earth's increase' is the produce of the earth. 'Then shall the earth bring forth her increase.' Psalm lxvii. 6. So in the Tempest, Act iv. Sc. 1:
'Earth's increase and fishion plenty.'

3 'And our content runs parallel with thine, be the

5 Rowe may have availed himself of this passage in The Fair Penitent, where Scoto asks Calista:—

'Hast thou not heard what brave Virginias did?

With his own hand he slew his only daughter,' &c.

Thus Andronicus (as Steevens observes) is incorrect in his statement of this occurrence, for Virginia died un-violated. Mr. Boswell seems to think this is qualified by his saying that he had more cause to slay his daughter than Virginias.

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!

Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,

And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant;
For me, most wretched, to perform the like:—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;

[He kills LAVINIA.]

And, with thy shame, thy father's sorrow die!

Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural, and unkind!

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind.

I am as woful as Virginus was:

And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage;—and it is now done.

Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed.

Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your highness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?

Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;
Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.¹

'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point.

[Killing TAMORA.]

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed.

[Killing TITUS.]

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.

[Kills SATURNINUS. A great tumult. The People in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their Partisans ascend the Steps before TITUS's House.]

Mar. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproar sever'd, like a flight of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O, let me teach you how to knit again
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,
These broken limbs again into one body.

Sen. Lest Rome herself be bane unto herself
And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'sy to,
Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,
Do shameful execution on herself.
But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my words,— Speak, Rome's dear friend; [To LUCIUS] as erst
our ancestor,

When with his solemn tongue he did discourse
To lovesick Dido's sad attending ear,
The story of that baleful burning night,
When subtle Greeks surpris'd King Priam's Troy;
Tell us, what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,
Or who hath brought the fatal engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.—
My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel;
Nor can I utter all our bitter grief,
But floods of tears will drown my oratory,
And break my very utterance; even in the time
When it should move you to attend me most,
Lending your kind commiseration:
Here is a captain, let him tell the tale;
Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,
That cursed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdered our emperor's brother;
And they it were that ravished our sister:
For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;
Our father's tears despis'd²; and basely cozen'd³

Of that true hand, that fought Rome's quarrel out,
And sent her enemies unto the grave.

Lastly, myself unkindly banished,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg relief among Rome's enemies;
Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,
And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:
And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you,
That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood:
And from her bosom took the enemy's point,
Sheathing the steel in my advent'rous body.

Alas! you know, I am no vaunter, I;
My scars can witness, dumb although they are,
That my report is just, and full of truth.
But, soft; methinks, I do digress too much,
Citing my worthless praise: O, pardon me;
For when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak; Behold this child, [Pointing to the Child in the Arms of an Attendant.]

Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes;
The villain is alive in Titus's house,
Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.
Now judge, what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.
Now you have heard the truth, what say you,
Romans?

Have we done aught amiss? Show us wherein,
And, from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronici
Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down.³
And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house.
Speak, Romans, speak; and, if you say, we shall,
Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,
And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,
Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,
The common voice do cry, it shall be so.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's royal emperor!

LUCIUS, &c. descend.

Mar. Go, go into old Titus's sorrowful house;

[To an Attendant.]

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,
To be adjudg'd some direful slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.

Rom. [Several speak.] Lucius, all hail; Rome's gracious governor!

Luc. Thanks, gentle Romans; May I govern so,
To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!
But, gentle people, give me aim awhile,—
For nature puts me to a heavy task;—
Stand all aloof,—but, uncle, draw you near,
To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk:—
O, take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

[Kisses TITUS.]

These sorrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them!

Luc. Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us

To melt in showers: Thy grandsire lov'd thee well:
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meet and agreeing with thine infancy;
In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:
Friends should associate friends in grief and woe:

And then 'A curtain drawn discovers the heads and hands of Demetrius and Chiron hanging up against the wall: their bodies in chairs in bloody linen.'

² i. e. 'and he basely cozen'd.'

³ i. e. 'we the poor remainder, &c. will cast us down.'

¹ The additions made by Ravenscroft to this scene are much of a piece with it:—

'Thus cramm'd, thou'rt bravely fatten'd up for hell,
And thus to Pluto I do serve thee up.'

['Gude the Empress

Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave;
Do him that kindness, and take leave of him.

Boy. O, grandsire, grandsire! even with all my heart

Would I were dead, so you did live again!—

O, lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;

My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

I Rom. You said Andronick, have done with woes;

Give sentence on this execrable wretch,

That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food:

If any one relieves or pities him,

For the offence he dies. This is our doom:

Some stay, to see him fasten'd in the earth.¹

Aar. O, why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers,

I should repent the evil I have done;

Ten thousand, worse than ever yet I did,

Would I perform if I might have my will;

If one good deed in all my life I did,

I do repent it from my very soul.

1 That justice and cookery may go hand in hand to the conclusion of the play, in Ravenscroft's alteration of it, Aaron is at once racked and roasted on the stage.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,

And give him burial in his father's grave:

My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith

Be closed in our household's monument.

As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,

No funeral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,

No mournful bell shall ring her burial;

But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey:

Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;

And, being so, shall have like want of pity.

See justice done to Aaron, that damn'd Moor

By whom our heavy haps had their beginning

Then, afterwards, to order well the state;

That like events may ne'er it ruinate. [Exeunt.]

ALL the editors and critics agree in supposing this play spurious. I see no reason for differing from them; for the colour of the style is wholly different from that of the other plays, and there is an attempt at regular versification, and artificial close, not always inelegant, yet seldom pleasing. The barbarity of the spectacles, and the general massacre which are here exhibited, can scarcely be conceived tolerable to any audience, yet we are told by Jonson that they were not only borne but praised. That Shakspeare wrote any part, though Theobald declares it incontestable, I see no reason for believing. JOHNSON

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

PRELIMINARY, REMARKS.

MR. DOUCE observes that 'the very great popularity of this play in former times may be supposed to have originated from the interest which the story must have excited. To trace the fable beyond the period in which the favourite romance of Apollonius Tyrius was composed, would be a vain attempt: that was the probable original; but of its author nothing decisive has been discovered. Some have maintained that it was originally written in Greek, and translated into Latin by a Christian about the time of the decline of the Roman empire; others have given it to Symposius, a writer whom they place in the eighth century, because the riddles which occur in the story are to be found in a work entitled Symposii Enigmata. It occurs in that storehouse of popular fiction the Gesta Romanorum, and its antiquity is sufficiently evinced by the existence of an Anglo-Saxon version, mentioned in Wanley's list, and now in Bene't College, Cambridge. One Constantine is said to have translated it into modern Greek verse, about the year 1500, (this is probably the MS. mentioned by Dufresne in the index of authors appended to his Greek Glossary;) and afterwards printed at Venice in 1562. It had been printed in Latin press at Augsburg in 1471, which is probably as early as the first dateless impression of the Gesta Romanorum.*

A very curious fragment of an old metrical romance on the subject was in the collection of the late Dr. Farmer, and is now in my possession. This we have the authority of Mr. Tyrwhitt for placing at an earlier period than the time of Gower. The fragment consists of two leaves of parchment, which had been converted into the cover of a book, for which purpose its edges were cut off, some words entirely lost, and the whole has suffered so much by time as to be scarcely legible. Yet I have considered it so curious a relic of our early poetry and language, that I have bestowed some pains in deciphering what remains, and have given a specimen of two in the notes toward the close of the play.—I will here exhibit a further portion, comprising the

* Towards the latter end of the twelfth century, Godfrey of Viterbo, in his Pantheon, or Universal Chronicle, inserted this romance as part of the history of the third Antiochus, about two hundred years before Christ. It begins thus [MS. Reg. 14, c. xi.]—

Explicit Appoloni Tyrus Rex nobilis & virtuosus, &c.
This story is also related by Gower in his Confessio Amantis, lib. vii. p. 175—185, edit. 1554. Most of the incidents of the play are found in his narration, and a few of his expressions are occasionally borrowed—Gower, by his own acknowledgment, took his story from the Pantheon of Godfrey of Viterbo; and the author of Pericles professes to have followed Gower.
Chaucer also refers to the story in The Man of Lawe's Prologue :—

'Or elles of Tyrius Appolonius,
How that the cursed king Antiochus,
Beraft his daughter of hire maidenhede;
That is so horrible a tale for to rede,' &c.

A French translation from the Latin prose, evidently of the fifteenth century, is among the Royal MSS. in the British Museum, 90, c. li. There are several more recent French translations of the story : one under the title of 'La Chronique d'Appolin Roi de Thyrr,' 4to. Geneva, blk. l. no date. Another by Gilles Corrozet, Paris, 1580, 8vo. It is also printed in the seventh vol. of the Histoires Tragiques de Belleforest, 12mo. 1604; and modernised by M. Le Brun, was printed at Amsterdam in 1710, and Paris in 1711. 12mo. There is an abstract of the story in the Mélanges tirés d'une grande Bibliothèque, vol. lxiv. p. 265.

The first English prose version of the story, translated by Robert Copland, was printed by Wynkyn de Worde, 1510. It was again translated by T. Twine, and originally published by W. Howe, 1676. Of this there was a second impression in 1607, under the title of The Pattern of painful Adventures, containing the most excellent, pleasant, and variable Historie of the strange Accidents that befel unto Prince Appoloniuss, the Lady Lucina his Wife, and Tharsila his Daughter, &c. translated into English by T. Twine, Gent. The poet seems to have made use of this prose narration as well as of Gower.

'That the greater part, if not the whole, of this drama, was the composition of Shakespeare, and that it is to be considered as his earliest dramatic effort, are positions, of which the first has been rendered highly probable by the elaborate disquisitions of Messrs. Steevens and Malone, and may possibly be placed in a clearer point of view by a more condensed and lucid arrangement of the testimony already produced, and by a further discussion of the merits and peculiarities of the play itself, while the second will, we trust, receive additional support by inferences legitimately deduced from a comprehensive survey of scattered and hitherto insulated premises.'

The evidence required for the establishment of a high degree of probability under the first of these positions, necessarily divides itself into two parts; the external and the internal evidence. The former commences with the original edition of Pericles, which was entered on the Stationers' books by Edward Blount, one of the printers of the first folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, on the 20th of May, 1608, but did not pass the press until the subsequent year, when it was published, not, as might have been expected, by Blount, but by one Henry Gosson, who placed Shakespeare's name at full length in the title page. It is worthy of remark, also, that this edition was entered at Stationers' hall, together with Antony and Cleopatra, and that it (and the three following editions, which were also in quarto) was styled in the title page the much admired play of Pericles. As the entry, however, was by Blount, and the edition by Gosson, it is probable that the former had been anticipated by the latter, through the procurement of a play house copy. It may also be added, that Pericles was performed at Shakespeare's own theatre, The Globe. The next ascription of this play to our author is in a poem entitled The Times Displayed, in Six Seavades, by S. Sheppard, 4to. 1646, dedicated to Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, and containing in the ninth stanza of the sixth Seavade a positive assertion of Shakespeare's property in this drama :—

'See him whose tragic scenes Euripides
Doth equal, and with Sophocles we may Compare great Shakespeare; Aristophanes
N'ever like him his fancy could display,
When the Prince of Tyre his Pericles

This high eulogium on Pericles received a direct contradiction very shortly afterwards from the pen of an obscure poet named Tatham, who bears, however, an equally strong testimony as to Shakespeare's being the author of the piece, which he thus presumes to censure :—

'But Shakespeare, the plebeian driller, was Founder'd in his Pericles, and must not pass'

To these testimonies in 1646 and 1662, full and unqualified, and made at no distant period from the death of the bard to whom they relate, we have to add the still more forcible and striking declaration of Dryden, who tells us in 1677, and in words as strong and decisive as he could select, that—

'Shakespeare's own muse, his Pericles first bore.'

'The only drawback on this accumulation of external evidence is the omission of Pericles in the first edition of our author's works : a negative fact which can have little weight, when we recollect that both the memory and judgment of Heminge and Condell, the poet's editors, were so defective, that they had forgotten Troilus and Cressida, until the entire folio, and the table of contents, had been printed; and admitted Titus Andronicus and the Historical Play of King Henry the Sixth, probably for no other reasons than that the former had been, from its unmerited popularity, brought forward by Shakespeare on his own theatre, though there is sufficient internal evidence to prove, without the addition of a single line; and because the latter, with a similar predilection of the lower orders in its favour, had obtained a similar, though not a more laboured attention from our poet, and was therefore deemed by his editors, though very unnecessarily, a requisite introduction to the two plays on the reign of that monarch, which Shakespeare had really new-modelled.'

'It cannot consequently be surprising, as they had forgotten Troilus and Cressida until the folio had been printed, they should have forgotten Pericles until the same folio had been in circulation, and when it was too late to correct the omission; an error which the second folio has, without doubt or examination, blindly copied.'

'If the external evidence in support of Shakespeare being the author of the greater part of this play be striking, the internal must be pronounced still more so, and, indeed, absolutely decisive of the question; for, whether we consider the style and phraseology, or the imagery, sentiment, and humour, the approximation to our author's uncontested dramas appears so close, frequent, and peculiar, as to stamp irresistible conviction on the mind.'

'The result has accordingly been such as might have been predicted, under the assumption of the play being genuine; for the more it has been examined the more clearly has Shakespeare's large property in it been established. It is curious, indeed, to note the increased tone of confidence which each successive commentator has assumed, in proportion as he has weighed the testimony arising from the piece itself. Roure, in his first edition, says, "It is owned that some part of Pericles certainly was written by him, particularly the last act." Dr. Farmer observes that the hand of Shakespeare may be seen in the latter part of the play: Dr. Percy remarks that "more of the phraseology used in the genuine dramas of Shakespeare prevails in Pericles than in any of the other six doubted plays." Steevens says, "I admit without reserve that Shakespeare—

— whose hopeful colours
Advance a half fac'd sun, striving to shine,' is visible in many scenes throughout the play;—the purplest panni are Shakespeare's, and the rest the production of some inglorious and forgotten playwright;—adding, in a subsequent paragraph, that Pericles is valuable, "as the engravings of Mark Antonio are valuable not only on account of their beauty, but because they are supposed to have been executed under the eye of Raffaello;" Malone gives it as his corrected opinion, that "the congenial sentiments, the numerous expressions bearing a striking similitude to passages in Shakespeare's undisputed plays, some of the incidents, the situation of many of the persons, and in various places the colour of the style, all these combine to set his seal on the play before us, and furnish us with internal and irresistible proofs, that a considerable portion of this piece, as it now appears, was written by him." On this ground he thinks the greater part of the three last acts may be safely ascribed to him; and that his hand may be traced occasionally in the other two. "Many will be of opinion (says Mr. Douce) that it contains more that Shakespeare might have written than either Love's Labour's Lost, or All's Well that Ends Well.

For satisfactory proof that the style, phraseology, and imagery of the greater part of this play are truly Shakespearian, the reader has only to attend to the numerous coincidences which, in these respects, occur between Pericles and the poet's subsequent productions; similitudes so striking, as to leave no doubt that they originated from one and the same source.

If we attend, however, a little further to the dramatic construction of Pericles, to its humour, sentiment, and character, not only shall we find additional evidence in favour of its being, in a great degree, the product of our author, but fresh cause, it is expected, for awarding it a higher estimation than it has hitherto obtained.*

Dr. Drake enters much more at large into the argument for establishing this as a juvenile effort of our great poet, and for placing the date of its composition in the year 1590, but we must content ourselves with referring the reader to his work for these particulars.—He continues:—

"Shakespeare thinks that this play was originally named Pyrocles, after the hero of Sidney's Arcadia, the character, as he justly observes, 'not bearing the smallest affinity to that of the Athenian statesman.' 'It is remarkable,' says he, 'that many of our ancient writers were ambitious to exhibit Sidney's worthies on the stage, and when his subordinate heroes were advanced to such honour, how happened it that Pyrocles, their leader, should be overlooked? Mustdorus, (his companion,) Argalus and Parthenia, Phaulcon and Eudora, Andromeda, &c. furnished titles for different tragedies; and perhaps Pyrocles. In the present instance, was defrauded of a like distinction. The names invented or employed by Sidney had once such popularity, that they were sometimes borrowed by poets who did not profess to follow the direct current of his fables, or attend to the strict preservation of his characters. I must add, that the Apollon of the Story-book and Gower could only have been rejected to make room for a more favourite name; yet however condescending the name of Pyrocles might have been, that of Pericles could challenge no advantage with regard to general predilection. All circumstances therefore considered, it is not improbable that Shakespeare designed his chief character to be called Pyrocles, not Pericles, however ignorance or accident might have shuffled the latter (a name of almost similar sound) into the place of the former." This conjecture will amount almost to certainty if we diligently compare Pericles with the Pyrocles of the Arcadia; the same romantic, versatile, and sensitive disposition is ascribed to both characters, and several of the incidents pertaining to the latter are found mingled with the adventures of the former personage, while, throughout the play, the obligations of its author to various other parts of the romance may be frequently and distinctly traced, not only in the assumption of an image or a sentiment, but in the adoption of the very words of his once popular predecessor, proving incontestably the poet's familiarity with and study of the Arcadia to have been very considerable.

However wild and extravagant the fable of Pericles may appear, if we consider its numerous chorusses, its pageantry, and dumb shows, its continual succession of incidents, and the great length of time which they occupy, yet it is, we may venture to assert, the most spirited and pleasing specimen of the nature and fabric of our earliest romantic drama which we possess, and of the most valuable, as it is the only one with which Shakespeare has favoured us. We should therefore welcome this play as an admirable example of "the neglected favourites of our ancestors, with something of the same feeling that is experienced in the reception of an old and valued friend of our fathers or grandfathers. Nay, we should like it the better for its gothic appendages of pageants and chorusses, to explain the intricacies of the fable; and we can see no objection to the dramatic representation even of a series of ages in a single night, that does not apply to every description of poem, which leads in perusal from the freestone at which we are sitting, to a succession of remote periods and distant countries. In these matters faith is all-powerful; and without her influence, the most chastely old and critically correct of dramas is precisely as unreal as the Midsummer Night's Dream, or the Winter's Tale."

A still more powerful attraction in Pericles is, that the interest accumulates as the story proceeds; for, though many of the characters in the earlier part of the drama, such as Antiochus and his Daughter, Simonides and Thaisa, Cleon and Dionysa, disappear and drop into oblivion, their places are supplied by more pleasing and efficient agents, who are not less fugacious, but better calculated for theatrical effect. The inequalities of this production are, indeed, considerable, and only to be accounted for, with probability, on the supposition that Shakespeare either accepted a conditor, or improved on the rough sketch of a previous writer, the former, for many reasons, seems entitled to a preference, and will explain why, in compliment to his dramatic friend, he has suffered a few passages, and one entire scene, of a character totally dissimilar to his own style and mode of composition, to stand uncorrected; for who does not perceive that of the closing scene of the second act not a sentence or a word escaped from the pen of Shakespeare.

No play, in fact, more openly discloses the hand of Shakespeare than Pericles, and fortunately his share in its composition appears to have been very considerable, he may be distinctly, though not frequently, traced in the first and second acts; after which, being the incompetency of his fellow-labourer, he seems to have assumed almost the entire management of the remainder, nearly the whole of the third, fourth, and fifth acts bearing indisputable testimony to the genius and execution of the great master.†

The most corrupt of Shakespeare's other dramas, compared with Pericles, is purely itself. The metre is seldom attended to; verse is frequently printed as prose, and the grossest errors abound in every page. I mention these circumstances only as an apology to the reader for having taken somewhat more licence with this drama than would have been justifiable if the old copies had been less disfigured by the negligence and ignorance of the printer or transcriber.—Malone.

SCENE, dispersedly in various Countries.‡

* We meet with Pentapoli in regio, a country in Africa, consisting of five cities. Pentapoli occurs in the thirty-seventh chapter of King Apollon of Tyre, 1510; in Gower; the Gesta Romanorum; and Twine's translation from it. Its site is marked in an ancient map of the world, MS. in the Cotton Library, Brit. Mus. Tibertus, b. v. In the original Latin romance of Apollonius Tyrius it is most accurately called Pentapoli Cyrenorum and was, as both Strabo and Ptolemy inform us, a district of Cyrenalca in Africa, comprising five cities, of which Cyrene was one.

† That the reader may know through how many regions the scene of this drama is dispersed, it is necessary to observe that Antioch was the metropolis of Syria; Tyre a city of Phenicia in Asia; Tharsus, the metropolis of Cilicia, a country of Asia Minor; Mitylene, the capital of Lesbos, an island in the Ægean sea; and Ephesus, the capital of Ionia, a country of the Lesser Asia.

ACT I.

Enter GOWER. Before the Palace of Antioch.

To sing a song that old¹ was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;²
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eves, and holy ales;³
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:
The purchase⁴ is to make men glorious;
Et bonum quo antiquius, eo melius.
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that to hear an old man sing,
May to your wishes pleasure bring,
I life would wish, and that I might Waste it for you, like taper-light.—
This Antioch then, Antiochus the Great
Built up this city for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria;
(I tell you what mine authors say:)
This king unto him took a pheere,⁵
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,⁶
As heaven had lent her all his grace;
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke:
Bad child, worse father! to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none.
By custom what they did begin,
Was, with long use, account⁷ no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,⁸
To seek her as a bed-fellow,
In marriage-pleasures playfellow:
Which to prevent, he made a law
(To keep her still, and men in awe,)⁹
That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:
So for her many a wight did die,
As yon grim looks do testify.¹¹

1 Chorus, in the character of Gower, an ancient English poet, who has related the story of this play in his Confessio Amantis.

2 i. e. that of old.

3 The defect of metre (sung and come being no rhymes) points out that we should read—
‘From ancient ashes Gower sprung;’
alluding to the restoration of the Phoenix.

4 That is, says Dr. Farmer, by whom this emendation was made, church-ales. The old copy has ‘holy days.’ Gower's speeches were certainly intended to rhyme throughout.

5 ‘The purchase’ is the reading of the old copy; which Stevens, among other capricious alterations, changed to purpose. That Stevens and Malone were ignorant of the true meaning of the word purchase, I have shown, King Henry IV. part I. act II. sc. I. It was anciently used to signify gain, profit; any good or advantage obtained; as in the following instances:—James the First, when he made the extravagant gift of 30,000*l.* to Rich., said, ‘You think now that you have a great purchase; but I am far happier in giving you that sum than you can be in receiving it!’

‘No purchase passes a good wife, no losse

Is, than a bad wife a more cursed crosse.’

Chapman's Georgics of Hesiod, b. II. 44, p. 32.

‘Long would it be ere thou hast purchase bought,

Or welthier wexen by such idle thought.’

Hall, Satire ii. b. 2.

6 Wife; the word signifies a mate or companion.

7 i. e. completely exuberantly beautiful. A full fortune, in Othello, means a complete one.

8 Account for accounted.

9 i. e. shape or direct their course thither.

10 ‘To keep her still to himself, and to deter others from demanding her in marriage.’

11 Gower must be supposed to point to the scene of the palace gate at Antioch, on which the heads of those unfortunate wights were fixed.

12 Which (the judgment of your eye) best can justify, i. e. prove its resemblance to the ordinary course of nature. Thus afterwards:—

‘When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge.’

13 It does not appear in the present drama that the

What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye I give, my cause who best can justify.¹² [Exit.]

SCENE I. Antioch. A Room in the Palace.
Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre,¹³ you have at large receiv'd

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul Embolden'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard, in this enterprise. [Music.]

Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,¹⁴
For the embracements even of Jove himself;
At whose conception (till Lucina reign'd, Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,)¹⁵
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections.

Enter the Daughter of ANTIOCHUS.

Per. See, where she comes, apparell'd like the spring,

Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!¹⁶
Her face the book of praises,¹⁷ where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever ras'd, and testy wrath
Could never be her mild companion.¹⁸
Ye gods that made me man, and away in love,
That have inflam'd desire in my breast,
To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my helps,
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles.—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.
Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view
Her countless glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
Yon sometime famous prince, like thyself,
Drawn by report, advent'rous by desire,
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,
That without covering, save yon field of stars,²⁰

father of Pericles is living. By prince, therefore, throughout this play, we are to understand prince regnant. In the Gesta Romanorum, Apollonius is king of Tyre; and Apollyna in Copland's translation from the French. In Twine's translation he is repeatedly called prince of Tyros, as he is in Gower.

14 In the old copy this line stands:—

‘Music, bring in our daughter clothed like a bride.’ Malone thinks it a marginal direction, inserted in the text by mistake. Mr. Boswell thinks it only an Alexandrine, and adds, ‘It does not seem probable that music would commence at the close of Pericles' speech, without an order from the king.’

15 The words whose and her refer to the daughter of Antiochus. The construction is, ‘at whose conception the senate-house of planets all did sit;’ &c.; and the words, ‘till Lucina reign'd, Nature,’ &c. are parenthetical. The leading thought may have been taken from Sidney's Arcadia, book II. ‘The senate-house of the planets was at no time to set for the decreeing of perfection in a man,’ &c. Thus also Milton, Paradise Lost, viii. 511:

‘—all heaven,

And happy constellations on that hour

Shed their selectest influence.’

16 ‘The Graces are her subjects, and her thoughts the sovereign of every virtue that gives renown to men.’ The ellipsis in the second line is what obscured this passage, which Stevens would have altered, because he did not comprehend it.

17 ‘Her face is a book where may be read all that is praiseworthy, every thing that is the cause of admiration and praise.’ Shakespeare has often this image.

18 By ‘her mild companion’ the companion of her mildness is meant.

19 Hesperides is here taken for the name of the garden in which the golden apples were kept; as we find it in Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV.

20 Thus Lucan, lib. vii:—

‘—cælo tegitur qui non habet urnam.’

They here stand martyrs, plain in Cupid's wars ;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist,
For going' on death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hath taught
My frail mortality to know itself,
And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must :¹
For death remember'd, should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath ; to trust it, error.
I'll make my will, then ; and as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but feeling wo,²
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did ;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you,
And all good men, as every prince should do ;
My riches to the earth from whence they came :
But my unspotted fire of love to you.

[To the Daughter of ANTIOCHUS.]

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow, Antiochus.

Ant. Scorning advice.—Read the conclusion then ;
Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As those before thee thou thyself shalt bleed.

Daugh. In all, save that, may'st thou prove prosperous !

In all, save that, I wish thee happiness !⁴

Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness, and courage.⁵

[He reads the Riddle.]

*I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh which did me breed ;
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father.
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I, mother's wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you.*

Sharp physic is the last :⁶ but O, you powers !
That give heaven countless eyes⁷ to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually⁸
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it ?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,

[Takes hold of the Hand of the Princess.]

Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill ;
But I must tell you,—now, my thoughts revolt ;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait ;
That knowing sin within, will touch the gate.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings ;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,

1 I. e. 'for fear of going,' or 'lest they should go.'—Dr. Percy proposed to read, 'in death's net ;' but on and in were anciently used the one for the other.

2 That is, 'to prepare this body for that state to which I must come.'

3 'I will act as sick men do ; who having had experience of the pleasures of the world, and only a vision and distant prospect of heaven, have neglected the latter for the former ; but at length, feeling themselves decaying, grasp no longer at temporal pleasures, but prepare calmly for futurity.'

4 The old copy reads :—
'Of all said yet, may'st thou prove prosperous ;
Of all said yet, I wish thee happiness !'
The emendation is Mr. Mason's.

5 This is from the third book of Sidney's Arcadia :—
'Whereupon asking advice of no other thought but faithfulness and courage, he presently lighted from his own horse.' &c.

6 I. e. the intimation in the last line of the riddle, that his life depends on resolving it : which he properly enough calls sharp physic, or a bitter potion.

7 Thus in A Midsummer Night's Dream :—
'— who more engilds the night
Than all who fiery oes and eyes of light.'

8 — starts hide your fires,
Let not light see, &c. Macbeth.

9 I. e. he is no perfect or honest man, that knowing, &c.

10 This is a stroke of nature. The incestuous king cannot bear to see a rival touch the hand of the woman he loves. His jealousy resembles that of Antony :—
'— to let him be familiar with My play-fellow, your hand ; this kingly seal
And plighter of high hearts.'

Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to harken ;

But, being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only danceth at so harsh a chime :
Good sooth, I care not for you,

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not,¹⁰ upon thy life,
For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd ;
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king,
Few love to hear the sins they love to act ;
'Twould 'braid yourself too near for me to tell it.
Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut, than shown ;
For vice repeated, is like the wand'ring wind,¹¹
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself ;¹²
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear
'To stop the air would hurt them. The blind mole casts

*Copp'd*¹³ hills towards heaven, to tell, the earth is through'd

By man's oppression ;¹⁴ and the poor worm¹⁵ doth die for't.

Kings are earth's gods : in vice their law's their will ;
And if Jove stray, who dares say, Jove doth ill ?

It is enough you know ; and it is fit,
What being more known grows worse, to smother it.
All love the womb that their first beings bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.

Ant. Heaven, that I had thy head ! he has found the meaning ;—

But I will gloze¹⁶ with him. [Aside.] Young prince of Tyre,

Though by the tenor of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,

We might proceed to cancel of your days ;¹⁷
Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree

As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise :
Forty days longer we do despise you ;

If by which time our secret be undone,
This mercy shows, we'll joy in such a son :

And until then, your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honour, and your worth.

[Exit ANT. his Daughter, and Attendants.]

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin !
When what is done is like a hypocrite,

The which is good in nothing but in sight.
If it be true that I interpret false,

Then were it certain, you were not so bad,
As with foul incest to abuse your soul ;

Where's¹⁸ now you're both a father and a son,

Malefort, in Massinger's Unnatural Combat, expresses the like impatient jealousy, when Beaufort touches his daughter Theocrine, to whom he was betrothed.

11 'The man who knows the ill practices of princes is unwise if he reveals what he knows ; for the publisher of vicious actions resembles the wind, which while it passes along, blows dust into men's eyes. When the blast is over, the eyes that have been affected by the dust, though sore, see clear enough to stop for the future the air that would annoy them.' Pericles means by this similitude to show the danger of revealing the crimes of princes ; for as they feel hurt by the publication of their shame, they will of course prevent the repetition of it, by destroying the person who divulged. He pursues the same idea in the instance of the mole.

12 'Copp'd hills' are hills rising in a conical form, something of the shape of a sugarloaf. Thus in Horn's Vulgaria, 1519 : 'Sometime men wear copped caps like a sugar loaf.' So Baret : 'To make copped, or sharpe at top ; cacumino.' In Anglo-Saxon, cop is a head.

13 The earth is oppressed by the injuries which crowd upon her. Stevens altered through'd to wrong'd ; but apparently without necessity.

14 The mole is called poor worm as a term of commiseration. In The Tempest, Prospero, speaking to Miranda, says, 'Poor worm, thou art infected.' The mole remains secure till it has thrown up those hillocks which betray his course to the mole-catcher.

15 Flatter, insinuate.

16 To the destruction of your life.

17 Where has here the power of whereas ; as in other passages of these plays. It occurs again with the same meaning in Act ii. Sc. 3, of this play

By your untimely claspings with your child,
(Which pleasure fits a husband, not a father;) And she an eater of her mother's flesh,
By the defiling of her parent's bed;
And both like serpents are, who though they feed
On sweetest flowers, yet they poison breed.
Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
Blush not in actions blacker than the night,
Will shun¹ no course to keep them from the light.
One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
Murder's as near to lust, as flame to smoke.
Poison and treason are the hands of sin,
Ay, and the targets, to put off the shame:
Then, lest my life be cropp'd to keep you clear,²
By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear. [Exit.]

Re-enter ANTIOCHUS.

Ant. He hath found the meaning, for the which we mean
To have his head.
He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
Nor tell the world, Antiochus doth sin
In such a loathed manner:
And therefore instantly this prince must die;
For by his fall my honour must keep high.
Who attends on us there?

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. Do'h your highness call?
Ant. Thaliard, you're of our chamber, and our mind

Partakes³ her private actions to your secrecy;
And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold;
We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him;
It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
Because we bid it. Say, is it done?

Thal. My lord,
'Tis done.

Enter a Messenger.

Ant. Enough.

Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.⁴

Mess. My lord, Prince Pericles is fled.
[Exit Messenger.] As thou

Wilt live, fly after: and, as an arrow, shot
From a well experienc'd archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so ne'er return,
Unless thou say, Prince Pericles is dead.

Thal. My lord, if I
Can get him once within my pistol's length,
I'll make him sure; so farewell to your highness.
[Exit.]

Ant. Thaliard, adieu! till Pericles be dead,
My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Tyre. A Room in the Palace. Enter
PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords.

Per. Let none disturb us: Why should this change of thought?⁵

The sad companion, dull-ey'd melancholy,
By me so us'd a guest is, not an hour,
In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,

1 The old copy erroneously reads show. The emendation is Malone's. The expression here is elliptical:—
'For wisdom sees that those men who do not blush to commit actions blacker than the night, will not shun any course in order to preserve them from being made public.'

2 'To prevent any suspicion from falling on you.'—
So in Macbeth:—

'—always thought, that I
Require a clearness.'

3 In The Winter's Tale the word partake is used in an active sense for participate:—

'—your exultation
Partake to every one.'

4 These words are addressed to the Messenger, who enters in haste.

5 '—Why should this change of thought?' This is the reading of the old copies; which Stevens changed to, 'Why this change of thoughts?' I think without necessity. Pericles, addressing the Lords, says, 'Let none disturb us.' Then apostrophising himself, says, 'Why should this change in our thoughts disturb us?'

(The tomb where grief should sleep,) can breed me quiet!

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes
shun them,

And danger, which I feared, is at Antioch,
Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:
Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,
Nor yet the other's distance comfort me.
Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,
That have their first conception by misread,
Have after-nourishment and life by care;
And what was first but fear what might be done,
Grows elder now, and cares it be not done.
And so with me; the great Antiochus, (Gainst whom I am too little to contend,
Since he's so great, can make his will his act,)
Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;

Nor boots it me to say, I honour him,⁶
If he suspect I may dishonour him:

And what may make him blush in being known,
He'll stop the course by which it might be known;
With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,
And with the ostent of war⁷ will look so huge,
Amazement shall drive courage from the state;
Our men be vanquish'd, ere they do resist,
And subjects punish'd, that ne'er thought offence:
Which care of them, not pity of myself,
(Who am⁸ no more but as the tops of trees,
Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them,)

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish
And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast!

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,
Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, my lords, and give experience tongue.

They do abuse the king, that flatter him:
For flattery is the bellows blows up sin;
The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,
To which that breath⁹ gives heat and stronger glowing;

Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order,
Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err,
When Signior Sooth¹⁰ here does proclaim a peace
He flatters you, makes war upon your life:
Prince; pardon me, or strike me, if you please;
I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else; but let your cares o'erlook
What shipping, and what lading's in our haven,
And then return to us. [Exit Lords.] Helicanus,
thou

Hast moved us: what seest thou in our looks?
Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,
How durst thy tongue move anger to our face?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I have power
To take thy life.

Hel. [Kneeling.] I have ground the axe myself;
Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, pr'ythee rise;

6 Him was supplied by Rowe for the sake of the metre.

7 Old copies:—

'And with the stent of war will look so huge.'

The emendation, suggested by Mr. Tyrwhitt, is confirmed by the following passage in Decker's Entertainments to King James I. 1604:—

'And why you bear alone th^e ostent of warre.'
Again in Chapman's translation of Homer's Batrachomachia:—

'Both heralds bearing the ostents of war.'

8 The old copy reads, 'Who once no more,' &c. The emendation is by Stevens. Malone reads, 'Who wants no more,' &c.

9 I. e. the breath of flattery. The word spark was here accidentally repeated by the compositor in the old copy.

10 A near kinsman of this gentleman is mentioned in The Winter's Tale:—'And his pond fished by his near neighbour, by Sir Smile.'

Sit down, sit down; thou art no flatterer:
I thank thee for it; and high heaven forbid,
That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince,
Who by thy wisdom mak'st at a prince thy servant,
What would'st thou have me do?

Hel. With patience bear
Such griefs as you do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus;
Who minister'st a potion unto me,
That thou would'st tremble to receive thyself.
Attend me then: I went to Antioch,
Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death,
I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
From whence an issue I might propagate,
Are arms to princes, and bring to subjects joys.¹
Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;
The rest (hark in thine ear,) as black as incest;
Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father
Seem'd not to strike, but smooth:² but thou know'st
this,

'Tis time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.
Which fear so grew in me, I hid myself,
Under the covering of a careful night,
Who seem'd my good protector; and being here,
Bethought me what was past, what might succeed.
I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears
Decrease not, but grow faster than their years:
And should he doubt it,³ (as no doubt he doth,)
That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unlaid ope,—
To top that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him;
When all, for mine, if I may call't offence,
Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:
Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
Who now reprov'st me for it)——

Hel. Alas, sir!
Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Musings into my mind, a thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest, ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.⁴

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely I'll speak. Antiochus you fear,
And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,
Who, either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.
Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot,
Or Destinies do cut his thread of life.
Your rule direct to any; if to me,
Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in absence——

Hel. We'll mingle bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee, then, and to Tharsus

Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.⁵
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:
But in our orbs' we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,⁶
Thou show'st a subject's shame, I a true prince.⁷

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Tyre. An Ante-Chamber in the Palace. Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this is the court.
Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do not, I am sure to be hang'd at home: 'tis dangerous.—
Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets.⁸
Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the impendure of his oath to be one.—Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Doth speak sufficiently, he's gone to travel.

Thal. How! the king gone! [Aside.]

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicens'd of your loves,
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch——

Thal. What from Antioch? [Aside.]

Hel. Royal Antiochus, (on what cause I know not,)
Took some displeasure at him; at least he judg'd so:
And doubting lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, would correct himself;
So puts himself⁹ unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive [Aside.]
I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king it sure must please,
He scap'd the land, to perish on the seas.¹⁰
But I'll present me. Peace to the lords of Tyre!

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come,
With message unto princely Pericles;
But, since my landing, as I have understood
Your lord has took himself to unknown travels,
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it, since¹¹
Commended to our master, not to us:

7 I. e. in our different spheres.

⁸ — in seipso totius teræ atque rotundus.

8 Overcome.

⁹ This sentiment is not much unlike that of Falstaff:—
'I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince.'
The same idea is more clearly expressed in King Henry VIII. Act iii. Sc. 2:—

A loyal subject is Therein illustrated.

10 Who this wise fellow was, may be known from the following passage in Barnabé Riches Souldier's Wishes to Britain's Welfare, or Captain Skill and Captain Fill. 1694, p. 27:—'I will therefore commend the poet
Philopides, who being demanded by King Lisimachus, what favour he might do unto him for that he loved him, made this answer to the king—That your majesty would never impart unto me any of your secrets.'

11 Stevens has thought this phrase wanted illustration;
but it is of very common occurrence. 'To put himself in danger of his life; in periculum caput inferre.'—Barct.

12 The old copy reads:—

'But since he's gone the king's seas must please:
He scap'd the land, to perish at the sea.'

The emendation is by Dr. Percy.

13 The adverb since, which is wanting in the old copy, was supplied by Stevens for the sake of sense and metre.

1 'Forbid it, heaven, that kings should suffer their ears to hear their feelings palliated.'

2 'From whence I might propagate an issue that are arms,' &c. Stevens reads:—

'Bring arms to princes, and to subjects joys.'

3 To smooth is to soothe, coax, or flatter. Thus in King Richard III.

'Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog.'

So in Titus Andronicus:—

'Yield to his humour, smooth, and speak him fair.'

The verb to smooth is frequently used in this sense by our elder writers; for instance, by Stubbes in his Anatomie of Abuses, 1383:—'If you will learn to deride, scoffe, mock, and flout, to flatter and smooth,' &c.

4 The quarto of 1609 reads, 'And should he doot,'
&c.; from which the reading of the text has been formed.
Should he be in doubt that I shall keep his secret, (as there is no doubt but he is,) why, to 'top that doubt,'
i. e. to get rid of that painful uncertainty, he will strive to make me appear the aggressor, by attacking me first as the author of some supposed injury to himself.

5 That is, to lament their fate. The first quarto reads, 'to grieve for them.'

6 This transfer of authority naturally brings the first scene of Measure for Measure to our mind.

Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. THARSUS. A Room in the Governor's House. Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here,
And by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 'twill teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire, in hope to quench it;
For who digs hills because they do aspire,
Throws down one mountain, to cast up a higher.
O, my distressed lord, even such our griefs;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mistful eyes,
But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.

Cle. O, Dionyza,
Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish?
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep our woes
Into the air; our eyes do weep, till lungs
Fetch breath that may proclaim them louder; that,
If the gods slumber,* while their creatures want,
They may awake their helps to comfort them.
'Till then discourse our woes, felt several years,
And wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, o'er which I have government,
A city, on whom plenty held full hand
(For riches strew'd herself even in the streets;) [ Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss'd the clouds,

And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd at;
Whose men and dames so jettied² and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim them by:⁴
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on, as delight;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. O, 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,

These mouths, whom but of late, earth, sea, and air,
Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance,
As houses are defil'd for want of use,
They are now starv'd for want of exercise:
Those palates, who not yet two summers younger,⁵
Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread and beg for it;
Those mothers who, to nuzzle⁶ up their babes,
Thought nought too curious, are ready now,
To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd.
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots, who first shall die to lengthen life:

1 The old copy reads:—

— and seen with mischiefs eyes.

The alteration was made by Stevens, who thus explains the passage:—'Withdrawn as we now are from the scene we describe, our sorrows are simply felt, and appear indistinct, as through a mist.' Malone reads:—

— unseen with mischiefs eyes.

i. e. 'unseen by those who would feel a malignant pleasure in our misfortunes, and add to them by their triumph over us.'

2 The old copy reads, 'If heaven slumber,' &c. This was probably an alteration of the licenser of the press. Sense and grammar require that we should read, 'If the gods,' &c.

3 To jet is to strut, to walk proudly.

4 Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV.:—

— He was indeed the glass,

Wherin the noble youth did dress themselves.

Again in Cymbeline:—

'A sample to the youngest, to the more mature
A glass that feated them.'

5 The old copy has:—

— who not yet too savers younger.

The emendation was proposed by Mason. Stevens remarks that Shakespeare computes time by the same number of summers in Romeo and Juliet:—

'Let two more summers wither in their pride,' &c.

Malone reads:—

— who not used to hunger's savour.

6 Stevens thought that this word should be nuzzle; but the examples are numerous enough in our old writers

Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall,
Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness it.

Cle. O, let those cities, that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st, in haste,
For comfort is too far for us to expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore,

A portly sail of ships make hitherward.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes, but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their power,
To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,⁸
Whereas⁹ no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear: for, by the semblance
Of their white flags display'd, they bring us peace,
And come to us as favourers, not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him!¹⁰ untutor'd to repeat,
Who makes the fairest show means most deceit.
But bring they what they will, what need we fear?
The ground's the low'st, and we are half way there.¹¹
Go tell their general, we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes,
And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord.

[Exit.]

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist:¹²
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships, and number of our men,
Be, like a beacon fir'd, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And see the desolation of your streets!
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load;
And these our ships you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within, ters to show that the text is right. Thus in New Custom; Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. i. p. 294:—

'Borne to all wickedness, add nuzzled in all evil'

So Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. vi. 23:—

'Whom, till to ryper years he can aspyre,

He nuzzled up in life and manners wilde.'

'It were a more vantage and profit by a sette dele that yonge children's wyues were otherwyse greet a warke, than nuzzed them in suche errour.'—Horman's Vulgaris, 1519, fo. 86.

'Nuzzled in vicious disposition, and framed to an honest trade of living.'—Udal's Apothegmes, fo. 75.

So in The Death of King Arthur, 1601, cited by Malone:—

'Being nuzzled in effeminate delights.'

7 Hollow, applied to ships, is a Homeric epithet. See Iliad, v. 36. By power is meant forces.

8 A letter has been probably dropped at press: we may read, 'of unhappy men.'

9 It has been already observed that whereas was sometimes used for where; as well as the converse, where for whereas.

10 The quarto of 1609 reads:—

'Thou speak'st like himme untutor'd to repeat.'

'Like him untutor'd,' for 'like him who is untutored'

'Deluded by the pacific appearance of this navy, you talk like one who has never learned the common adage, —that the fairest outside is most to be suspected.'

11 The quarto of 1619 reads:—

'But bring they what they will, and what they can,

What need we fear?

The ground's the low'st, and we are half way there.'

12 i. e. if he rather stands on peace.

With bloody views, expecting overthrow,¹
Are stor'd with corn, to make your needy bread,
And give them life, who are hunger-starv'd, half dead.

All. The gods of Greece protect you!
And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise;
We do not look for reverence, but for love;
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils!
Till when (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen,)
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here
a while,
Until our stars that frowns, lend us a smile.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I wis, to incest bring;
A better prince, and benign lord,
Prove awful both in deed and word.²
Be quiet, then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd necessity.
I'll show you those in trouble's reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation,
(To whom I give my benizon,)
Is still at Tharsus, where each man³
Thinks all is writ he spoken can:⁴
And, to remember what he does,
Gild his statue to make it glorious:⁵
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?

Dumb Show.

Enter at one Door PERICLES, talking with CLEON; at the other Train with them. Enter at another Door, a Gentleman with a Letter to PERICLES; PERICLES shows the Letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exeunt PERICLES, CLEON, &c. severally.

Gow. Good Helicane, that staid at home,⁶
(Not to eat honey, like a drone,
From others' labours; for though he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive;
And, to fulfil his prince's desire,⁷
Sends word of all that haps in Tyre;⁸
How Thaliard came full bent with sin,
And hid intent, to murder him;
And that in Tharsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest:

1 The old copy reads:—

'And these our ships you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse, was stuff'd with
With bloody veins,' &c.

The emendation is Stevens's. Mr. Boswell says that the old reading may mean, elliptically, 'which was stuff'd.'

2 I. e. 'you have seen a better prince, &c. that will prove awful,' i. e. reverent. The verb in the first line is carried on to the third.

3 The good in conversation
(To whom I give my benizon,)
Is still at Tharsus, where—

Gower means to say, 'The good prince (on whom I bestow my best wishes) is still engaged at Tharsus, where every man.' &c. Conversation is conduct, behaviour. See the Second Epistle of St. Peter, iii. 11.

4 'Pays as much respect to whosoever Pericles says, as if it were Holy Writ.'

5 This circumstance, as well as the foregoing, is found in the Confessio Amantis:—

'That they for ever in remembrance
Made a figure in resemblance
Of hym, and in a common place
They set it up; so that his face
Might every maner man behold,
It was of lason over gylte,' &c.

He knowing so, put forth to seas,
Where when men been, there's seldom ease;
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship
Should house him safe, is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is test:
All perishes of man, of poif,
No aught escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes: what shall be next,—
Pardon old Gower; this 'longs the text.' [Exit.]

SCENE I. Pentapolis. An open Place by the Sea Side. Enter PERICLES, wd.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you;
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death:
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watery grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he crave.

Enter Three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilche?

2 Fish. Ho! come, and bring away the nets.

1 Fish. What, Patch-breec'h, I say!

3 Fish. What say you, master?

1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wannion.¹⁰

3 Fish. 'Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.

1 Fish. Alas, poor souls, it griev'd my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus, how he bounced and tumbled?¹¹ they say, they are half fish, half flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come, but I look to be wash'd.
Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why, as men do a-land: the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him,¹² and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a' the land, who never leave gaping till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would

6 Thus the old copy. Stevens reads:—

'Good Helicane Aeth said at home.'

7 Old copy:—'Saw'd one of all,' &c. The emendation is Stevens's.

8 Pardon old Gower from telling what ensues, it belongs to the text, not to his province as chorus.—
Stevens justly remarks, that 'the language of our fictitious Gower, like that of the Pseudo-Rowley, is so often irreconcilable to the practice of any age, that criticism on such bungling imitations is almost thrown away.'

9 The old copy reads:—

'What to pelche.'

The emendation was suggested by Mr. Tyrwhitt, who remarks that Pilche is a leathern coat.

10 This expression, which is equivalent to with a machief, or with a vengeance, is of very frequent occurrence in old writers.

11 Scallors have observed, that the playing of porpoises round a ship is a certain prognostic of a violent gale of wind.

12 So in Coriolanus:—

'—like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale.'

have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind—

Per. Simonides?

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject of the sea. These fishers tell the infirmities of men; And from their watery empire recollect All that may men approve, or men detect! Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? if it be a day fits you, scratch it out of the calendar, and no body will look after it!

Per. Nay, see, the sea hath cast upon your coast—

2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea; to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind, In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball For them to play upon, entreats you pity him; He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece, gets more with begging, than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve, sure: for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on: A man shrunk up with cold: my veins are chill, And have no more of life, than may suffice To give my tongue that heat, to ask your help; Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For that I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die, quoth-a? Now, gods forbid! I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and, moreover, puddings and flap-jacks, and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark, you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

2 Fish. But crave? Then I'll turn craver, too, and so I shall 'scape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipped, then?

2 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your beggars were whipped, I would wish no better office, than to be beadle. But, master, I'll go draw up the net. [Exeunt two of the Fishermen.]

Per. How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

1 Fish. Hark you, sir! do you know where you are?

Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king, the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do you call him?

1 The old copy reads, 'If it be a day fits you search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.' The preceding speech of Pericles affords no apt introduction to the reply of the fisherman. Some remark upon the day appears to have been omitted. Stevens supplied it thus:—

Per. Peace be at your labour, honest fisherman; The day is rough, and therefore your occupation.' The following speech of Pericles is equally abrupt and inconsistent:—

'Y' may see the sea hath cast me upon your coast.'

The emendation is by Stevens.

Dr. Farmer thinks that there may be an allusion to the die honestissimus of Cicero. The lucky and unlucky days are put down in the old calendar.

2 Thus in Sidney's Arcadia, book v.:—'In such a shadow, &c. mankind lives, that neither they know how to foresee, nor what to fear, and are, like tennis balls, tossed by the racket of the higher powers.'

3 Flap-jacks are pancakes. Thus in Taylor's Jack a Lent:—'Until at last, by the skill of the cooks, it is

1 Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves to be so call'd, for his peaceable reign, and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since he gains from his subjects the name of good, by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey; and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world, to just and tourney for her love.

Per. Were my fortunes equal to my desires, I could wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for—his wife's soul.

Re-enter the Two Fishermen, drawing up a Net.

2 Fish. Help, master, help; here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 'twill hardly come out. Ha! bots on't, 'tis come at last, and 'tis turned to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.

Thanks, fortune, yet, that after all my crosses, Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself;

And, though it was mine own,* part of mine heritage,

Which my dead father did bequeath to me,

With this strict charge, (even as he left his life,) Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shield

'Twixt me and death (and pointed to this brace:')

For that it sav'd me, keep it in like necessity, The which the gods protect thee from! it may defend thee.

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any man, Took it in rage, though calm'd, have given it again, I thank thee for't; my shipwreck's now no ill, Since I have here my father's gift in his will.

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,

For it was sometime target to a king; I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly, And for his sake, I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court, Where with't I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortunes better,

I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest your debtor.

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady?

Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms.

1 Fish. Why, de ye take it, and the gods give thee good on't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend; 'twas we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolements, certain vails. I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe't, I will.

Now, by your furtherance, I am cloth'd in steel; And spite of all the rupture of the sea, This jewel holds his bidding* on my arm; transformed into the form of a flap-jack, which in our translation, is call'd a pancake.

4 'Things must be' (says the speaker,) as they are appointed to be; and what a man is not sure to compass, he has yet a just right to attempt.' The Fisherman may then be supposed to begin a new sentence.—'His wife's soul;' but here he is interrupted by his comrades; and it would be vain to conjecture the conclusion of his speech.

5 This comic exclamation was formerly used in the room of one less decent. The bots is a disease in horses produced by worms.

6 i. e. and I thank you, though it was mine own.

7 The brace is the armour for the arm. So in Trollop and Cressida:—

'I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,

And in my vant brace put this wither'd brawn.'

8 The rupture of the sea may mean the breaking of the sea, as Malone suggests; but I would rather read rapture, which is often used in old writers for violent seizure, or the act of carrying away forcibly. As in the example cited by Malone.

9 The old copy reads, 'his building;' but biding

Unto thy value will I mount myself
Upon a courser, whose delightful steps
Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread.—
Only, my friend, I yet am unprovided
Of a pair of bases.¹

2 Fish. We'll sure provide: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair; and I'll bring thee to the court myself.

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will;
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A public Way, or Platform, leading to the Lists. A Pavilion by the side of it, for the reception of the King, Princess, Lords, &c. Enter SIMONIDES, THAIS, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?
1 Lord. They are, my liege;
And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them,² we are ready; and our daughter,
In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.]

Thai. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express
My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. 'Tis fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself:
As jewels lose their glory, if neglected,
So princes their renown, if not respected.
'Tis now your honour,³ daughter, to explain
The labour of each knight, in his device.

Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight: he passes over the Stage, and his Squire presents his Shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?
Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Æthiop, reaching at the sun;
The word,⁴ Lux tua vita mihi.

Sim. He loves you well, that holds his life of you.
[The second Knight passes.]

Who is the second, that presents himself?
Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an arm'd knight, that's conquer'd by a lady:
The motto thus, in Spanish, *Pis per dalgura que per fuerca.*⁵ [The third Knight passes.]

Sim. And what's the third?
Thai. The third, of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry:
The word, *Me pompa proverei opes.*⁶

[The fourth Knight passes.]

Sim. What is the fourth?
Thai. A burning torch, that's turned upside down;
The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.

was probably the poet's word. A similar expression occurs in Othello:—

'— look, I have a weapon,
A better never did sustain itself
Upon a soldier's thigh.'

Any ornament of encased gold was anciently styled a jewel.

1 Bases were a sort of petticoat that hung down to the knees, and were suggested by the Roman military dress, in which they seem to have been separate parallel slips of cloth or leather. In Rider's Latin Dictionary, bases are rendered palliolus curtus. The Highlanders wear a kind of bases at this day. In Massin-ger's Picture, Sophia, speaking of Hilarlo's disguise, says to Corisca:—

— You, minion,
Had a hand in it too, as it appears
Your petticoat serves for bases to this warrior.'

2 i.e. return them notice that we are ready, &c.
3 The sense would be clearer were we to substitute both in this and in the following instance office for honour. Honour may however mean her situation as queen of the feast, as she is afterwards called. The idea of this scent may have been derived from the third book of the Iliad, where Helen describes the Grecian leaders to her father-in-law Priam.

Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his power and will,
Which can as well inflame, as it can kill.

[The fifth Knight passes.]
Thai. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds;
Holding out gold, that's by the touchstone tried:
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes.]
Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?
Thai. He seems to be a stranger; but his present is
A wither'd branch, that's only green at top;
The motto, *In hac spe vivo.*⁷

Sim. A pretty moral;
From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may flourish.

1 Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show

Can any way speak in his just commend:
For, by his rusty outside, he appears To have practis'd more the whiptock,⁸ than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes
To an honour'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust
Until this day, to scour it in the dust.⁹

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scam
The outward habit by the inward man.¹⁰
But stay, the knights are coming; we'll withdraw into the gallery. [Exeunt.]

[Great shouts, and all cry, The mean knight.]

SCENE III. The same. A Hall of State. A Banquet prepared. Enter SIMONIDES, THAIS, Lords, Knights, and Attendants.

Sim. Knights,
To say you are welcome, were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,
Since every worth in show commends itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are princes, and my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest;
To whom this wreath of victory I give,
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.
In framing artists, art hath thus decreed,
To make some good, but others to exceed;
And you're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen of the feast

(For, daughter, so you are,) here take your place:
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simo-nides.

4 i.e. the mot or motto. See Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 5:—
'Now to my word'

5 i.e. more by sweetness than by force. It should be 'Mos per dalgura,' &c. Pis is Italian not Spanish.

6 The work which appears to have furnished the author of the play with this and the two subsequent devices of the knights, has the following title:—'The heroical Devices of M. Claudius Paradin, canon of Beau-gen; whereunto are added the Lord Gabriel Symeon, and others. Translated out of Latin into English, by P. S. 1591, 24mo. Mr. Douce has given copies of some of them in his illustrations, vol. ii. p. 126.

7 This device and motto may have been taken from Daniel's translation of Paulus Jovius, 1585; in which it will be found at sig. H. 7. b.

8 i.e. the carter's whip. It was sometimes used as a term of contempt; as in Alibazaz, 1615:—

— out Carter,
Hence, dirty whiptock.'

9 The idea of this ill-appointed knight appears to have been taken from the first book of Sidney's Arcadia:—'His armour of as old a fashion, beside the rustic poornesse, &c. so that all that looked on measured his length on the earth already,' &c.

10 i.e. 'that makes us scam the inward man by the outward habit' Such inversions are not uncommon in old writers.

Sim. Your presence glads our days ; honour we love,
For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marsh. Sir, yond's your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

I Knight. Contend not, sir ; for we are gentlemen,
That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sit, sir ; sit.

Per. By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These caies resist me,¹ be not thought upon.

Thai. By Juno, that is queen
Of marriage, all the viands that eat
Do seem unsavoury, wishing him my meat ;
Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but

A country gentleman ;
He has done no more than other knights have done ;
Broken a staff, or so ; so let it pass.

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. You king's to me, like to my father's picture,
Which tells me, in that glory once he was ;
Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,
And be the sun, for them to reverence.
None that behold him, but like lesser lights,
Did veil² their crowns to his supremacy ;
Where³ now his son's a glowworm in the night,
The which hath fire in darkness, none in light ;
Whereby I see that time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave,⁴
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights ?

I Knight. Who can be other, in this royal presence ?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stor'd unto the brim,

(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips,)

We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause awhile ;
You knight, methinks, doth sit too melancholy,
As if the entertainment in our court
Had not a show might countervail his worth.
Note it not you, Thaisa ?

Thai. What is it

To me, my father ?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter ;
Princes, in this, should live like gods above,
Who freely give to every one that comes
To honour them : and princes, not doing so,
Are like to gnats, which make a sound, but kill'd
Are wonder'd at.⁵

Therefore to make his entrance⁶ more sweet,
Here say, we drink this standing-bowl of wine to
him.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me
Unto a stranger knight to be so bold ;
He may my proffer take for an offence,
Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How !

Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [Aside.]

Sim. And further tell him, we desire to know,
Of whence he is, his name, and parentage.

1 i. e. 'these delicacies go against m' stomach.'—
The old copy gives this speech to Simonides, and reads,
'he not thought upon.' Gower describes Apollinus, the Pericles of this play, under the same circumstances :—
'That he eat ever stulle and thought.
As he which of no meat rought.'

2 Lower.

3 Where is here again used for whereas. The peculiar property of the glowworm, upon which the poet has here employed a line, is happily described in Hamlet in a single word :—

'The glowworm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.'

4 So in Roméo and Juliet :—

'The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb ;
What is her burying grave, that is her womb.'

Milton has the same thought :—
The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave.'

Thai. The king, my father, sir, has drunk to you.
Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And further he desires to know of you,
Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name, Pericles ;
My education being in arts and arms ;)—
Who looking for adventures in the world,
Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men,
And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks your grace ; names himself Pericles,

A gentleman of Tyre, who only by Misfortune of the seas has been bereft
Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now by the gods, I pity his misfortune,
And will awake him from his melancholy.

Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,
And waste the time, which looks for other revels.

Even in your armours, as you are address'd,⁷

Will very well become a soldier's dance.

I will not have excuse, with saying, this

Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads ;

Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.

[The Knights dance.]

So, this was well ask'd, 'twas so well perform'd.

Come, sir ;

Here is a lady that wants breathing too :

And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre

Are excellent in making ladies trip ;

And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my

lord.

Sim. O, that's as much, as you would be denied

[The Knights and Ladies dance.]

Of your fair courtesy.—Unclass, unclasp ;

Thanks, gentlemen, to all ; all have done well ;

But you the best. [To PERICLES.] Pages and lights, conduct

These knights unto their several lodgings : Yours,

sir,

We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,

For that's the mark I know you level at :

Therefore each one betake him to his rest ;

To-morrow, all for speeding do their best.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Tyre. A Room in the Governor's

House. Enter HELICANUS and ESCANES.

Hel. No, no, my Escanes ; know this of me,—

Antiochus from incest liv'd not free ;

For which, the most high gods not minding longer,

To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,

Due to this heinous capital offence,

Even in the height and pride of all his glory,

When he was seated, and his daughter with him,

In a chariot of inestimable value,

A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up

Their bodies, even to loathing ; for they so stunk,

That all those eyes ador'd them⁸ ere their fall,

Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Escan. 'Twas very strange.

5 'When kings, like insects, lie dead before us, our admiration is excited by contemplating how in both instances the powers of creating bustle were superior to those which either object should seem to have promised.

The worthless monarch, and the idle gnat, have only lived to make an empty bluster ; and when both alike are dead, we wonder how it happened that they made so much, or that we permitted them to make it : a natural reflection on the death of an unserviceable prince, who having dispensed no blessings, can hope for no better character.'—Steevens.

6 By his entrance appears to be meant his present trance, the reverie in which he is sitting.

7 'As you are accoutred, prepared for combat.' So in King Henry V. :—

'To-morrow for the march are we address'd'

8 I. e. which ador'd them.

Hel. And yet but just; for though
This king were great, his greatness was no guard
To bar heaven's shaft; but sin had his reward.
Ecco. 'Tis very true.

Enter Three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private conference,
Or council, has respect with him but he.
2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve without reproof.
3 Lord. And curst be he that will not second it.
2 Lord. Follow me, then: Lord Helicane, a word.
Hel. With me? and welcome: Happy day, my lords.

1 Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the top,
And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not the prince you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself, then, noble Helicane;
But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.
If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there:
And be resolv'd,² he lives to govern us,
Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,
And leaves us to our free election.

2 Lord. Whose death's, indeed, the strongest in our censure:³

And knowing this kingdom, if without a head,
(Like goodly buildings left without a roof,)
Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,
That best know'st how to rule, and how to reign,
We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helicane!

Hel. Try honour's cause, forbear your suffrages:

If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.
Take I your wish, I leap into the sea.⁴

Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.

A twelvemonth longer, let me then entreat you

To forbear choice i' the absence of your king;⁵

If in which time expir'd, he not return,

I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.

But if I cannot win you to this love,

Go search like noblemen, like noble subjects,

And in your search spend your adventurous worth;

Whom if you find, and win unto return,

You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

1 Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;

And, since Lord Helicane enjoineth us,

We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp
hands;

When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Eccent.]

SCENE V. Postapohia. A Room in the Palace.
Enter SIMONIDES, reading a Letter; the Knights meet him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simonides.

Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let you know,

That for this twelvemonth, she'll not undertake

A married life.

Her reason to herself is only known,

Which from herself by no means can I get.

2 Knight. May we not get access to her, my
lord?

Sim. Faith, by no means; she hath so strictly tied her

To her chamber, that it is impossible.

One twelve moons more she'll wear Diana's livery;

1 'To what this charge of partially was designed to conduct we do not learn; for it appears to have no influence over the rest of the dialogue.'—Steevens.

2 Satisfied.

3 I.e. 'the most probable in our opinion.' Censure is frequently used for judgment, opinion, by Shakespeare.

4 The old copy reads:—

'Take I your wish, I leap into the sea,' &c.
Steevens contends for the old reading; that it is merely figurative, and means, 'I embark too hastily on an expedition in which ease is disproportioned to labour.'

5 Some word being omitted in this line in the old copy, Steevens thus supplied it:—

'To forbear choice i' the absence of your king.'

This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,⁶
And on her virgin honour will not break it.

3 Knight. Though loath to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Eccent.]

Sim. So,

They're well despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:

She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger knight,
Or never more to view nor day nor light.

Mistress, 'tis well, your choice agrees with mine;

I like that well:—say, how absolute she's in't,

Not minding whether I dislike or no!

Well, I commend her choice;

And will no longer have it be delay'd.

Soft, here he comes:—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!

Sim. To you as much, sir! I am beholden to you,
For your sweet music this last night: my ears,
I do protest, were never better fed

With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;

Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.

Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord.

Sim. Let me ask one thing. What do you think,

sir, of

My daughter?

Per. As of a most virtuous princess.

Sim. And she is fair, too, is she not?

Per. As a fair day in summer: wondrous fair.

Sim. My daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;

Ay, so well, sir, that you must be her master,

And she'll your scholar be; therefore look to it.

Per. Unworthy I to be her schoolmaster.

Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing also.

Per. What's here!

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!

'Tis the king's subtlety to have my life. [Aside.]

O, seek not to entrap, my gracious lord,

A stranger, and distressed gentleman,

That never aim'd so high, to leave your daughter,

But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art

A villain.

Per. By the gods, I have not, sir.

Never did thought of mine levy offence;

Nor never did my actions yet commence

A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per.

Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor, sir.

Per. Even in his throat (unless it be the king,)

That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

[Aside.]

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,

That never relish'd of a base descent.

I came unto your court, for honour's cause,

And not to be a rebel to her state;

And he that otherwise accounts of me,

This sword shall prove his honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—

Here comes my daughter, she can witness it

Enter THAISIA.

Per. Then as you are as virtuous as fair,

Resolve your angry father, if my tongue

Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe

To any syllable that made love to you?

Thai. Why, sir, say if you had,

Who takes offence at that would make me glad.

6 'It were to be wished, (says Steevens,) that Simonides, who is represented as a blameless character, and hit on some more ingenious expedient for the dismissal of these wooers. Here he tells them, as a solemn truth, what he knows to be a fiction of his own.'

7 So in Hamlet:—

'That has no relief of salvation in it.'

And in Macbeth:—

'So well thy words become thee as thy wounds,

They smack of honour both.'

Sin. Yes, mistress, are you so peremptory?—
I am glad of it with all my heart. [Aside.] I'll tame you;
I'll bring you in subjection.—
Will you, not having my consent, bestow
Your love and your affections on a stranger?
(Who, for aught I know to the contrary,
Or think, may be as great in blood as I.) [Aside.
Hear, therefore, mistress; frame your will to mine,—
And you, sir, hear you.—Either be rul'd by me,
Or I will make you—man and wife.—
Nay, come; your hands and lips must seal it too.—
And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;—
And for a further grief,—God give you joy!
What, are you both pleas'd?

Tha. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even so, my life, my blood that fosters it.

Sin. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, please your majesty.

Sin. It pleaseth me so well, I'll see you wed;

Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Now sleep yelaked hath the rout;
No din but snores, the house about,
Made louder by the o'er-fest breast¹
Of this most pompous marriage-feast.
The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
Now couches 'fore the moose's hole;
And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
As the blither for their drouth.
Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
Where, by the loss of maidenhead,
A babe is moulded:—Be attant,
And time that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly echo;²
What's dumb in show, I'll plain with speech.

Dumb Show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES at one door, with Attendants: a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a Letter. PERICLES shows it to SIMONIDES; the Lords kneel to the former.³ Then enter THASIA with child, and LYCHORIDA. SIMONIDES shows his Daughter the Letter; she rejoices: she and PERICLES take leave of her Father, and depart. Then SIMONIDES, &c. retire.

Gow. By many a dearn and painful perch⁴

1 The quarto of 1619 reads:—

'Even as my life or blood that fosters it.'

We have the same thought most exquisitely expressed in Julius Cæsar:—

'As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.'

2 So Virgil, speaking of Rhamnes, who was killed in the midnight expedition of Nisus and Euryalus:—

'Rhamneten aggreditur, qui forte tapetibus alidis
Exstructus, toto proflebat pectore somnum.'

3 Eke out.

4 The Lords kneel to Pericles, because they are now, for the first time, informed by this letter, that he is king of Tyre. 'No man,' says Gower, in his Confessio Amantis:—

'—knew the soth cas,
But he hym self; what man he was.'

By the death of Antiochus and his daughter, Pericles has also succeeded to the throne of Antioch, in consequence of having rightly interpreted the riddle proposed to him.

5 Dearn signifies lonely, solitary. A perch is a measure of five yards and a half. 'The careful search of Pericles is made by many a dearn and painful perch, by the four opposing coignes which join the world together; with all due diligence.'

6 I.e. help, befriend or assist the search. So in Measure for Measure:—

'—can you so stead me
To bring me to the sight of Isabella?'

7 I.e. to suppress: oppress.

8 An exclamation equivalent to well-a-day.

9 'The further consequences of this storm I shall not describe; what ensues may be conveniently exhibited in action; but action could not well have displayed all the events that I have now related.'

Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coignes,
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence,
That horse, and sail, and high expense,
Can stand the quest.⁴ At last from Tyre,
(Fame answering the most strong inquire,)
To the court of King Simonides
Are letters brought; the tenor these:
Antiochus and his daughter's dead:
The men of Tyrus, on the head
Of Helicanus would set on
The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
The mutiny there he hastes to oppress;⁵
Says to them, if King Pericles
Come not home, in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their dooms,
Will take the crown. The sum of this,
Brought hither to Pentapolis,
Y-ravished the regions round,
And every one with claps 'gan sound.
Our heir apparent is a king:

Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?

Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre:

His queen, with child, makes her desire,

(Which, who shall cross?) along to go;

(Omit we all their dole and wo;)

Lychorida, her nurse, she takes,

And so to sea. Their vessel shakes

On Neptune's billow; half the flood

Hath their keel cut; but fortune's mood

Varies again; the grizzled north

Disgorges such a tempest forth,

That, as a duck for life that dives,

So up and down the poor ship drives.

The lady shrieks, and, well-a-⁶near!

Doth fall in travail with her fear:

And what ensues in this fell storm

Shall, for itself, itself perform.

I will relate; action may

Conveniently the rest convey:

Which might not what by me is told.⁸

In your imagination hold

This stage, the ship,¹⁰ upon whose deck

The sea-tost Pericles appears to speak. [Exit]

SCENE I. Enter PERICLES, on a Ship at Sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast,¹¹ rebuke these surges,

10 It is clear from these lines that when the play was originally performed, no attempt was made to exhibit either a sea or a ship. The ensuing scene and some others must have suffered considerably in the representation, from the poverty of the stage apparatus in the time of the author.

11 It should be remembered that Pericles is supposed to speak from the deck. Lychorida, on whom he calls, is supposed to be in the cabin beneath. 'This great vast' is 'this wide expanse.' This speech is exhibited in so strange a form in the old editions, that it is here given to enable the reader to judge in what a corrupt state it has come down to us, and be induced to treat the attempts to restore it to integrity with indulgence:—

'The God of this great vast, rebuke these surges,
Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou that hast
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass;
Having call'd them from the deepe, o still
Thy deafning dreadful thunders, gently quench
Thy nimble sulphurous flashes, o How Lychorida!
How does my queene? thou storm venomously,
Wilt thou speat all thyself? the sea-mans whistle
Is as a whisper in the eares of death,
Unheard Lychorida? Lucina oh!
Divnest patronesse and my wife gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy delite
Aboard our dauncing boat, make swift the pangues
Of my queenes travayles? now Lychorida?
Pericles, having called to Lychorida, without the power to make her hear on account of the tempest, at last with frantic peevishness addresses himself to it:—
—Thou storm thou! venomously
Wilt thou spit all thyself?—

Having indulged himself in this question, he grows cooler, and observes that the very boatswain's whistle has no more effect on the sailors than the voices of those who speak to the dead. He then repeats his inquiries

Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou, that hast
Upon the winds command, bind them in brass,
Having call'd them from the deep! O still thy deaf'ning,

Thy dreadful thunders; gently quench thy nimble
Sulphureous flashes!—O how, Lychorida,
How does my queen!—Thou storm, thou! venomously!

Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
Unheard.—Lychorida!—Lucina, O
Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
Aboard our dancing boat; make swift the pangs
Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lychorida—

Enter LYCHORIDA, with an Infant.

Lyc. Here is a thing
Too young for such a place, who if it had Conceit² would die as I am like to do.
Take in your arms this piece of your dead queen.

Per. How! how, Lychorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.
Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
A little daughter; for the sake of it,
Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O, you gods!
Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
Recall not what we give, and therein may Vie³ honour with you.

Lyc. Patience, good sir,
Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!
For a more blust'rous birth had never babe:
Quiet and gentle thy conditions!⁴
For thou art the rudelest welcom'd to this world,
That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows!
Thou hast as chiding⁵ a nativity,
As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,
To herald thee from the womb: even at the first,
Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,⁶
With all thou canst find here.—Now the good gods
Throw their best eyes upon it!

Enter Two Sailors.

1 Sail. What courage, sir? God save you.

Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;⁷
It hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
Of this poor infant, this fresh-new sea-farer,
I would, it would be quiet.

1 Sail. Slack the bolins⁸ there; thou wilt not, wilt thou? Blow and split thyself.

2 Sail. But sea-room, as the brine and cloudy billow kiss the moon, I care not.

1 Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard; the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be cleared of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition.

of Lychorida, but receiving no answer, concludes with a prayer for his queen.

1 Maliciously.

2 I. e. 'who if it had thought.'

3 That is, 'contend with you in honour.' The old copy reads:—'Use honour with you.'

4 Conditions are qualities, dispositions of mind.

5 I. e. as noise a one.

6 I. e. thou hast already lost more (by the death of thy mother) than thy safe arrival at the port of life can counterbalance, with all to boot that we can give thee.
Portage is here used for conveyance into life.

7 A flaw is a stormy gust of wind. See Coriolanus,
Act v. Sc. 3.

8 Bolins or bostines are ropes by which the sails of a ship are governed when the wind is unfavourable: they are slackened when it is high. Thus in The Two Noble Kinsmen:—

'—— the wind is fair;

Top the bowling.'

9 The old copy reads, 'strong in easterne.' The emendation is Mr. Boswell's.

10 Old copy, 'in care.'

11 The old copies erroneously read:—
'The air-remaining lamps.'

The emendation is Malone's. The propriety of it will

1 Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it still hath been observed; and we are strong in custom.⁹
Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight.

Per. Be it as you think meet.—Most wretched
queen!

Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible child-bed hast thou had, my dear,
No light, no fire; the unfriendly elements
Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time
To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze;¹⁰
Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
And aye-remaining¹¹ lamps, the belching whale,
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,
Lying with simple shells. Lychorida,
Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink, and paper,
My casket and my jewels; and bid Neander
Bring me the satin coffer;¹² lay the babe
Upon the pillow: hie thee, whiles I say
A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit LYCHORIDA.]

2 Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caulk'd and bitum'd ready.

Per. I thank thee. Mariner, say, what coast is this?

2 Sail. We are near Tharsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner, Alter thy course for Tyre.¹³ When canst thou reach it?

2 Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O, make for Tharsus.

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyrrus; there I'll leave it
At careful nursing. Go thy ways, good mariner;
I'll bring the body presently. [Exeunt]

SCENE II. Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House. Enter CERIMON, a Servant, and some Persons who have been shipwrecked.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men;
It has been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I have been in many; but such a night as
this,

Till now I ne'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature,
That can recover him. Give this to the 'pothecary,
And tell him how it works.¹⁴ [To PHILEMON]

[Exeunt PHILEMON, Servant, and those who had been shipwrecked.]

Enter Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Good morrow, sir.

2 Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen,
Why do you stir so early?

be evident if we recur to the author's leading thought, which is founded on the customs observed in the pomp of ancient sepulture. Within old monuments and receptacles for the dead perpetual (i. e. aye-remaining) lamps were supposed to be lighted up. Thus Pope, in his Eloisa:—

'Ah hopeless lasting flames, like those that burn

To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn'

'Instead of a monument erected over thy bones, and perpetual lamps to burn near them, the spouting whale shall oppress thee with his weight, and the mass of waters shall roll with low heavy murmur over thy head.'

12 The old copies have coffin. Pericles does not mean to bury his queen in this coffer (which was probably one lined with satin,) but to take from thence the cloth of state, in which she was afterwards shrouded.

13 'Change thy course, which is now for Tyre, and go to Tharsus.'

14 The precedent words show that the physic cannot be designed for the master of the servant here introduced.
Perhaps the circumstance was introduced for no other reason than to mark more strongly the extensive benevolence of Cerimon. It could not be meant for the poor men who have just left the stage, to whom he has ordered kitchen physic.

1 Gent. Sir,
Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook, as the earth did quake;
The very principals¹ did seem to rend,
And all to topple;² pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

2 Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so early;
'Tis not our husbandry.³

Cer. O, you say well.

1 Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having
Rich tire⁴ about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.
It is most strange,
Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer. I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning⁵ were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches; careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god. 'Tis known, I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have (Together with my practice,) made familiar
To me and to my aid, the blest infusions
That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;
And I can speak of the disturbances
That nature works, and of her cures; which give me
A more content in course of true delight
Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,
Or tie my treasure up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.⁶

2 Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour'd forth
Your charity, and hundreds call themselves
Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd:
And not your knowledge, personal pain, but even
Your purse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never—

Enter Two Servants with a Chest.

Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

Serv. Sir, even now
Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest;
'Tis of some wreck.

Cer. Set't down, let's look on it.

2 Gent. 'Tis like a coffin, sir.
Cer. What's'er it be,
'Tis wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight;
If the sea's stomach be o'ercharg'd with gold,
It is a good constraint of fortune, that
It belches upon us.

2 Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 'tis caul'd and bitum'd!⁷
Did the sea cast it up?

1 The principals are the strongest rafters in the roof of a building.

2 All-to is a common augmentative in old language. The word topple, which means tumble, is used again in Machab:

'Though castles topple on their warders' heads.'

3 Husbandry here signifies economical prudence. So in Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2—'borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.'

And in Henry V.—

'For our bad neighbours make us early stirrers,
Which is both beahful and good husbandry.'

4 The gentlemen rose early because they were in lodgings, which stood exposed near the sea. They wonder to find Lord Cerimon stirring, because he had rich tire about him, meaning perhaps a bed more richly and comfortably furnished, where he could have slept warm and secure in defiance of the tempest. Steevens thinks that the reasoning of these gentlemen should have led them rather to say, 'such towers about you,' i. e. a house or castle that could safely resist the assaults of the weather.

5 i. e. knowledge.

6 Mr. Steevens had seen an old Flemish print in which Death was exhibited in the act of plundering a miser of his bags, and the Fool (discriminated by his bauble, &c.) was standing behind and grinning at the process. The Dance of Death appears to have been

Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Come, wrench it open,
Soft, soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it.
O, you most potent god! what's here? a corpse!

1 Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and entreasur'd

With bags of spices full! A passport too!

Apollo, perfect me i' the characters!

[Unfolds a Scroll.

[Reads.

Here I give to understand

(If e'er this coffin drive a-land,)⁸

I, king Pericles, have lost

This queen, worth all our mundane cost.

Who finds her, give her burying,

She was the daughter of a king:

Besides this treasure for a fee,

The gods require his charity!

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for wo!—This chanc'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;
For look how fresh she looks!—They were too rough,

That threw her in the sea. Make fire within;

Fetch hither all the boxes in my closet.

Death may usurp on nature many hours,

And yet the fire of life kindle again

The overpressed spirits. I have heard

Of an Egyptian, had nine hours lien dead,

By good appliance was recover'd.

Enter a Servant, with Boxes, Napkins, and Fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—

The rough and woful music that we have,

Cause it to sound, beseech you.

The vial once more;—how thou stirr'st, thou block!

The music there.—I pray you, give her air:—

Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth

Breathes out of her; she hath not been entranc'd

Above five hours. See, how she 'gins to blow

Into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens, sir,

Through you, increase our wonder, and set up

Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,

Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels

Which Pericles hath lost,

Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;⁹

The diamonds of a most praised water

Appear to make the world twice rich. O, live, anciently a popular exhibition. A venerable and aged clergyman informed Mr. Steevens that he had once been a spectator of it. The dance consisted of Death's contrivances to surprise the Merry Andrew, and of the Merry Andrew's efforts to elude the stratagems of Death, by whom at last he was overpowered; his finale being attended with such circumstances as mark the exit of the Dragon of Wantley. It should seem that the general idea of this serio-comic pas-de-deux had been borrowed from the ancient Dance of Machabre, have been anciently acted in churches like the Moralities. The subject was a frequent ornament of cloisters both here and abroad. The reader will remember the beautiful series of wood-cuts of the Dance of Death, attributed, (though erroneously,) to Holbein. Mr. Douce is in possession of an exquisite set of initial letters, representing the same subject; in one of which the Fool is engaged in a very stout combat with his adversary, and is actually buffeting him with a bladder filled with peas or pebbles, an instrument used by modern Merry Andrews.

7 In Twine's translation of the story of Apollonius of Tyre this uncommon phrase, a-land, is repeatedly used in that version it is to Cerimon's pupil, Machabon, and not to Cerimon himself, that the lady is indebted for her recovery.

8 So in the Tempest:—

'The fringed curtains of thine eye advance,

And say what thou seest yond?

And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.]

Thai. O, dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?

1 Gent. Must rare.

Cer. Hush, gentle neighbours;
Lend me your hands: to the next chamber bear her.
Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal. Come, come, come;
And Æsculapius guide us!

[Exeunt carrying THAISA away.]

SCENE III. Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.
Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, LYCHORIDA, and MARINA.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
My twelve months are expir'd, and Tytus stands
In a litigious peace. You, and your lady,
Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt you mortally,

Yet glance full wand'ringly on us.

Dion. O, your sweet queen!
That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

To have bleas'd mine eyes!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end Must be as 'tis. My babe Marina (whom
For she was born at sea, I have nam'd so) here
I charge your charity withal, and leave her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord, but think
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you),
Must in your child be thought on. If neglect
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me credit,⁴
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will⁵ in't. So I take my leave.

1 This is from the Confessio Amantis:—

'And first his eyes up she cast,
And when she more of strength caught,
Her arms both forth she astraights;
Held up his honde, and piteouslie
She spake, an I said, Where am I?
Where is my lord? What worlde is this?'

2 The old copy reads:—

'Your shakes of fortune, though they haunt you
mortally,

Yet glance full sound'ringly, &c.

The folios have 'though they hate you.' The emendation is by Steevens, who cites the following illustrations:—'Omnibus letis fortunæ propolita sit vita nostra.'—Cicero Epist. Fam.

'The shot of accident or dart of chance.' Othello.
'The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune.' Hamlet.
'I am glad, though you have taken a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.'

Merry Wives of Windsor.
The sense of the passage seems to be, all the malice of fortune is not confined to yourself, though her arrows strike deeply at you, yet wandering from their mark, they sometimes glance on us; as at present, when the uncertain state of Tyre deprives us of your company at Tharsus.

3 i. e. be satisfied that we cannot forget the benefits
you have bestowed on us.

4 The old copy reads, 'teach me to it': the alteration was made by Steevens.

5 i. e. appear wilful, perverse by such conduct. The old copy reads in the preceding line:—

'Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine,' &c.

Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Who shall not be more dear to my respect,
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.
Cle. We'll bring your grace even to the edge of the shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune;⁶ and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dear'st madam.—O, no tears,
Lychorida, no tears:

Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Ephesus. A Room in Cerimon's House. Enter CERIMON and THAISA.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your coffer: which are now
At your command. Know you the character?

Thai. It is my lord's.

That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Even on my eaning⁷ time; but whether there
Delivered or no, by the holy gods,
I cannot rightly say: But since King Pericles,
My wedded lord, I ne'er shall see again,
A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as you speak,
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may 'bide until your date expire.⁸
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that's all:
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter GOWER.⁹

Gow. Imagine Pericles arriv'd at Tyre,
Welcom'd and settled to his own desire.
His woful queen leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a votaress.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast growing scene must find¹⁰
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place!¹¹

The corruption is obvious, as appears from a subsequent passage:—

'This ornament, that makes me look so dismal
Will I, my lord's Marina, clip to form,' &c.

6 l. e. insidious waves that wear a treacherous smile
'Subdola quem ridet placidi pectus ponti.'
Lucret. ii. v. 568.

7 The quarto, 1619, and the folio, 1664, which was probably printed from it, both read eaving. The first quarto reads learning. Steevens asserts that eaving is a term only applicable to sheep when they produce their young, and substituted 'yearning,' which he interprets
'her groaning time.' But it should be observed that to ean or yeann, in our elder language, as in the Anglo-Saxon, signified to bring forth young, without any particular reference to sheep. I have therefore preferred the reading in the text to Steevens's conjecture.

8 l. e. until you die. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'The date is out of such prolixity.'

Again, in the same play:—

'—and expire the term
Of a despoiled life.'

And in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'An expir'd date, cancell'd ere we'l begun.'

9 This chorus, and the two following scenes, in the old editions, are printed as part of the third act.

10 The same expression occurs in the chorus to The Winter's Tale:—

'—your patience this allowing,

I turn my glass, and give my scene such growing
As you had slept between.'

11 The old copies read:—

'Which makes high both the art and place.'

The emendation is by Steevens. We will use the heart

Of general wonder. But alack!
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.
And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even ripe for marriage fight; this maid
Hight Philoten: and it is said
For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be:
Be't when she weav'd the sleided¹ silk
With fingers long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needl² wound
The cambric, which she made more sound
By hurting it; or when to the lute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records³ with moan; or when
She would with rich and constant pen Vail⁴ to her mistress Dian; still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute⁵ Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to stead,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead;
And cursed Dionyza hath
The pregnant⁶ instrument of wrath
Prest for this blow. The unborn event
I do commend to your content:⁷
Only I carry winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my way.—

of oak for the central part of it, and the heart of the land in much such another sense. Place here signifies residence. So in A Lover's Complaint:—

'Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place.'

¹ 'Sleided silk' is unwrought silk, prepared for weaving by passing it through the weaver's sley or reed-comb.

² The old copies read needle, but the metre shows that we should read needl. The word is thus abbreviated in a subsequent passage in the first quarto. See King John, Act v. Sc. 2.

³ To record anciently signified to sing. Thus in Sir Philip Sydney's Ourania, by [Nicholas Breton] 1606:—

'Recording songs unto the Dekle.'

The word is still used by bird fanciers.
⁴ Vail is probably a misprint. Steevens suggests that we should read 'Hail.' Malone proposes to substitute 'trail.'

⁵ I. e. highly accomplished, perfect. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'— at sea
He is an absolute master.'

And in Green's Tu Quoque:—'From an absolute and most complete gentleman, to a most absurd, ridiculous, and fond lover.'

⁶ Pregnant in this instance means apt, quick. Prest is ready.

⁷ 'I do commend to your content.'

Steevens conjectures that the poet wrote consent instead of content: but observes that perhaps the passage as it stands may mean 'I wish you to find content in that portion of our play which has not yet been exhibited.'

⁸ The first quarto reads:—

Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame thy love bosom,
Enflame too nicely, nor let pity, &c.

Malone reads:—

Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom,
Inflame too nicely, nor let pity, &c.

Steevens proposed to omit the words, 'Inflame too nicely,' and 'which even,' adding the pronoun that, in the following manner:—

Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflame love in thy bosom;
Nor let that pity women have cast off
Melt thee, but be a soldier to thy purpose.'

Dionyza does appear,
With Leonine, a murderer.

[Exit.

SCENE I. Tharsus. An open Place near the Sea-shore. Enter DIONYZA and LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sworn to do it;

'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
Thou canst not do a thing if the world so soon,
To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
Which is but cold, inflaming love, thy bosom
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Even women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do't; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter then the gods should have her
Here
Weeping she comes for her old nurse's death.⁹
Thou art resolv'd?

Leon. I am resolv'd.

Enter MARINA, with a Basket of Flowers.

Mar. No, no, I will rob Tellus of her weed,
To strew thy green¹⁰ with flowers: the yellows, blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a chaplet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer days do last.¹¹ Ah me! poor maid
Born in a tempest, when my mother died,
This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring¹² me from my friends.

Dion. How now, Marina! why do you keep alone?¹³
How chance my daughter is not with you? Do not Consume your blood with sorrowing;¹⁴ you have
A nurse of me. Lord! how your favour's¹⁵ chang'd
With this unprofitable wo! Come, come;
Give me your wreath of flowers. Ere the sea mar it.
Walk forth with Leonine;¹⁶ the air is quick there Piercing, and sharpens well the stomach. Come:
Leonine, take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you;
I'll not bereave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come;
I love the king your father, and yourself,

The reading I have given is sufficiently intelligible, and deviates less from the old copy. Nicely here means tenderly, fondly.

⁹ The old copy reads:—

'Here she comes weeping for her only mistress's death.' As Marina had been trained in music, letters, &c. and had gained all the graces of education, Lychorida could not have been her only mistress. The suggestion and emendation are Dr. Percy's.

¹⁰ This is the reading of the quarto copy; the folio reads grave. Weed, in old language, meant garment.

¹¹ So in Cymbeline:—

— with fairest flowers,
While summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave.'

The old copy reads, 'Shall as a carpet hang,' &c. The emendation is by Steevens.

¹² Thus the earliest copy. The second quarto, and all subsequent impressions, read:—

'Hurrying me from my friends.'

Whirring or whirring had formerly the same meaning; a bird that flies with a quick motion is still said to whir away. The verb to whirry he used in the ballad of Robin Goodfellow, Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 208:—

More swift than winds away I go,
O'er hedge and lands,
Thro' pools and ponds,
I whirry, laughing ho, ho, ho.'

Whirring is often used by Chapman in his version of the Iliad; so in book xvii:—

— through the Greeks and Ilians they rap
The whirring chariot.'

¹³ So in Macbeth:—

'How now, my lord! why do you keep alone?'
And in King Henry IV. Part II.

'How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?'
Milton employs a similar form of words in Comus, v. 508:—

'How chance she is not in your company?'

¹⁴ In King Henry VI. Part II. we have 'blood-consuming sighs.'

¹⁵ Countenance, look.

¹⁶ I. e. ere the sea by the coming in of the tide mar your walk.

With more than foreign heart.¹ We every day
Expect him here: when he shall come, and find
Our paragon to all reports,² thus blasted,
He will repent the breadth of his great voyage;
Blame both my lord and me, that we have ta'en
No care to your best courses. Go, I pray you,
Walk, and be cheerful once again; reserve³
That excellent complexion, which did steal
The eyes of young and old. Care not for me;
I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go;
But yet I have no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come, I know 'tis good for you,
Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least;
Remember what I have said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.

Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for a while;
Pray you walk softly, do not heat your blood:
What! I must have a care of you.

Mar. Thanks, sweet madam.—
[Exit DIONYZA.]

Is this wind westerly that blows?

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was north.

Leon. Was't so?

Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear,
But cry'd, Good seamen! to the sailors, galling
His kindly hands with hauling of the ropes;
And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea
That almost burst the deck.

Leon. When was this?

Mar. When I was born:
Never was waves nor wind more violent;
And from the ladder-tackle washes off
A canvass-climber.⁴ Ha! says one, will out!
And with a dropping industry they skip
From stem to stern: the boatswain whistles, and
The master calls and trebles their confusion.⁵

Leon. Come, say your prayers.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it: Pray! but be not tedious,
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why should she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember, by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life;
I never spake bad word, nor did it ill turn
To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will;
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her profit, or
My life imply her danger?

Leon. My commission

Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.
You are well-favour'd, and your looks foreshow
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,

When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:
Good sooth, it show'd well in you: do so now:
Your lady seeks my life: come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will despatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst MARINA is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain! [LEONINE runs away.]

2 Pirate. A prize! a prize!

3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part. Come, let's have her aboard suddenly.

[Exit Pirates with MARINA.]

SCENE II. The same. Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roving⁶ thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;

And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear she's dead,
And thrown into the sea.—But I'll see further;
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd, must by me be slain.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. Mitylene. A Room in a Brathel.

Enter PANDER, Bawd, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul.

Boul. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart, by being too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore, let's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Bawd. Thou say'st true: 'tis not the bringing up of poor bastards, as I think I have brought up some eleven—

Boul. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again.⁷ But shall I search the market?

Bawd. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.

Pand. Thou say'st true; they are too unwholesome o' conscience. The poor Transilvanian is lead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boul. Ay, she quickly pooped him; she made him roast meat for worms:—but I'll go search the market. [Exit BOULT.]

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion to live quietly, and so give over.

Bawd. Why to give over, I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity; nor the commodity waxes not with the danger;⁸ therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 'twere not amiss to keep

Don Pedro de Valdes was an admiral in that fleet, and had the command of the great galleon of Andalusia. His ship being disabled, he was taken by Sir Francis Drake on the 29th of July, 1593, and sent to Dartmouth. This play was not written, we may conclude, till after that period. The making one of this Spaniard's ancestors a pirate, was probably relished by the audience in those days. There is a particular account of this Valdes in Robert Greene's Spanish Masquerado, 1599. He was then prisoner in England.

8 I have brought up (i. e. educated,) says the bawd, some eleven. Yes, answers Boul, to eleven, (i. e. as far as eleven years of age,) and then brought them down again. The latter clause of the sentence requires no explanation. In the play of The Weather, by John Heywood, 4to. bl. 1. Merry Report says:—

'Oft time is sent both in court and towns, Longe be women a bryngynge up, and some brought down.'

9 i. e. is not equal to it. So in Othello:—

'To wake and wage a danger proofless.'

And in Antony and Cleopatra, vol. vii:—

'—his taunts and honours
Wag'd equal with him.'

1 That is, with the same warmth of affection as if I was his countryman.

2 Our fair charge, whose beauty was once equal to all that fame said of it. So in Othello:—

—He hath achiev'd a maid
That paragons description and wild fame.'

3 Reserve has here the force of preserve. So in Shakespeare's thirty-second Sonnet:—

'Reserve them for my love, not for their rhymes.'

4 i. e. a sailor, one who climbs the mast to furl or unfurl the canvass or sails.

5 Mr. Stevens thus regulates and reads this passage: 'That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle Wash'd off a canvass-climber. Ha! says one, Will out? and, with a dropping industry They skip from stem to stern: The boatswain whistles, The master calls, and trebles their confusion.'

Leon. And when was this?

Mar. It was when I was born:

Never was waves nor wind more violent.

Leon. Come, say your prayers speedily.'

6 Old copy reads 'roguing thieves.'

7 The Spanish armada perhaps furnished this name.

our door hatch'd.¹ Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods, will be strong with us for giving over.

Baud. Come, other sorts offend as well as we.

Pand. As well as we! ay, and better too; we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling:—but here comes Boult.

Enter the Pirates, and BOULT, dragging in MARINA.

Boult. Come your ways. [To MARINA.—My masters, you say she's a virgin?

1 Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.

Boult. Master, I have gone thorough² for this piece, you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Baud. Boult, has she any qualities?

Boult. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes; there's no further necessity of qualities can make her be refused.

Baud. What's her price, Boult?

Boult. I cannot be bated one doit of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters; you shall have your money presently. Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw³ in her entertainment.

[Exit PANDER and Pirates.]

Baud. Boult, take you the marks of her; the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and cry, He that will give most, shall have her first. Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boult. Performance shall follow. [Exit BOULT.]

Mar. Alack, that Leonine was so slack, so slow! (He should have struck, not spoke;) or that these pirates

(Not enough barbarous) had not overboard Thrown me, to seek my mother!

Baud. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Baud. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Baud. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault,

To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Baud. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Baud. Yes, indeed, shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions. You shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions. What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Baud. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman?

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Baud. Marry, whip thee, goeling! I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you are a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me!

Baud. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.—Boult's returned.

Enter BOULT.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boult. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice.

Baud. And I prythee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boult. 'Faith, they listened to me, as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Baud. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on.

Boult. To-night, to night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers⁴ i' the hams?

Baud. Who? Monsieur Veroles?

Boult. Ay; he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Baud. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it.⁵ I know, he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun.⁶

Boult. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.⁷

Baud. Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me; you must seem to do that fearfully, which you commit willingly; to despise profit, where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do, makes pity in your lovers: Seldom, but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere⁸ profit.

Mar. I understand you not.

Boult. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Baud. Thou say'st true, i' faith, so they must: for your bride goes to that with shame, which is her way to go with warrant.

Boult. 'Faith, some do, and some do not. But, mistress, if I have bargained for the joint,— Baud. Thou may'st cut a morsel off the spit.

Boult. I may so.

Baud. Who should deny it? Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be changed yet.

Baud. Boult, spend thou that in the town: report what a sojourner we have: you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature framed this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report.

The reader may see the cut and the raillery in the variorum Shakespeare.

2 i. e. bid a high price for her.

3 i. e. unripe, unskilful. So in Hamlet:—'And yet but raw neither in respect of his full sail.'

4 To cover is to sink or crouch down. Thus in King Henry VI.—

'The splitting rocks cover'd in the sinking sands.'

Again in Gammer Gurton's Needle:—

'They cover so o'er the coles, their eyes be blear'd with smoke.'

5 i. e. renovate it. So in Cymbeline, Act 1. Sc. 2:—

'O, disloyal thing!

Thou should'st repair my youth.'

6 The allusion is to the French coin écu de soleil crowns of the sun. The meaning of the passage is merely this, 'That the French knight will seek the shade of her house to scatter his money there.'

7 'If a traveller from every part of the globe were to assemble in Mitylene, they would all resort to this house, while we had such a sign to it as this virgin.' A similar eulogy is pronounced on Imogen in Cymbeline: 'She's a good sign; but I have seen small reflection of her wit.'

8 i. e. an absolute, a certain profit.

1 A hatch is a half door, sometimes placed within a street door, preventing access farther than the entry of a house. When the top of a hatch was guarded by a row of spikes, no person could reach over and undo its fastening, which was always within side, and near its bottom. This domestic portcullis perhaps was necessary to our ancient brothels. Secured within such a barrier, Mrs. Overdone could parley with her customers, refuse admittance to the shabby visitor, bargain with the rich gallant, defy the beadle, or keep the constable at bay. From having been her usual defence, the hatch became the unequivocal denotement of her trade; for though the hatch with a flat top was a constant attendant on buteries in great families, colleges, &c. the hatch with spikes on it was peculiar to early houses of amorous entertainment, and Mr. Steevens was informed that the bagnios of Dublin were not long since so defended. Malone exhibited a copy of a wood cut, prefixed to an old pamphlet entitled Holland's Leaguer, 4to. 1632, in which is a representation of a celebrated brothel, on the Bank side, near the Globe play-house, in which he imagined the hatch was delineated. Steevens has pleasantly bantered him upon it.

Bowl. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels,¹ as my giving out her beauty stir up the lowly-inclined. I'll bring home some to-night.

Baud. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep, Untied I still my virgin knot will keep.

Diana, aid my purpose!

Baud. What have we to do with Diana? Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.
Enter CLEON and DIONYZA.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O, Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all the spacious world, I'd give it to undo the deed.² O, lady, Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess To equal any single crown o' the earth, For the justice of compare! O, villain Leonine, Whom thou hast poison'd too!

If thou had'st drunk to him, it had been a kindness Becoming well thy feat:³ what canst thou say, When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the fates To foster it, nor ever to preserve. She died at night; I'll say so. Who can cross it? Unless you play the impious innocent,⁴ And for an honest attribute, cry out, She died by foul play.

Cle. O, go to. Well, well, Of all the faults beneath the heavens, the gods Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those, that think The pretty wrens of Tharsus will fly hence, And open this to Pericles. I do shame To think of what a noble strain you are, And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding Who ever but his approbation added, Though not his pre-consent, he did not flow From honourable courses.

Dion. Be it so, then: Yet none does know, but you, how she came dead, Nor none can know, Leonine being gone.

1 Thunder is supposed to have the effect of rousing eels from the mud, and so render them more easy to take in stormy weather. Marston alludes to this in his Satires:—

'They are nought but eels that never will appear Till that tempestuous winds, or thunder, tear Their slimy beds.'

2 So in Macbeth:—'Wake Duncan with this knocking:—Ay, 'would, thou couldst!' In Pericles, as in Macbeth, the wife is more criminal than the husband, whose repentance follows immediately on the murder.

3 The old copy reads face. The emendation is Malone's. Feat is deed, or exploit.

4 An innocent was formerly a common appellation for an idiot. She calls him an impious simpleton, because such a discovery would touch the life of one of his own family, his wife. This is the ingenious interpretation of Malone; but I incline to think with Masou that we should read, '—the pious innocent.'

5 The old copy reads, 'She did disdain my child.' But Marina was not of a disdainful temper. Her excellence indeed eclipsed the meaner qualities of her companion, i. e. in the language of the poet, distinguished them. In Tarquin and Lucrece we meet with the same verb again:—

'Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child,) The silver-shining queen he would distinguish.'

The verb is several times used by Shakespeare in the sense of to eclipse, to throw into the shade; and not in that of disgrace, as Steevens asserts.

The same cause for Dionyza's hatred to Marina is also alleged in Twine's translation:—'The people beholding the beauty and comeliness of Tharsia, said—Happy is the father that hath Tharsia to his daughter; but her companion that goeth with her is foul and ill-favoured. When Dionisades heard Tharsia commended, and her own daughter, Philomacia, so dispraised, she returned home wonderful wrath, &c.'

She did disdain⁶ my child, and stood between Her and her fortunes: None would look on her, But cast their gazes on Marina's face; Whilst ours was blurted⁷ at, and held a malking,⁸ Not worth the time of day. It pierc'd me thorough; And though you call my course unnatural, You not your child well loving, yet I find, It greets me⁹ as an enterprise of kindness, Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles, What should he say? We wept after her hearse, And even yet we mourn; her monument Is almost finish'd, and her epitaphs In glittering golden characters express A general praise to her, and care in us At whose expense 'tis done.

Cle. Thou art like the harpy, Which, to betray, doth with thine angel's face Seize with thine eagle's talons.⁹

Dion. You are like one, that superstitiously Doth swear to the gods, that winter kills the flies;¹⁰ But yet I know you'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Monument of MARINA at Tharsus.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short;

Sail seas in cockles, have, and wish but for't;

Making¹¹ (to take your imagination,) From bourn to bourn, region to region.

By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime To use one language, in each several clime, Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech you, To learn of me, who stand i' the gap to teach you The stages of our story. Pericles Is now again thwarting the wayward seas;¹² (Attended on by many a lord and knight,) To see his daughter, all his life's delight.

Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late;¹³

Advanc'd in time to great and high estate,

Is left to govern. Bear you it in mind,

Old Helicanus goes along behind.

Well sailing ships, and bounteous winds, have brought This king to Tharsus (think this pilot-thought;¹⁴ So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on,) To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.¹⁵

6 This contemptuous expression frequently occurs in our ancient dramas. So in King Edward III. 1396:—

'This day hath set derision on the French, And all the world will blurt and scorn at us.'

7 A coarse wench, not worth a good morrow.

8 'It greets me' appears to mean it salutes me, or is grateful to me. So in King Henry VIII.:—

'Would, I had no being, If this salute my blood a jot.'

9 'With thine angel's face,' &c. means 'You having an angel's face, a look of innocence, have at the same time an eagle's talons.'

10 This passage appears to mean, 'You are so affectingly humane, that you would appeal to heaven against the cruelty of winter in killing the flies. Superstitious is explained by Johnson, scrupulous beyond need.'—Boncell.

11 So in a former passage:—'O, make for Tharsus. Making, &c. is travelling (with the hope of engaging your attention) from one division or boundary of the world to another; i. e. we hope to interest you by the variety of our scene, and the different countries through which we pursue our story.—We still use a phrase exactly corresponding with take your imagination; i. e. 'to take one's fancy.'

12 So in King Henry V.:—

'—and there being seen, Heave him away upon your winged thoughts Athwart the seas.'

13 These lines are strangely misplaced in the old copy. The transposition and corrections are by Steevens.

14 This is the reading of the old copy, which Malone altered to 'his pilot thought.' I do not see the necessity of the change. The passage as it is will bear the interpretation given to the correction:—'Let your imagination steer with him, be his pilot, and, by accompanying him in his voyage, think this pilot-thought.'

15 Who has left Tharsus before her father's arrival there.

Like motes and shadows see them move awhile;
Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

Dumb Show.

*Enter at one Door, PERICLES, with his Train;
CLEON and DIONYSIA at the other. CLEON shows
PERICLES the Tomb of MARINA; whereat PERI-CLES makes lamentation, puts on Sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then CLEON and DIONYSIA retire.*

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show!
This borrow'd passion stands for true old wo;¹
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
With sighs shot through, and biggest tears e'ershow'd,

Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears
Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He hears
A tempest, which his mortal vessel² tears,
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit³
The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionysa.

[Reads the Inscription on MARINA'S Monument.
*The fairest, sweetest, and best, lies here,
Who wither'd in her spring of year.
She was of Tyre, the king's daughter,
On whom foul death hath made this slaughter;
Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
Thetis, being proud, swallow'd some part o' the earth;
Therefore the earth, fearing to be e'xtinct'd,
Hath Thetis birth-child on the heavens bestow'd:
Wherefore she does (and swears she'll never stint,)⁴
Make raging battery upon shores of fire.
No visor does become black villany,
So well as soft and tender battery.
Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
And bear his courses to be ordered
By lady fortune; while our scenes display
His daughter's wo and heavy well-a-day,
In her unholy service. Patience, then,
And think you now are all in Mitylene.* [Exit.]

SCENE V. Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the Brothel, Two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?

2 Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

1 Gent. But to have divinity preached there! did you ever dream of such a thing?

2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdyhouses: shall we go hear the vestals sing?

1 Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous;
but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had no'er come here.

Bawd. Fie, fie upon her: she is able to freeze the good Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We

1 i. e. for such tears as were shed when the world being in his infancy, dissimulation was unknown. Perhaps, however, we ought to read, 'true told wo.'

2 So in King Richard III.:

'O, then began the tempest of my soul.'

What is here called his mortal vessel (i. e. his body) is style by Cleopatra her mortal house.

3 'Now be pleased to know.' So in Gower:—

'In which the lords hath to him writte
That he would understand and witte.'

4 Sweetest must be read here as a monosyllable, as Highest in the Tempest:—'Highest queen of state,' &c.
Stevens observes that we might more elegantly read, omitting the conjunction and—

'The fairest, sweetest, best, lies here.'

5 The inscription alludes to the violent storm which accompanied the birth of Marina; at which time the sea, proudly overswelling its bounds, swallowed, as is usual in such hurricanes, some part of the earth. The poet ascribed the swelling of the sea to the pride which Thetis felt at the birth of Marina in her element; and supposes that the earth, being afraid to be overflowed, bestowed this birth-child of Thetis on the heavens; and must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reasons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kiss of her.

Bowl. 'Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll dis-furnish us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swear-ers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. 'Faith, there's no way to be rid on't, but by the way to the pox. Here comes the Lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Bowl. We should have both lord and lown, if the poetish baggage would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now? How' a dozen of virginities?

Bawd. Now, the gods to-bless' your honour!

Bowl. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Mitylene.

Lys. If she'd do the deeds of darkness, thou would'st say.

Bawd. Your honour knows what 'tis to say well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.

Bowl. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, pr'ythee?

Bowl. O, sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to an anchor⁵ to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk; —never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. 'Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you;—leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bawd. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [To MAR. whom she takes aside.]

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bawd. 'Pray you, without any more virginal¹⁰ that Thetis, in revenge, makes raging battery against the shores.—Mason.

6 i. e. never cease.

7 This is Justice Shallow's mode of asking the price of a different kind of commodity:—

'How a score of ewes now?'

8 The use of to in composition with verbs is very common in Gower and Chaucer.

9 The old copy, which both Stevens and Malone considered corrupt in this place, reads, 'That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives good report to a number to be chaste.' I have ventured to substitute an anchor, i. e. Armit, or anchoret. The word being formerly written anchor, anchoret, and even anker, it is evident that in old MSS. it might readily be mistaken for a number. The word is used by the Player Queen in Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2:—

'An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope.'

It is evident that some character contrasted to bawd is required by the context.

10 This uncommon adjective is again used in Corinthus:—

'—the virginal palms of your daughters.'

fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not paced¹ yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together.

[Exeunt Bawd, PANDEN, and BOULT.

Lys. Go thy ways.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester² at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in, proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else, look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place. Come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now; if put upon you, make the judgment good. That thought you worthy of it.

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be sage.³

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungente fortune
Hath plac'd me here within this loathsome stie,
Where, since I came, diseases have been sold
Dearer than physic,—O, that the good gods
Would set me free from this unhallow'd place,
Though they did change me to the meanest bird
That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think

Thou could'st have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou could'st.

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind,
Thy speech had aked⁴ it. Hold, here's gold for thee:

Persever still in that clear⁵ way thou goest,
And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten

That I come with no ill intent; for to me
The very doors and windows savour vilely.
Farewell. Thou art a piece of virtue,⁶ and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—

1 A term from the equestrian art; but still in familiar language applied to persons, chiefly in a bad sense, with its compound thorough-paced.

2 i. e. a scoundrel.

3 Lysimachus must be supposed to say this sneeringly.—'Proceed with your fine moral discourse.'

4 Clear is pure, innocent. Thus in The Two Noble Kinsmen—

For the sake
Of clear virginity, be advocate
For us and our distresses.

So in The Tempest—

'—nothing but heart's sorrow,
And a clear life ensuing.'

5 '—thy mother was

A piece of virtue.' Tempest.

So in Antony and Cleopatra, alluding to Octavia—
'Let not the piece of virtue, which is set Betwixt us.'

6 i. e. under the cope or canopy of heaven.

7 Stevens thinks that there may be some allusion

Hold; here's more gold for thee.—

A curse upon him, die he like a thief,
That robe thee of thy goodness! If thou hear'st from me,

It shall be for thy good.

[As LYSIMACHUS is putting up his Purse,
BOULT enters.

BOULT. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avaunt, thou damned door-keeper! Your house,

But for this virgin that doth prop it up,
Would sink, and overwhelm you all. Away!

[Exit LYSIMACHUS.

BOULT. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope,⁸ shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

BOULT. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your way. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter Bawd.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter?

BOULT. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken holy words to the Lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O, abominable!

BOULT. She makes our profession as it were, to stink afore the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

BOULT. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too.

Bawd. BOULT, take her away: use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.⁹

BOULT. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.¹⁰

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

BOULT. She conjures: away with her. 'Would, she had never come within my doors! Marry, hang you! She's born to undo us. Will you not go the way of womankind? Marry come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays!'¹¹ [Exit Bawd.

BOULT. Come, mistress; come your way with me.

Mar. Whither would you have me?

BOULT. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Pr'ythee, tell me one thing first.

BOULT. Come now, your one thing.¹²

Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?

BOULT. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather, my mistress.

Mar. Neither of these are yet so bad as thou art, Since they do better thee in their command.

Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st fiend of hell would not in reputation change:

Thou'rt the damnd' door-keeper to every coystrul,¹³ here to a fact recorded by Dion Cassius, and by Pliny, b. xxvi. ch. xxvi.; but more circumstantially by Petronius. Var. Edit. p. 189. A skilful workman, who had discovered the art of making glass malleable, carried a specimen of it to Tiberius, who asked him if he alone was in possession of the secret. He replied in the affirmative; on which the tyrant ordered his head to be struck off immediately, lest his invention should have proved injurious to the workers in gold, silver, and other metals. The same story, however, is told in the Gesta Romanorum, c. 44.

8 Thus also in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'She made great Cesar lay his sword to bed,
He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.'

9 Anciently many dishes were served up with this garniture, during the season of Christmas. The Bawd means to call her a piece of ostentatious virtue.

10 So in King Henry IV. Part II.—

'P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poin's?

Poin's. Go to, I stand the push of your one thing.'

11 A coystrul is a low mean person.

Tib was a common name for a strumpet.

'They wondrous much at Tom, but at Tib more;

Faith (quoth the vicker) 'tis an extant w——.'

Nosce Te, by Richard Turner, 1697

That hither comes inquiring for his tib;
To the choleric fasting of each rogue thy ear
Is liable; thy very food is such
As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.¹

Boult. What would you have me? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou deest. Empty
Old receptacles, common sewers, of filth;
Serve by indenture to the common hangman;
Any of these ways are better yet than this:
For that which thou professest, a baboon,
Could he speak, would own a name too dear.²
O that the gods would safely from this place
Deliver me! Here, here is gold for thee.
If that thy master would gain aught by me,
Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,
With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast;
And I will undertake all these to teach.
I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,
And prostitute me to the basest groom
That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee:
if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But, amongst honest women?

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent:
therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can; come your ways. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel scapes, and chances
Into an honest house, our story says.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays:
Deep clerks she dumbs,³ and with her need⁴ composes

Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;
That even her art sisters the natural roses:
Her inkle⁵ silk, twin with the rubied cherry:
That pupils lacks she none of noble race,
Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain
She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her place;
And to her father turn our thoughts again,
Where we left him, on the sea. We there him lost;
Whence driven before the winds, he is arriv'd
Here where his daughter dwells; and on this coast
Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd⁶

¹ Steevens observes that Marina, who is designed as a character of juvenile innocence, appears much too knowing in the impurities of a brothel; nor are her expressions more chastised than her ideas.

² That is, a baboon would think his tribe dishonoured by such a profession. Iago says, 'Ere I would drown myself, &c. I would change my humanity with a baboon.' In this speech Steevens has made some trifling regulations to improve the metre.

³ The following passage from A Midsummer Night's Dream is adduced only on account of the similarity of expression, the sentiments being very different. The-seus confounds those who address him, by his superior dignity; Marina silences the learned persons, with whom she converses, by her literary superiority.

'Where I have come great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And in conclusion dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome.'

⁴ We have the verb to dumb again in Antony and Cleopatra:—

— that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb by him'

⁵ Needles.

God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies,
His banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense
And to him in his barge with fervour hies.
In your supposing once more put your sight;⁷
Of heavy Pericles think this the bark:
Where, what is done in action, more, if might,⁸
Shall be discover'd; please you, sit, and hark.

[Exit.]

SCENE I. On board PERICLES' Ship, off Mity-lene. A close Pavilion on deck, with a Curtain before it; PERICLES within it, reclined on a Couch.
A Barge lying beside the Tyrian Vessel. Enter
Two Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian Vessel, the other to the Barge; to them HELICANUS.

Tyr. Sail. Where's the Lord Helicanus? he can resolve you. [To the Sailor of Mitylene.]

O, here he is.—
Sir, there's a barge put off from Mitylene,
And in it is Lysimachus the governor,
Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?
Hel. That he have his. Call up some gentlemen.
Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter Two Gentlemen.

I Gent. Doth your lordship call?
Hel. Gentlemen,
There is some of worth would come aboard; I pray
you,

To greet them fairly.

[The Gentlemen and the Two Sailors descend, and go on board the Barge.]

Enter, from thence, LYSIMACHUS and Lords; the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the Two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,
This is the man that can, in aught you would,
Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! the gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.
Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
I made to it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, sir, what is your place?

Lys. I am governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,

Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king:
A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
To any one, nor taken sustenance,
But to prorogue⁹ his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperance?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat;
But the main grief of all springs from the loss
Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him, then?

Hel. You may, indeed, sir

But bootless is your sight; he will not speak

To any.

Lys. Yet, let me obtain my wish.

⁵ Inkle appears to have been a particular kind of silk thread or worsted used in embroidery. Rider translates inkle by filum textile.

⁶ Steevens thinks that we should read, 'The city's liv'd,' i. e. the citizens are collected like bees in a hive.
We have the verb in the Merchant of Venice:—'Drones live not with me.'

⁷ 'Once more put your sight under the guidance of your imagination. Suppose you see what we cannot exhibit to you; think this stage the bark of the melancholy Pericles.'

⁸ 'Where all that may be displayed in action shall be exhibited; and more should be shown, if our stage would permit.' The poet seems to be aware of the difficulty of representing the ensuing scene. Some modern editions read, 'more of might;' which, if there was authority for it, should seem to mean 'more of greater consequence.'

⁹ To lengthen or prolong his grief. Prorogued is used in Romeo and Juliet for delayed:—

'My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love.'

Hel. Behold him, Jr: [PERICLES discovered.]
this was a goodly person,
Till the disaster, that, one mortal night,²
Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you!
Hail,
Hail, royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.
I Lord. Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I durst wager,
Would win some words of him.³

Lys. 'Tis well bethought.
She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other choice attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,⁴
Which now are midway stopp'd:
She is all happy as the fairest of all,
And, with her fellow maids, is now upon
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

[He whispers one of the attendant Lords.—
Exit Lord, in the Barge of LYTIMACHUS.

Hel. Sure all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit That bears recovery's name. But since your kindness,

We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you further,
That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy,
Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graft would send a caterpillar,
And so infect our province.—Yet once more Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it;—
But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the Barge, Lord, MARINA, and a Young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. A gallant lady.
Lys. She's such, that were I well assur'd she came
Of gentle kind, and noble stock, I'd wish

I Few of the stage-directions, that have been given in this and the preceding acts, are found in the old copy.
In the original representation Pericles was probably placed in the back part of the stage, concealed by a curtain, which was here drawn open. The ancient narratives represented him as remaining in the cabin of his ship; but as in such a situation Pericles would not be visible to the audience, a different stage-direction is now given.

2 The old copies read, 'one mortal wight.' The emendation is Malone's. Mortal is here used for deadly, destructive.

3 This circumstance resembles another in Alf's Well that Ende Well, where Lafu gives an account of He- lena's attractions to the king before she is introduced to attempt his cure.

4 The old copy reads, 'defend parts.' Malone made the alteration, which he explains thus: i. e. 'his ears, which are to be assailed by Marina's melodious voice.'
Steevens would read, 'defend'd parts,' meaning 'the opplated doors of hearing.'

5 Steevens prints this passage in the following manner; corrected and amended so as to run smooth no doubt, but with sufficient license:—

'She all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is with her fellow maidens now within.'
Difficulties have been raised about this passage as it stands; but surely it is as intelligible as many others in this play. 'Upon a leafy shelter,' which is the great stumbling-block, appears to mean 'Upon a spot which is sheltered.'

6 There can be but little doubt that the poet wrote:—
'And so afflict our province.'
We have no example of to afflict used by itself for to perish.

7 It appears that when Pericles was originally performed the theatres were furnished with no such apparatus as, by any stretch of imagination, could be supposed to present either a sea or a ship; and that the audience were contented to behold vessels sailing in

No better choice, and think me rarely wad.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty⁸
Expect even here, where is a singly patient:
If that thy prosperous and artificial fear?
Can draw him but to answer thee in sight,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her.
And the gods make her prosperous!

Lys. [MARINA sings.]
Mark'd he your music?

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear:—
Per. Hum! ha!

Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, like a comet: she speaks,
My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:¹⁰
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and onward¹¹ casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, Go not till he speak.
[Aside.]

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine?—was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.¹²

Per. I do think so.
I pray you, turn your eyes again upon me.—
You are like something that—What countrywomen?
Here of these shores?¹⁴

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with you, and shall deliver weeping.

and out of port in their mine's eye only. This license being once granted to the poet, the lord, in the instance now before us, walked off the stage, and returned again in a few minutes, leading in Marina without any considerable impropriety; and the present drama exhibited before such indulgent spectators was not more incommen-surable in the representation than any other would have been. See Malone's Historical Account of the English Stage.

8 The quarto of 1699 reads:—
'Fair on all goodness that consists in beauty,' &c.
The present circumstance puts us in mind of what passes between Helena and the King, in Alf's Well that Ende Well.

9 The old copy has 'artificial fate.' The emendation is by Dr. Percy.

10 This song (like most of those that were sung in the old plays) has not been preserved. It may have been formed on the lines in the Genie Romanorum. The reader desirous of consulting the Latin hexameters, or Twine's translation of them, may consult the Variations Shakespeare. There was not merit enough in them to warrant their production in this abridged commentary, 11 So in Osello:—

———— I fetch my birth
From men of royal siege.
12 Sheward is adverse. So in King Henry VI, Part
II:—

And twice by eastward wind from England's bank
Drove back again.

13 This seems to refer to a part of the story that is made no use of in the present scene. Thus in Twine's translation:—'Then Apollonius fell in rage, and forgetting all courtesy, &c. rose up suddenly and stroke the maiden,' &c. Pericles however afterwards says—

'Did'st thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee), that thou came'st
From good descending?'

14 This passage is strangely corrupt in the old copies:—
'Per. I do think so, pray you turne your eyes upon

My dearest wife was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square
brows;

Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voic'd; her eyes as jewel-like,
And cas'd as richly: in pace another Juno;
Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry,
The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?²

Mar. Should I tell my history,
*Twould seem like lies disdain'd in the reporting.

Per. Pr'ythee, speak;
Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Modest as justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crowa'd truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee;
And make my senses credit thy relation.

To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I lov'd indeed. What were thy friends?
Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,
(Which was when I perceiv'd thee,) that thou cam'st
From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thee said'st
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing indeed
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance, thou art a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like Patience, gazing on kings' graves, and smiling
Extremity out of act.⁴ What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin?

Recount, I do beseech thee; come, sit by me.

Mar. My name, sir, is Marina.

Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some incens'd god sent hither
To make the world laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir,
Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient;
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name Marina
Was given me by one that had some power;
My father, and a king.

Per. How? a king's daughter?

And call'd Marina?

Mar. You said you would believe me;

me, your like something that, what country women theatre of these shewes,⁵ &c.

Mar. Nor of any shewes,⁶ &c.
For the ingenious emendation, shores instead of shewes, as well as the regulation of the whole passage, Malone confesses his obligation to the earl of Charlemont.

1 So Demones, in the Rudens of Plautus, exclaims, on beholding his long lost child:—

O fili

Misa! cum ego hanc video, mearum me abscon miseriarum commones.

Trima que perit mihi: jam tanta cessat, si vivit, scia.⁷

2 I. e. possesses. The meaning of the compliment is:—
These endowments, however valuable in themselves, are heightened by being in your possession: they acquire additional grace from their owner. One of Timon's flatterers says,

'You mend the jewel by wearing of it.'

3 Shakspeare, when he means to represent any quality of the mind, &c. as eminently perfect, furnishes the personification with a crown. See the 33th and 144th Sonnets. So in Romeo and Juliet:—

'Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throne, where honour may be crown'd
Sole monarch of the universal earth.'

But, not to be a troubler of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are no fairy?
No motion? Well; speak on. Where were you born?

And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina,
For I was born at sea.

Per. At sea? thy mother?
Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born,
As my good nurse Lychorida hath oft Deliver'd weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!
This is the rarest dream that e'er dull sleep
Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be.
My daughter's buried. [Aside.] Well:—where were you-bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me; 'twere best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver.⁴ Yet, give me leave:—
How came you in these parts? where were you bred?

Mar. The king, my father, did in Tharsus leave
me;

Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn to do't,
A crew of pirates came and rescued me;
Brought me to Mitylene. But now, good sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be,

You think me an impostor; no, good faith;
I am the daughter to king Pericles,
If good king Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!

Hel. Calls my gracious lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: Tell me, if thou canst,
What this maid is, or what is like to be,
That thus hath made me weep?

Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mitylene,
Speaks nobly of her.

Lys. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that,
She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me,
O'rbear the shores of my mortality,
And drown me with their sweetness. O, come
hither,

Thou that begot'st him that did thee beget;
Thou that wast born at sea, buried at Tharsus,
And found at sea again! O Helicanus,
Down on thy knees, thank the holy gods, as loud
As thunder threatens us: This is Marina.—
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,

4 'By her beauty and patient meekness disarming Calamity, and preventing her from using her uplifted sword. Extremity (though not personified as here) is in like manner used for the utmost of human suffering in King Lear:—

—another,
To amplify too much, would much more,
And top extremity.'

So in Twelfth Night:—

'She sat like Patience on a monument
Smiling at Grief.'

5 I. e. No puppet dressed up to deceive me. So in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

'O, excellent motion! O, exceeding puppet!'

6 That is, I will believe every the minutest part of what you say. So in All's Well that Ends Well:—

'To the utmost syllable of your worthiness'

And in Macbeth:—

'To the last syllable of recorded time'

For truth can never be confirm'd enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.¹

Mar. First, sir, I pray,
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, (as in the rest thou hast
Been godlike perfect,) thou'rt the heir of kingdoms,
And another life to Pericles thy father.²

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter, than
To say, my mother's name was Thaisa?
Thaisa was my mother, who did end,
The minute I began.³

Per. Now, blessing on thee, rise; thou art my child.

Give me fresh garments. Mine own, Helicanus,
(Not dead at Tharsus, as she should have been,
By savage Cleon,) she shall tell thee all;
When thou shalt kneel and justify in knowledge,
She is thy very princess.—Who is this?

Hel. Sir, 'tis the governor of Mitylene,
Who, hearing of your melancholy state,
Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you, sir.
Give me my robes; I am wild in my beholding.
O heavens bless my girl! But hark, what music?—
Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
O'er point by point, for yet he seems to doubt,
How sure you are my daughter.—But what music?

Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None?

The music of the spheres: list, my Marina.

Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him way.
Per. Rarest sounds!

Do ye not hear?

Lys. Music? My lord, I hear—
Per. Most heavenly music:

It nips me unto list'n'g, and thick slumber
Hangs on mine eyelids; let me rest. [He sleeps.]

Lys. A pillow for his head;

[The Curtain before the Pavilion of PERICLES is closed.]

So leave him all.—Well, my companion-friends,⁴
If this but answer to my just belief,
I'll well remember you.

[Exeunt LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and attendant Lady.]

SCENE II. The same. PERICLES on the Deck asleep; DIANA appearing to him as in a Vision.⁵

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee thither,

And do upon mine altar sacrifice.

There, when my maiden priests are met together,

Before the people all,

Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife;

To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's call,

And give them reputation to the life.⁶

Perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe:

1 i. e. in plain language, 'though nothing ever happened to awake a scruple or doubt concerning your veracity.'

2 This passage is very much corrupted in the old copies: in the last line we have, 'another like.' The emendation is founded upon that of Mason. Malone reads:—

'Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, (as in the rest you said Thou hast been godlike perfect,) the heir of kingdoms,
And a mother like to Pericles thy father.'
Mason's emendation is confirmed by what Pericles says in the preceding speech:—

————— O come hither

Thou that beget'st him that did thee beget.'

3 So in the Winter's Tale:—

————— Lady,

Dear queen, that ended when I but began,

Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

4 Malone would give these lines to Marina, reading—

————— Well, my companion-friend.

Observing that a lady had entered with her, and Marina says, I will use my utmost skill in the recovery of Pericles,

————— provided

That none but I and my companion-maid

Be suffer'd to come near him.

Do't, and be happy, by my silver bow.

Awake, and tell thy dream. [DIANA disappears.]

Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,⁷

I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

Hel.

Sir.

Per. My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike

The inhospitable Cleon; but I am

For other service first: toward Ephesus

Turn our blown⁸ sails; ere long I'll tell thee why.—

[To HELICANUS.]

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,

And give you gold for such provision

As our intents will need?

Lys. With all my heart, sir; and when you come ashore,

I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail,

Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems

You have been noble towards her.

Lys.

Sir, lend your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina.

[Exeunt.]

Enter GOWER, before the Temple of DIANA, at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
More a little, and then done.⁹

This, as my last boon, give me,

(For such kindness must relieve me,)

That you aptly will suppose

What pageantry, what feats, what shows,

What minstrelsy, and pretty dim,

The regent made in Mitylin,

To greet the king. So he has thriv'd,

That he is promis'd to be wiv'd

To fair Marina; but in no wise

Till he¹⁰ had done his sacrifice,

As Dian bade: whereto being bound,

The interim, pray you, all confound.¹¹

In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,

And wishes fall out as they're will'd.

At Ephesus, the temple see,

Our king, and all his company.

That he can hither come so soon

Is by your fancy's thankful boon.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The Temple of DIANA at Ephesus;

THAISA standing near the Altar, as High Priestess;

a number of Virgins on each side; CRES-

MON and other Inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES, with his Train; LYSIMACHUS,

HELICANUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail Dian! to perform thy just command,

I here consecrate myself the king of Tyre;

Who, frighted from my country, did wed

The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.

At sea in childhood died she, but brought forth

A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,

Stevens contends for the text as it stands, remarking that 'Lysimachus is much in love with Marina, and supposing himself to be near the gratification of his wishes, with a generosity common to noble natures on such occasions, is desirous to make his friends and companions partakers of his happiness.'

5 This vision appears to be founded on a passage in Gower.

6 In the old copy we have here like for life again.—The passage appears to mean:—'Draw such a picture as shall prove itself to have been copied from real, not from pretended calamities; such a one as shall strike the hearers with all the lustre of conspicuous truth.'

7 i. e. regent of the silver moon. In the language of alchemy, which was well understood when this play was written, Luna or Diana means silver, as Sol does gold.

8 That is, 'our swollen sails.' So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'A vent upon her arm, and something blown.'

9 The old copy reads dam. And in the last line of this chorus doom instead of doon.

10 i. e. Pericles.

11 Confound here signifies to consume.

¹² He did confound the best part of an hour,

Exchanging hardiment with great Glendow'r.¹³

King Henry 8.

Wears yet thy silver livery.¹ She at Tharsus
Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
He sought to murder: but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene: against whose shore
Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,
Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!—
You are—you are—O, royal Pericles!—

[She faints.
Per. What means the woman? she dies, help,
gentlemen!

Cer. Noble sir,
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no;
I threw her overboard with these very arms.

Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.

Per. 'Tis most certain.

Cer. Look to the lady;—O, she's but o'erjoy'd!
Early, one blust'ring morn, this lady was Thrown on this shore. I op'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and plac'd
her

Here in Diana's temple.²

Per. May we see them?

Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house.³
Whither I invite you. Look! Thaisa is Recovered.

Thai. O, let me look!
If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will to my sense⁴ bend no licentious ear,
But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!

Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead,
And drown'd.⁵

Per. Immortal Dian!

Thai. Now I know you better.
When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

[Shows a Ring.

Per. This, this; no more, you gods! your present kindness

Makes my past miseries sport:⁶ You shall do well,
That on the touching of her lips I may

1 I. e. her white robe of innocence, as being yet under the protection of the goddess of chastity.

2 The similitude between this scene and the discovery in the last act of The Winter's Tale, will strike every reader.

In the fragment of the Old Metrical Romance, formerly in Dr. Farmer's possession, mentioned in the Preliminary Remarks, this is told with simplicity and pathos. I lay it before the reader as a philological curiosity:—

'The whiles he expounded thus hys lyf
Wt sorwe & steadfast thouht,
He tolde hit to hys owene wyf,
Sche knew him [though] he hire naught,
Heo caught hym in hire armes two,

Heo cryede loud—'ye both my lord,
I am youre wyf, youre loof yore,
Archistrata ye lovede so,
The kynges doughty was bore,
Archistrates he ne hadde na mo.'
Heo clype hym & eft * * * kyase
And saide thus byfore hem alle
Ze seeth Appolyn the kyng
'My maye that taigt me all my good'— Cetera desunt.

3 The same situation occurs again in the Comedy of Errors, where Egeon loses his wife at sea, and finds her at last in a nunnery.

4 This circumstance bears some resemblance to the meeting of Leontes and Hermione in The Winter's Tale. The office of Cerimon is not unlike that of Paulina.

5 Sense is here used for sensual passion.

6 Drown'd in this instance does not signify suffocated by water, but overwhelmed in it. Thus Knolles, His

Melt, and no more be seen.⁷ O, come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mr. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

[Kneels to THAISA.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd and mine own!

Hed. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute.

Can you remember what I call'd the man?

I have nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus, then

Per. Still confirmation:

Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.

Now do I long to hear how you were found;

How possibly preserv'd; and whom to thank,

Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man

Through whom the gods have shown their power;
that can

From first to last resolve you.

Per. Reverend sir,

The gods can have no mortal officer

More like a god than you. Will you deliver

How this dead queen relives?

Cer. I will, my lord.

Beseech you, first go with me to my house,

Where shall be shown you all was found with her;

How she came placed here within the temple;

No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana!

I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer

My night oblations to thee. Thaisa,

This prince, the fair-betroth'd⁸ of your daughter,

Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,

This ornament that makes me look so dismal,

Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form;

And what this fourteen years so razor touch'd,

To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.⁹

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit, Sir, that my father's dead.¹¹

tory of the Turks:—'Galleys might be drown'd in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged.'

7 So in King Lear:—

'It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.'

8 This is a sentiment which Shakespeare never fails to introduce on occasions similar to the present. So in the 30th Psalm:—'O spare me a little, that I may recover my strength before I go hence, and be no more seen.' The same thought is expressed by Perdita, in the Winter's Tale:—

'Not like a corpse;—or if—not to be buried
But quick, and in mine arms.'

9 I. e. fairly contracted, honourably affianced.

10 The author has here followed Gower, or the *Gesta
Romanorum*:—

'— this a vowe to God I make
That I shall never for hir sake,
My berde for no litynges shawe,
Till I befaite that I have
In convenable time of age
Besette her unto marriage.'

The poet has, however, been guilty of a slight inadvert-tency. If Pericles made the vow almost immediately after the birth of Marina, it was hardly necessary for him to make it again, as he has done, when he arrived at Tharsus.

11 In the fragment of the Old Metrical Romance, the father dies in his daughter's arms.

'Ziu was hys fader-in-lawe a lyve
Archistrates the goud kyng,
Folk come ageynes hym so blyve
As eny myght by othyr thyng;
They song daunsede & were blythe,
That ever he myghte that day yseo,
And thanked God a thousand sythe,
The kynges was gladdest ever be ye.'

Per. Heavens make a star of him!! Yet there,
my queen,
We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days;
Our son and daughter shall in Tyrrus reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way.

[Exeunt.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. In Antioch,* and his daughter, you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:

Tho he saw hem alle by fore
Hys doughter & hys sone in lawe,
Add hys doughter so fair y sone,
A kyngis wife hoo was wel sawe,
And her chylde ther also
Al clene of kyngis bloode,
He buste hem, he was glad tho
But the olde kyngs so goud.
He made hem dwelle that yer
And daye in hys daughter arm.*

1 This notion is borrowed from the ancients, who expressed their mode of conferring divine honours and immortality on men, by placing them among the stars.

2 I. e. the king of Antioch. The old copy reads Antiochus. Steevens made the alteration, observing that in Shakespeare's other plays we have France for the king of France; Morocco for the king of Morocco, &c.

In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen
(Although assaill'd with fortune fierce and keen,) Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last.
In Helicanus may you well descry
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears,
The worth that learned charity aye wears.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when flames
Had spread their cursed deed, and honour's
name

Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.
So on your patience evermore attending,
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending.

[Exit GOWER.

THAT this tragedy has some merit, it were vain to deny; but that it is the entire composition of Shakespeare, is more than can be hastily granted. I shall not venture with Dr. Farmer, to determine that the hand of our great poet is only visible in the last act: for I think it appears in several passages dispersed over each of these divisions. I find it difficult, however, to persuade myself that he was the original fabricator of the plot, or the author of every dialogue, chorus, &c.

STEEVENS.

KING LEAR.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of King Lear and his three daughters was originally told by Geoffrey of Monmouth, from whom Hollinshed transcribed it; and in his Chronicle Shakespeare had certainly read it: but he seems to have been more indebted to the old anonymous play, entitled The True Chronicle Historie of Leire, King of England, and his Three Daughters Gonorill, Ragan, and Cordella, 1606. A play with that title was entered on the Stationers' books by Edward White, May 14, 1594; and there are two other entries of the same piece, May 8, 1605; and Nov. 26, 1607. From the Mirror of Magistrates, Shakespeare has taken the hint for the behaviour of the Steward, and the reply of Cordella to her father, concerning her future marriage. The Episode of Gloucester and his sons must have been borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, no trace of it being found in the other sources of the fable. The reader will also find the story of King Lear in the second book and tenth canto of Spenser's Faerie Queene, and in the fifteenth chapter of the third book of Warner's Albion's England. Camden, in his Remaines, under the head of Wise Speeches, tells a similar story to this of Lear, of Ina, King of the West Saxons; which, if the thing ever happened, probably was the real origin of the fable. The story has found its way into many ballads and other metrical pieces; one ballad will be found in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. 4. 3d edit. The story is also to be found in the unpublished Gesta Romanorum, and in the Romance of Perceforest. The whole of this play could not have been written till after 1603. Harne's Declaration of Popish Impostures, to which it contains so many references, and from which the fantastic names of several spirits are borrowed, was not published till that year. It must have been produced before the Christmas of 1606; for in the entry of Lear on the Stationers' Register, on the 26th of November, 1607, it is expressly recorded to have been played, during the preceding Christmas, before his majesty at Whitehall. Malone places the date of the composition in 1606; Dr. Drake in 1604.

Of this noble tragedy, one of the first productions of the noblest of poets, it is scarcely possible to express our admiration in adequate terms. Whether considered as an effort of art, or as a picture of the passions, it is entitled to the highest praise. The two portions of which the fable consists, involving the fate of Lear and his daughters, and of Gloucester and his sons, influence each other in so many points, and are blended with such consummate skill, that whilst the imagination is delighted by diversity of circumstances, the judgment is equally gratified in viewing their mutual co-operation towards the final result; the conscience being so intimate, as not only to preserve the necessary unity of action, but to constitute one of the greatest beauties of the piece.

Such, indeed, is the interest excited by the structure and concentration of the story, that the attention is not once suffered to flag. By a rapid succession of incidents, by sudden and overwhelming vicissitudes, by the most awful instances of misery and destruction, by the boldest contrariety of characters, are curiosity and anxiety kept progressively increasing, and with an impetus so strong as nearly to absorb every faculty of the mind and every feeling of the heart.

Victims of frailty, of calamity, or of vice, in an age remote and barbarous, the actors in this drama are brought forward with a strength of colouring which, had the scene been placed in a more civilized era, might have been justly deemed too dark and ferocious; but is not discordant with the earliest heathen age of Britain. The effect of this style of characterization is felt occasionally throughout the entire play; but is particularly visible in the delineation of the vicious personages of the drama, the parts of Goneril, Ragan, Edmund, and Cornwall, being loaded not only with ingratitude of the deepest dye, but with cruelty of the most savage and diabolical nature; they are the criminals, in fact, of an age where vice may be supposed to reign with lawless and gigantic power, and in which the extremes of Gloucester's eyes might be such an event as not unfrequently occurred. Had this mode of casting his characters in the extreme been applied to the remainder of the dramatic persone, we should have lost some of the finest lessons of humanity and wisdom that ever issued from the pen of an uninspired writer; but with the exception of a few coarse sentences, which remind us of the barbarous period to which the story is referred, and of a few incidents rather revolting to credibility, but which could not be detached from the original narrative, the virtuous agents of the play exhibit the manners and the feelings of civilization, and are of that mixed fabric which can alone display a just portraiture of the nature and composition of our species.

The characters of Cordella and Edgar, it is true, approach nearly to perfection; but the final virtues of the former are combined with such exquisite tenderness of heart, and those of the latter with such bitter humiliation and suffering, that grief, indignation, and pity are instantly excited. Very striking representations are also given of the rough fidelity of Kent, and of the hasty credulity of Gloucester; but it is in delineating the passions, feelings, and afflictions of Lear that our poet has wrought up a picture of human misery which has never been surpassed, and which agitates the soul with the most overpowering emotions of sympathy and compassion.

The conduct of the unhappy monarch having been founded merely on the impulses of sensibility, and not on any fixed principle or rule of action, no sooner has he discovered the baseness of those on whom he had relied, and the fatal mistake into which he had been hurried by the delusions of inordinate fondness and extravagant expectation, than he feels himself bereft of all consolation and resource. Those to whom he had given all, for whom he had stripped himself of dignity and power, and on whom he had centred every hope of comfort and repose in his old age, his inhuman daughters, having not only treated him with utter coldness and contempt, but sought to deprive him of all the respectability, and even of the very means of existence, what, in a mind so constituted as Lear's, the sport of intense and ill regulated feeling, and tortured by the reflection of having deserted the only child who loved him, what but madness could be expected as the result? It was, in fact, the necessary consequence of the reciprocal action of complicated distress and morbid sensibility; and in describing the approach of this dreadful infirmity, in tracing its progress, its height, and subsidence, our poet has displayed such an intimate knowledge of the workings of the human intellect, under all its aberrations, as would afford an admirable study for the inquirer into mental physiology. He has also in this play, as in that of Hamlet, finely discriminated between real and assumed insanity. Edgar, amidst all the wild imagery which his imagination has accumulated, never touching on the true source of his misery, whilst Lear, on the contrary, finds it associated with every object and every thought, however distant or dissimilar. Not even the Orestes of Euripides, or the Clementina of Richardson, can, as pictures of disordered reason, be placed in competition with this of Lear; it may be pronounced, indeed, from its truth and completeness, beyond the reach of rivalry.*

An anonymous writer, who has instituted a comparison between the Lear of Shakspeare and the Oedipus of Sophocles, and justly given the palm to the former, closes his essay with the following sentence, to which every reader of taste and feeling will subscribe:—'There is no detached character in Shakspeare's writings which displays so vividly as this the hand and mind of a master; which exhibits so great a variety of excellence, and such amazing powers of delineation; so intimate a knowledge of the human heart, with such exact skill in tracing the progress and the effects of its more violent and more delicate passions. It is in the management of this character more especially that he fills up that grand idea of a perfect poet, which we delight to image to ourselves, but despair of seeing realised.†

In the same work from whence this is extracted will be found an article, entitled 'Theatricals,' attributed to the pen of Mr. Charles Lamb, in which are the following striking animadversions on the liberty taken in changing the catastrophe of this tragedy in representation. 'The Lear of Shakspeare cannot be acted. The contemptible machinery with which they mimic the storm he goes out in, is not more inadequate to represent the horrors of the real elements, than any actor can be to represent Lear. The greatness of Lear is not in corporal dimension, but in intellectual: the explosions of his passions are terrible as a volcano; they are storms turning up and disclosing to the bottom that rich sea, his mind, with all its vast riches: it is his mind which is laid bare. This case of flesh and blood seems too insignificant to be thought on; even as he himself neglects it. On the stage we see nothing but corporal infirmities and weakness, the impotence of age; while we read it we see not Lear, but we are Lear—we are in his mind; we are sustained by a grandeur, which baffles the malice of his daughters and storms; in the aberrations of his reason, we discover a mighty irregular power of reasoning, unmethodised from the ordinary purposes of life, but exerting its powers, as the wind blows where it listeth, at will on the corruptions and abuses of mankind. What have looks or tones to do with that sublime identification of his age with that of the Æreene themselves, when, in his reproaches to them for committing to the injustice of his children, he reminds them that 'they themselves are old!' What gesture shall we appropriate to this? What have voice or the eye to do with such things? But the play is beyond all art, as the samplings with it show; it is too hard and stony; it must have love-scenes, and a happy ending. It is not enough that Cordelia is a daughter, she must shine as a lover too. Fate has put his hook in the nostrils of this Leviathan, for Garrick and his followers, the showmen of the scene, to draw it about more easily. A happy ending!—as if the living martyrdom that Lear had gone through, the saying of his feelings alive, did not make a fair dismissal from the stage of life the only decorous thing for him. If he is to live and be happy after, if he could sustain this world's burden after, why all this pudder and preparation—why torment as with all this unnecessary sympathy? As if the childish pleasure of seeing his gilt robes and sceptre again, could tempt him to act over again his misused station,—as if at his years, and with his experience, any thing was left but to die.'

ACT I.

SCENE I. A Room of State in King Lear's Palace. Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.

Kent.

I THOUGHT the king had more affected the duke of Albany, than Cornwall.

1 There is something of obscurity or inaccuracy in this preparatory scene. The king has already divided his kingdom, and yet when he enters, he examines his daughters to discover in what proportions he should divide it. Perhaps Kent and Gloucester only were privy to

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weigh'd, that curiosity² in neither can make choice of either's moiety.³

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

his design, which he still kept in his own hands, to be changed or performed as subsequent reasons should determine him.—Johnson.

2 Curiosity is scrupulous exactness, finical precision.

3 Moiety is used by Shakspeare for part or portion.

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge : I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could : whereupon she grew round-wombed ; and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault ?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.¹

Glo. But I have, sir, a son by order of law, some year² elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account : though this knave came somewhat saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair ; there was good sport at his making, and the whoreson must be acknowledged.—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund ?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My lord of Kent : remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. He hath been out nine years, and away he shall again :—The king is coming.

[Trumpets sound within.]

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the lords of France and Burgundy, Gloucester.

Glo. I shall, my liege.

[Exit GLOUCESTER, and EDMUND.]

Lear. Mean time we shall express our darker³ purpose.

Give me the map there.—Know, that we have divided,

In three, our kingdom : and 'tis our fast intent⁴ To shake all cares and business from our age ;
Conferring⁵ them on younger strengths, while we Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany,
We have this hour a constant will⁶ to publish
Our daughters, several dowers, that future strife
May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,
Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,
And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my daughters

(Since now we will divest us, both of rule, Interest of territory, cares of state,⁷)
Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most ?
That we our largest bounty may extend

1 Proper is comely, handsome.

2 i.e. 'about a year elder.'

3 'We shall express our darker purpose : ' that is, 'we have already made known our desire of parting the kingdom ; we will now discover what has not been told before, the reasons by which we shall regulate the partition.' This interpretation will justify or palliate the exordial dialogue. —Johnson.

4 i.e. our determined resolution. The quartos read, 'first intent.'

5 The quartos read, confirming.

6 Constant will, which is a confirmation of the reading 'fast intent,' means a firm, determined will : it is the certa voluntas of Virgil. The lines from while we to prevented now are omitted in the quartos.

7 The two lines in a parenthesis are omitted in the quartos.

8 'Beyond all assignable quantity. I love you beyond limits, and cannot say it is so much ; for how much soever I should name, it would yet be more.' Thus Rowe, in his Fair Penitent, Sc. 1 :—

'—I can only

Swear you reign here, but never tell how much.'

9 i.e. enriched. So Drant in his translation of Horace's Epistles, 1567 :—

'To rich his country, let his words lyke flowing water fall.'

10 That is, 'estimate me at her value, my love has at least equal claim to your favour. Only she comes short of me in this, that I profess myself an enemy to all other

Where merit doth most challenge it.—Goneril,
Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon.

Sir, I

Do love you more than words can wield the matter
Dearer than eye-sight, space, and liberty ;
Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare ;
No less than life, with grace, health, beauty, honour :
As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable :
Beyond all manner of so much I love you.⁹

Cor. What shall Cordelia do ? Love, and be silent.

[Aside.]

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champains rich'd,¹⁰
With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady : To thine and Albany's issue
Be this perpetual.—What says our second daughter,
Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall ? Speak.

Reg. I am made of that self metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth.¹¹ In my true heart
I find, she names my very deed of love ;
Only she comes too short,—that I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys,
Which the most precious squares of sense possess ;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love.

Cor. Then poor Cordelia ! [Aside.]
And yet not so ; since, I am sure, my love's
More richer than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom ;
No less in space, validity,¹² and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd¹³ on Goneril.—Now, our joy,
Although the last, not least ; to whose young love
The vines of France, and milk of Burgundy,
Strive to be interest'd :¹⁴ what can you say, to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters ? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing ?

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing can come of nothing : speak again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth : I love your majesty
According to my bond ; nor more, nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia ? mend your speech
A little,

Lest it may mar your fortunes.

Cor.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me : I
Return those duties back as are right fit,
Obey you, love you, and most honour you.
Why have my sisters husbands, if they say,
They love you, all ? Haply, when I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care, and duty :¹⁵ joys which the most precious aggregation of sense can bestow.' Square is here used for the whole complement as circle is now sometimes used.

11 Validity is several times used to signify worth, value, by Shakespeare. It does not, however, appear to have been peculiar to him in this sense. 'The countenance of your friend is of less value than his council, yet both of very small validity.'—The Devil's Charter, 1607.

12 The folio reads conferr'd ; the quartos, confirm'd. So in a former passage we have in the quartos confirming for confering. 'To confirm on a person is certainly not English now (says Mr. Boswell) ; but it does not follow that such was the case in Shakespeare's time. The original meaning of the word to establish would easily bear such a construction.'

13 To interest and to interesse are not, perhaps, different spellings of the same verb, but two distinct words, though of the same import ; the one being derived from the Latin, the other from the French interessere. We have interess'd in Ben Jonson's Sejanus :—

'Our sacred laws and just authority
Are interess'd therein.'

Drayton also uses the word in the Preface to his Polyolbion.

14 So in the Mirror for Magistrates, 1587, Cordelia says :—

Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
To love my father all.

Lear. But goes this with thy heart?

Cor. Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so.—Thy truth then be thy dower:

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this,¹ for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation² messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege,—

Lear. Peace, Kent!
Come not between the dragon and his wrath:
I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!

[To CORDELIA.]

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her!—Call France;—Who stirs?

Call Burgundy.—Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two daughters' dowers digest this third:
Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry her.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.—Ourselves, by monthly
course,

With reservation of a hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain
The name, and all the additions³ to a king;
The sway,
Revenue, execution of the rest.⁴

Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. [Giving the Crown.]

Kent. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd,
As my great patron thought on in my prayers,⁵

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad. What would'st thou do, old
man?

Think'st thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour's bound,

When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doom;⁶
And, in thy best consideration, check
This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment,

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty-hearted, whose low sound
Reverber's no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thine enemies,⁷ nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight!

Kent. See better, Lear, and let me still remain
The true blank⁸ of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! miscreant!

[Laying his Hand on his Sword.]

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear.

Kent. Do;

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee, thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!

On thine allegiance, hear me!—
Since thou hast sought to make us break our vow, (Which we durst never yet,) and, with strain'd pride,

To come betwixt our sentence and our power,
(Which nor our nature nor our place can bear;)
Our potency made⁹ good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases¹⁰ of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following,
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death. Away! By Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king: since thou wilt appear,
Freedom¹¹ lives hence, and banishment is here.
The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,

[To CORDELIA]

That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!—
And your large speeches, may your deeds approve,

[To REGAN and GONERIL.]

That good effects may spring from words of love.—
Thus Kent, O, princes, bids you all adieu;
He'll shape his old course in a country new. [Exit.
Re-enter GLOSTER, with FRANCE, BURGUNDY,
and Attendants.]

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble lord.

Lear. My lord of Burgundy,

We first address towards you, who with this king
Hath rival'd for our daughter; What, in the least, cred and Gismund, 1592:—'You shall not be able to wage against me in the charges growing upon this action.'

George Wither, in his verses before the Polyolbion,
says:—

'Good speed befall thee who hath wag'd a task
That better censures and rewards doth ask.'

⁹ The blank is the mark at which men shoot. 'See better,' says Kent, 'and let me be the mark to direct your sight, that you err not.'

¹⁰ 'As you have with unreasonable pride come between our sentence and our power to execute it: that power shall be made good by rewarding thy contumacy with a sentence of banishment.' In Othello we have nearly the same language:—

'My spirit and my place have in them power
To make this better to thee.'

One of the quartos reads, 'make good.'

¹¹ Thus the quartos. The folio reads, disasters. By the diseases of the world are meant, the uneasinesses, inconveniences, and slight troubles or distresses of the world. So in King Henry VI. Part I. Act II. Sc. 5:—

'And in that ease I'll tell thee my disease.'

The provision that Kent could make in five days might in some measure guard against such diseases of the world but could not shield him from its disasters.

¹² The quartos read, 'Friendship.' And in the next line, instead of 'dear shelter,' 'protection'

'—Nature so doth bind me, and compel
To love you as I ought, my father, well;
Yet shortly may I chance, if fortune will,
To find in heart to bear another more good will:
Thus much I said of nuptial loves that meant.'

1 I.e. from this time.

2 His children.

3 'All the titles belonging to a king.'

4 By 'the execution of the rest,' all the other functions of the kingly office are probably meant.

5 The allusion is probably to the custom of clergymen praying for their patrons in what is called the bidding prayer.

6 The folio reads, 'reserve thy state;' and has stoops instead of 'falls to folly.' The meaning of answer my life my judgment, is, Let my life be answerable for my judgment, or I will stake my life on my opinion.

7 This is perhaps a word of the poet's own, meaning the same as reverses.

8 That is, 'I never regarded my life as my own, but merely as a thing of which I had the possession, and not the property; and which was entrusted to me as a pawn or pledge, to be employed in waging war against your enemies.' 'To wage,' says Bullokar, 'to undertake, or give security for performance of any thing.'

The expression to wage against is used in a letter from Gull. Webbe to Robt. Wilmot, prefixed to Tan-

Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?¹

Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness offer'd,
Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n: Sir, there she stands;
If aught within that little, seeming² substatance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure pac'd,
And nothing more, may filly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Sir,
Will you, with those infirmities she owes,³
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up⁴ on such conditions.

Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me,
I tell you all her wealth.—For you, great king,

[To FRANCE.]

I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech you
To avert your liking a more worthier way,
Than on a wretch whose nature is ashamed
Almost to acknowledge hers.

France. This is most strange!
That she, that even but now was your best object,
The argument of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour! Sure, her offences
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it,⁵ or your fore-vouch'd affection
Fall into taint:⁶ which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason without miracle
Could never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,
(If for I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not; since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak,) that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste⁷ action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour:
But even for want of that, for which I am richer;
A still-soliciting eye, and such a tongue
That I am glad I have not, though not to leave it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
Hast not been born, than not to have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this? a tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke,

1 That is, 'your amorous pursuit.' A quest is a seeking or pursuit: the expedition in which a knight was engaged is often so named in the Faerie Queen.

2 Seeming here means specious. Thus in the Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page.'

3 i. e. she, is possessed of.

4 That is, 'Election is not accomplished upon such conditions.' I cannot decide to take her upon such terms.

5 Such unnatural degree

That monsters it.

In the phraseology of Shakespeare's age that and as were convertible words. So in Coriolanus:

'But with such words that are but rooted in Your tongue.'

See Julius Caesar, Act I. Sc. 2. The uncommon verb to monster, occurs again in Coriolanus, Act II. Sc. 3:—

'To hear my nothings monster'd.'

6 Her offence must be monstrous, or the former affection which you professed for her must fall into taint; that is, become the subject of reproach. Taint is here only an abbreviation of attainst.

7 i. e. 'If cause I want, &c.'

8 The quarto read, 'no unclean action,' which in fact carries the same sense.

9 i. e. with cautious and prudent considerations.—The folio has regards. The meaning of the passage is, that his love wants something to mark its sincerity,—

'Who seeks for aught in love but love alone.'

That it intends to do?—My lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects⁸ that stand
Aloof from the entire point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn: I am firm.

Bur. I am sorry, then, you have so lost a father
That you must lose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!
Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;

Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd!
Thee, and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be it lawful, I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 'tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect,

My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—
Thy dowries daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:

Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy
Shall buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind:
Thou lovest here a better where¹⁰ to find. [for we

Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine;
Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore be gone,
Without our grace, our love, our benison.—
Come, noble Burgundy.

[Enter LEAR, BURGUNDY, COM-
WALL, ALBANY, GLOSTER, and Attendants.]

France. Bid farewell to your sisters.

Cor. The jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you; I know you what you are:
And, like a sister, am most loath to call
Your faults, as they are nam'd. Use well our father:
To your profess'd¹¹ bosoms I commit him:
But yet, alas! stood I within his grace,
I would prefer him to a better place.

So farewell to you both.

Gon. Prescribe not us our duties.

Reg. Let your study
Be, to content your lord; who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. You have obedience scanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.¹²

Cor. Time shall unfold what plaid¹³ I'm wearing hides;

Who cover faults,¹⁴ at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

10 Here and where have the power of nouns. 'Thou lovest this residence, to find a better residence in another place.' So in Churchyard's Farewell to the World, 1592:—

'That grows not here, takes root in other where.'

11 We have here professed for professing. It has been elsewhere observed that Shakespeare often uses one participle for another. Thus in the Merchant of Venice, Act III. Sc. 2, we have gull'd for gulling; in other places, delighted for delighting, &c. A remarkable instance of the converse occurs in Antony and Cleopatra; where we have all-obeyed for all-obeying.

12 Thus the folio. The quartos read:—

'And well are worth the worth that you have wanted.' The meaning of the passage as it now stands in the text, is, 'You well deserve to want that dower, which you have lost by having failed in your obedience.' So in King Henry VI. Part III. Act IV. Sc. 1:—'Though I want a kingdom; i. e. though I am without a kingdom.'

13 That is, complicated, intricate, involved, cunning.

14 The quartos read:—

'Who covers faults, at last shame them derides.'

The folio has:—

'Who covers faults, at last with shame derides.'

Mason proposed to read:—

'Who covers faults, at last with shame derides.'

The word who referring to Time. In the third act,

Lear says:—

'Cattiff, shake to pieces,
That under covert and convenient seeming,
Hast practis'd on man's life.'

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt FRANCE and CORDELIA.
Gon. Sister, it is not a little I have to say, of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think, our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you; next month with us.

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always loved our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off, appears too grossly.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfections of long-engrafted condition,¹ but therewithal, the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant starts are we like to have from him, as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit together: If our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and I the heat.²

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the Earl of Gloucester's Castle. Enter EDMUND, with a Letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess;³ to thy law My services are bound; Wherefore should I Stand in the plague⁴ of custom; and permit The curiosity⁵ of nations to deprive⁶ me, For that I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines Lag of a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base? When my dimensions are as well compact, My mind as generous, and my shape as true, As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base? Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take More composition and fierce quality Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed, Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops, Got 'tween asleep and wake?—Well, then, Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land: Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund, As to the legitimate: Fine word,—legitimate! Well, my legitimate, if this letter speed, And my invention thrive, Edmund the base Shall top the legitimate. I grow: I prosper:—Now, gods, stand up for bastards!

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! And France in choler parted!

And the king gone to-night! subscrib'd⁷ his power! Confin'd to exhibition!⁸ All this done Upon the gad!⁹—Edmund! How now? what news?

1 i. e. temper; qualities of mind confirmed by long habit. Thus in Othello:—

'—A woman of so gentle a condition.'

2 We must strike while the iron's hot.

3 Edmund calls nature his goddess, for the same reason as we call a bastard a natural son: one who, according to the law of nature is the child of his father; but, according to those of civil society, is nullius filius.

4 'Wherefore should I subscribe tamely to the plague (i. e. the evil), or injustice of custom?'

5 The nicety of civil institutions, their strictness and scrupulosity. See note 2, on the first scene.

6 To deprive is equivalent to disinheret. Escharedo is rendered by this word in the old dictionaries; and Hollinshed speaks of the line of Henry before deprived.

'How much the following lines are in character, may be seen by that monstrous wish of Vanini, the Italian atheist, in his tract De Admiranda Nature, &c. printed at Paris, 1616, the very year our poet died:—"O utinam extra legitimum et connubiale thorum esum procreatus! His enim progenitores mei in venerem incaluisse ardentius ac cumulatim affatimque generosa se-

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the Letter.]

Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.

Glo. What paper were you reading?

Edm. Nothing, my lord.

Glo. No? What needed then that terrible aspersion of it into your pocket? The quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: Come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'erread; for so much as I have perused, I find it not fit for your over-looking.

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay,¹⁰ or taste of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads.] This policy, and reverence of age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us, till our oldness cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond¹¹ bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffered. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, Edgar.—Humph—Conspiracy!—Sleep till I waked him—you should enjoy half his revenue.—My son Edgar!—Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? Who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord, there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the case-ment of my closet.

Glo. You know the character to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but, I hope, his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Hath he never heretofore sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: But I have often heard him maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect age, and fathers declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O, villain, villain!—His very opinion in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested, brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him; I'll apprehend him:—Abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please ye to suspend your indignation against my brother, till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his mina contulissent, e quibus ego forme blanditiam et elegantiam, robustas corporis vires, mentemque innumibilem, consequutus fuisset. At quia conjugatorum sum soboles, his orbus sum bonis.' Had the book been published but ten or twenty years sooner, who would not have believed that Shakspeare alluded to this passage? But the divinity of his genius foretold, as it were, what such an atheist as Vanini would say when he wrote on such a subject.—Warburton.

7 To subscribe is to yield, to surrender.

8 Exhibition is an allowance, a stipend.

9 i. e. in haste, equivalent to upon the spur. A gad was a sharp pointed piece of steel, used as a spur to urge cattle forward; whence goaded forward.

Mr Nares suggests that to gad and gadding originate from being on the spur to go about.

10 'As an essay,' &c. means as a trial or taste of my virtue. To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer, says Barot; and a little lower: 'To taste or assay before; proutbo.'

11 i. e. weak and foolish.

12 Where for whereas.

purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour,¹ and to no other pretence² of danger.

Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening.

Glo. He cannot be such a monster.

[Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!³—Edmund, seek him out; wind me into him,⁴ I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom: I would unstate myself, to be in a due resolution.⁵

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey⁶ the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal.

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: Though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourged by the sequent effects:⁷ love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked between son and father. [This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: Machinations, hollownests, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves!⁸]—Find out this villain, Edmund, it shall lose thee nothing: do it carefully:—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banished! his offence, honesty!—Strange! strange! [Exit.]

Edm. This is the excellent poppery of the world,⁹ that, when we are sick in fortune (often the surfeit of our own behaviour,) we make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity: fools, by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and treachers!¹⁰ by spherical predominance; drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence: and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: An admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star!¹¹ My father compounded with my mother under the dragon's tail; and my nativity was under woe major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Edgar—

Enter EDGAR.

and pat he comes, like the catastrophe of the old comedy:¹² My cue is villainous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam.—O, these eclipses do portend these divisions!¹³ fa, sol, la, mi!¹⁴

Edg. How now, brother Edmund? What serious contemplation are you in?

Edm. I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you,¹⁵ the effects he writes of, succeed unhappily: [as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences, banishment of friends, dissipation of cohorts,¹⁶ nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?

Edm. Come, come;] when saw you my father last?

Edg. Why, the night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together.

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him, by word or countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself, wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty, forbear his presence, till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my fear. [I pray you, have a continent¹⁶ forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fity bring you to hear my lord speak: Pray you, go; there's my key;—If you do stir abroad, go armed.]

Edg. Armed, brother?

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best: go armed; I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you: I have told you what I have seen and heard, but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it: 'Pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.—

[Exit EDGAR.]

11 So Chaucer's Wife of Bath (v. 6196):—

'I followed ay min inclination,
By vertue of my constellation.'

12 Perhaps this was intended to ridicule the very awkward conclusions of our old comedies, where the persons of the scene make their entry artificially, and just when the poet wants them on the stage.

13 Shakespeare shows by the context that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables in sol-misation, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural that ancient musicians prohibited their use. The monkish writers on music say mi contra fa, est diabolus: the interval fa mi including a tritenus or sharp fourth, consisting of three tones without the intervention of a semi-tone, expressed in the modern scale by the letters F G A B, would form a musical phrase extremely disagreeable to the ear. Edmund, speaking of eclipses as portents and prodigies, compares the dislocation of events, the times being out of joint, to the unnatural and offensive sounds fa sol la mi.—Dr. Burney.

14 The folio edition commonly differs from the first quarto, by augmentations or insertions, but in this place it varies by the omission of all between brackets. It is easy to remark that in this speech, which ought, I think, to be inserted as it now is in the text, Edmund, with the common craft of fortune-tellers, mingles the past and the future, and tells off the future only what he already foreknows by confederacy, or can attain by probable conjecture.—Johnson.

15 For cohorts some editors read courts.

16 I. e. temperate. All between brackets is omitted in the quartos.

1 The usual address to a lord.

2 I. e. design or purpose.

3 The words between brackets are omitted in the folio.

4 'Wind me into him.' Another example of familiar expressive phraseology not unfrequent in Shakespeare.

5 'I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution,' means 'I would give all that I am possessed of to be satisfied of the truth.' So in the Four Prentices, Reed's Old Plays, vol. viii. p. 92:—

'Ah, but the resolution of thy death!

Made me to lose such thought.'

Shakespeare frequently uses resolved for satisfied. And in the third act of Massinger's Picture, Sophia says:—

'I have practised

For my certain resolution with these courtiers.'

And in the last Act she says:—

'Nay, more, to take,

For the resolution of his fears, a course

That is, by holy writ, denied a Christian.'

6 To convey is to conduct, or carry through.

7 That is, though natural philosophy can give account of eclipses, yet we feel their consequences.

8 All between brackets is omitted in the quartos.

9 Warburton, in a long and ingenious note on this passage, observes, that in this play the dotages of a judicial astrology are intended to be satirized. It was a very prevailing folly in the poet's time.

10 Treachery is the reading of the folio, which is sanctioned by the use of the word in many of our old dramas. Chaucer, in his Romaunt of the Rose, mentions 'the false treacher'; and Spenser many times uses the same epithet. The quartos all read treachery.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy!—I see the business.—
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit:
All with me's meet, that I can fashion fit. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in the Duke of Albany's Palace. Enter GONERIL and Steward.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night! he wrongs me; every hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I'll not endure it:
His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us
On every trifle;—When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him: say, I am sick:—
If you come slack of former services,
You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

Stew. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

[Horns within.]

Gon. Put on that weary negligence you please,
You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question:
If he dislike it, let him to my sister,
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
[Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man!]

That still would manage those authorities,
That he hath given away!—Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again; and must be us'd
With checks, as flatteries,—when they are seen abus'd.¹

Remember what I have said.

Stew. Very well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you;

What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so:
[I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak:]—I'll write straight to my sister,

To hold my very course:—Prepare for dinner.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Hall in the same. Enter KENT, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech diffuse,² my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz'd³ my likeness.—Now, banish'd
Kent,

If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd,
(So may it come!) thy master, whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Horns within. Enter LEAR, Knights, and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a jot for dinner: go, get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now, what art thou?

Kent. A man, sir.

¹ This line and the four following are not in the folio. Theobald observes that they are fine in themselves, and much in character for Goneril.

² I take the meaning of this passage to be, 'Old men are babes again, and must be accustomed to checks as well as flatteries, especially when the latter are seen to be abused by them.'

³ The words in brackets are found in the quartos, but omitted in the folio.

⁴ To diffuse here means to disguise, to render it strange, to obscure it. See Merry Wives of Windsor. We must suppose that Kent advances looking on his disguise. This circumstance very naturally leads to his speech, which otherwise would have no apparent introduction.

⁵ i. e. effaced.

⁶ To converse signifies immediately and properly to keep company, to have commerce with. His meaning is, that he chooses for his companions men of reserve and caution; men who are not tattleers nor talebearers.

⁷ It is not clear how Kent means to make the eating no fish a recommendatory quality, unless we suppose that it arose from the odium then cast upon the papists, who were the most strict observers of periodical fasts, Lear. What dost thou profess? What would'st thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly, that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse⁸ with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight, when I cannot choose: and to eat no fish.⁹

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king.

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject, as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What would'st thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who would'st thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance, which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me; if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner!—Where's my knave? my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither:

Enter Steward.

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

Stew. So please you—

[Exit.]

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll back.—Where's my fool, ho?—I think the world's asleep.—How now? where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me, when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answer'd me in the roundest manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not!

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears, as well in the general dependants, as in the duke himself also, and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! say'st thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent, when I think your highness is wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remember'st me of mine own conception; I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity,¹⁰ than as a very pretence¹¹ and which though enjoined to the people under the protestant government of Elizabeth, were not very palatable or strictly observed by the commonalty. Marston's Dutch Courtesan says, 'I trust I am none of the wicked that eat fish a Fridays.' I cannot think with Mr. Blake-way, who says that Kent means to insinuate that he never desires to partake of fish because it was esteemed a luxury; and therefore incompatible with his situation as an humble and discreet dependant. The repeated promulgation of mandates from the court for the better observation of fish days disproves this. I have before me a Letter of Archbishop Whitgift, in 1596, strictly enjoining the clergy of his diocese to attend to the observance of the fasts and fish days among their respective parishioners, and severely animadverting upon the refractory spirit which disposed them to eat flesh out of due season contrary to law.

⁸ By jealous curiosity Lear appears to mean a puerile jealousy, resulting from a scrupulous watchfulness of his own dignity. See the second note on the first scene of this play.

⁹ A very pretence is an absolute design. So in a former scene, 'to no other pretence of danger.'

purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—
But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Night. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.¹

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—
Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her.—Go you, and call hither my fool.—

Re-enter Steward.

O, you sir, you sir, come you hither: Who am I, sir?

Stew. My lady's father.

Lear. My lady's father! my lord's knave; you whorson dog! you slave! you cur!

Stew. I am none of this, my lord; I beseech you, pardon me.

Lear. Do you bandy² looks with me, you rascal? [Striking him.]

Stew. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripped neither; you base foot-ball player.

[Tripping up his Heels.]

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away; I'll teach you differences: away, away; if you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry: but away: go to: Have you wisdom? so. [Pushes the Steward out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving KENT Money.]

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too;—Here's my corncomb.

[Giving KENT his Cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave? how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my oxcomb.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. Why? For taking one's part that is out of favour: Nay, and thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly.³ There, take my corncomb: Why, this fellow has banish'd two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my corncomb.⁴—How now, nuncle? 'Would, I had two corncombs and two daughters!

Lear. Why, my boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living,⁵ I'd keep my corncombs myself: There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah; the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog that must to kennel! he must be whipped out, when Lady, the brach,⁶ may stand by the fire, and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Fool. Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle:—

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,⁷
Ride more than thou goest,
Learn more than thou trowest,⁸
Set less than thou throwest,
Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door,
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score.

Lear. This is nothing, fool.

Fool. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfeeling lawyer; you gave me nothing for't; Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to; he will not believe a fool.

[To KENT.]

Lear. A bitter fool!

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. [No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord, that counsel'd thee

To give away thy land,

Come place him here by me,—

Or do thou for him stand:

The sweet and bitter fool

Will presently appear;

The one in motley here,

The other found out there

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part with: and ladies, too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be smatching.⁹—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns.

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thine ass on thy back over the dirt: Thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.

Fools had ne'er less grace in a year.¹¹ [Singing.

For wise men are grown foppish;

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so epish.

Lear. When were you want to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, ever since thou madest thy daughters thy mother; for when thou

¹ This is an endearing circumstance in the Fool's character, and creates such an interest in his favour as his wit alone might have failed to procure for him.—Steevens.

² A metaphor from tennis. 'Come in and take this bandy with the racket of patience.'—Decker's Satiromastix. 'To bandy a ball,' Cole defines clava pilam torquere; 'To bandy at tennis,' reticulo peltare. 'To bandy blows' is still a common idiom.

³ I. e. be turned out of doors and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

⁴ The reader may see a representation of this ornament of the fool's cap in Mr. Douce's illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. 'Natural idiots and fools have, and will do accommodate themselves to wear in their capotes cocked feathers, or a hat with a neck and heads of a cocke on the top, and a ball thereon.'—Minsheu's Dictionary, 1617.

⁵ A familiar contraction of mine uncle, as single, &c. It seems that the customary appellation of the old licensed fool to his superiors was uncle. In Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim, when Allinda assumes the character of a fool, she uses the same language. She meets Alphonso, and calls him nuncle; to which he replies by calling her mount. In the same style it appears the fools called each other cousin. Mon oncle was long a term of respect and familiar endearment in France, as well as ma tante. They have a proverb, 'Il est bien mon oncle, qui le ventire me comble.' It is remarkable, observes Mr. Valliant, that the lower people in Shropshire call the judge of assize 'my nuncle the judge.'

⁶ All my estate or property.

⁷ It has already been shown that brack was a surname name for a ditto. So Hotspur, in The Second Part of King Henry IV. says:—'I would rather hear Lady my brack howl in Irish.'

⁸ That is, 'do not lend all that thou hast.' To care in ancient language is to possess.

⁹ To trive is to believe. The precept is admirable. Set in the next line means stake.

¹¹ 'There never was a time when fools were less in favour; and the reason is, that they were never so little wanted, for wise men now supply their place.'—In Mother Bombie, a Comedy, by Lyly, 1594, we find 'I think gentlemen had never less wit in a year.' It is remarkable that the quartos read 'less wit,' instead of 'less grace,' which is the reading of the folio gavest them the rod, and put'st down thine own breeches,

*Then they for sudden joy did weep. [Singing.
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.]*

Pr'ythee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie; I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. If you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.
Fool. I marvel, what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and, sometimes, I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind of thing, than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast par'd thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing in the middle: Here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet¹ on? Methinks you are too much of late² i' the frown.

Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning; now thou art an O³ without a figure: I am better than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art nothing.—Yee, forsooth, I will hold my tongue! so your face [To Gon.] bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,
Weary of all, shall want some.

That's a shealed peascod.⁴ [Pointing to LEAR.]

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd fool,
But other of your insolent retinue
Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth
In rank and not-to-be-endured riots. Sir,
I had thought by making this well known unto you,
To have found a safe redress, but now grow fearful,
By what yourself too late have spoke and done,
That you protect this course, and put it on⁵
By your allowance; which if you should, the fault
Would not 'scape censure, nor the redresses sleep;
Which in the tender of a wholesome weal,
Might in their working do you that offence,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.

Fool. For you trow, nuncle,

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young.
So, out went the candle and we were left darkling.⁶

¹ So in the Rape of Lucrece, by Heywood, 1608:—

'When Tarquin first in court began,
And was approved king,
Some men for *Sodden joy gan weep,
And I for sorrow sing.*

² A frontlet, or forehead cloth, was worn by ladies of old to prevent wrinkles. So in George Chapman's Hero and Leander, ad finem:—

'E'en like the forehead cloth that in the night,
Or when they sorrow, ladies us'd to wear.'

Thus also in Zephania, a collection of Sonnets, 4to. 1594:—

'But now, my sunne, it fits thou take thy set
And wayle thy face with frownes as with a frontlet.'
And in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1590:—'The next day coming to the gallery where she was solitary walking, with her frowning cloth, as sike lately of the sullen,' &c.

³ I. e. a cipher.

⁴ Now a mere husk that contains nothing. The robbing of Richard II.'s effigy in Westminster Abbey is wrought with peascods open and the peas out; perhaps an allusion to his being once in full possession of sovereignty, but soon reduced to an empty title. See Camden's Remaines, 1674, p. 433, ed. 1657, p. 340.

⁵ Put it on, that is, promote it, push it forward. Al-Luceance is approbation.

⁶ Shakespeare's fools are certainly copied from the life. The originals whom he copied were no doubt men of quick parts; lively and sarcastic. Though they were licensed to say any thing, it was still necessary, to prevent giving offence, that every thing they said should have a playful air: we may suppose therefore that they had a custom of taking off the edge of too sharp a speech by covering it hastily with the end of an old song, or any glib nonsense that came into their mind. I know no other way of accounting for the incoherent

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir, I would you would make use of that good wisdom whereof I know you are fraught; and put away these dispositions, which of late transform you from what you rightly are.

Fool. May not an ass know when the cart draws the horse? Whoop, Jug! I love thee.

Lear. Does any here know me?—Why, this is not Lear: does Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes? Either his notion weakens, or his discernings are lethargied.—Sleeping or waking?—Ha! sure 'tis not so.—Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Fool. Lear's shadow,—

Lear. [I would learn that; for by the marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason, I should be false persuaded I had daughters.]

Fool. Which they will make an obedient father.]

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. Come, sir;

This admiration is much o' the *flour*⁹
Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purposes aright:

As you are old and reverend, you should be wise:
Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. The shame itself doth speak
For instant remedy: Be then desir'd
By her that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantity your train:
And the remainder, that shall still depend,¹⁰
To be such men as may besort your age,
And know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!—

Saddle my horses; call my train together.—

Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee;

Yet have I left a daughter. [rabble]

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd
Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Wo, that too late repents,¹¹—O, sir, are you come?

words with which Shakespeare often finishes this fool's speeches.—Sir Joshua Reynolds. In a very old drama, entitled The Longer thou Livest the more Fool thou art, printed about 1590, we find the following stage direction:—'Entreat Moros, counterfeiting a vaine gesture and a foolish countenance, singing the foote of many songs, as fools were wont.'

⁷ The folio omits these words, and reads the rest of the speech, perhaps rightly, as verse.

⁸ This passage has been erroneously printed in all the late editions. 'Who is it can tell me who I am?' says Lear. In the folio the reply, 'Lear's shadow,' is rightly given to the Fool, but the latter part of the speech of Lear is omitted in that copy. Lear heeds not what the Fool replies to his question, but continues:—'Were I to judge from the marks of sovereignty, of knowledge, or of reason, I should be induced to think I had daughters, yet that must be a false persuasion;—it cannot be.—' The Fool seizes the pause in Lear's speech to continue his interrupted reply to Lear's question: he had before said, 'You are Lear's shadow;' he now adds, 'which they (i. e. your daughters,) will make an obedient father.' Lear heeds him not in his emotion, but addresses Goneril with 'Your name, fair gentlewoman.' It is remarkable that the continuation of Lear's speech, and the continuation of the Fool's comment, is omitted in the folio copy.

⁹ I. e. of the complexion. So in Julius Cæsar:—

'In Javours's like the work we have in hand.'

¹⁰ I. e. continue in service. So in Measure for Measure:—

'Canst thou believe thy living is a life,

So stinkingly depending?'

¹¹ One of the quarto copies reads, 'We that too late repents us.' The others, 'We that too late repents.' This may have been suggested by the Mirror for Magistrates:—

'They call him doting foole, all his requests debarr'd
Demanding if with life he were not well content:
Then he too late his rigour did repent
Gainst me.'

Story of Queen Cordelia.

Is it your will? [To ALB.] Speak, sir.—Prepare my horses.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st these in a child,
Than the sea-monster!¹

ALB. 'Pray, sir, be patient.
Lear. Detested kite! thou liest: [To GONNAIL.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know:
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their name.—O, most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine,² wrench'd my frame of nature

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O, Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate that let thy folly in,

[Striking his Head.
And thy dear judgment out.—Go, go, my people.

ALB. My lord, I am guiltless, as I am ignorant
Of what hath mov'd you.

Lear. I will be so, my lord.—Hear, nature, hear;
Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!

Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her derogate³ body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,

And be a thwart⁴ disnatur'd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks:
Turn all her mother's pains and benefits

To laughter and contempt; that she may feel How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!—Away! away! [Exit.

ALB. Now, gods, that we adore, whereof comes
this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers at a clap?
Within a fortnight?

ALB. What's the matter, sir?
Lear. I'll tell thee;—Life and death! I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus:
[To GONNAIL.

That these hot tears, which break from me perforce,
Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon thee!

The untented⁵ woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,
Beweepe this cause again, I'll pluck you out;
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay.—Ha! is it come to this?

1 The sea monster is the hippopotamus, the hieroglyphical symbol of impley and ingratitude. Sandys, in his Travels, says, 'that he killeth his sire, and ravisheth his own dam.'

2 By an engine the rack is here intended. So in The Night Walker, by Beaumont and Fletcher:—
'Their souls shot through with adders, torn on engines.'

3 Derogate here means degenerate, degraded.

4 Thwart as a noun adjective is not frequent in our language. It is to be found, however, in Prometheus and Cassandra, 1778:—
'Sixth fortune thwart doth cross my joys with care.'

Disnatur'd is wanting natural affection. So Daniel, in Hymen's Triumph, 1623:—'I am not so disnatur'd a man.'

5 'Pains and benefits,' in this place, signify maternal cares and good offices.

6 So in Psalm cxi. 3:—'They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adder's poison is under their lips.' The viper was the emblem of ingratitude.

7 The untented woundings are the ranking or never healing wounds inflicted by a parental malediction. Tents are well known dressings inserted into wounds as a preparative to healing them. Shakespeare quibbles upon this surgical practice in Troilus and Cressida:—
'Pair. Who keeps the tent now?'
'Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.'

8 This speech is gleaned partly from the Folio and partly from the quartos. The omissions in the one and the other are not of sufficient importance to trouble the reader with a separate notice of each.

9 All within brackets is omitted in the quartos.

10 At point probably means completely armed, and consequently ready at appointment on the slightest notice.

11 The word task is frequently used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries in the sense of tax. Goneril means to say, that he was more taxed for want of wisdom, than praised for mildness. So in The Island Princess of Beaumont and Fletcher, Quenana says to Ruy Dias:—
'You are too easy, too impudent,
'To task me with these errors.'

12 'Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?'
13 The word there in this speech shows that when the king says, 'Go you before to Gloster,' he means the town of Gloster, which Shakespeare chose to make the residence of the Duke of Cornwall, to increase the probability of their seeing out late from thence on a visit to

Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take

He may engross his dotage with their powers,
And hold our lives in mercy.] Oswald, I say!—

ALB. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust too far:
Let me still take away the harness I fear,
Not fear still to be taken. I know his heart:
What he hath utter'd, I have writ my sister;
If she sustain him and his hundred knights,
When I have show'd the unfitness,—How now, Oswald?

Enter Steward.

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?
Stew. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to her.
Inform her full of my particular fear;
And thereto add such reasons of your own,
As may compact it more. Get you gone,
And hasten your return. [Exit Stew.] No, no, my
lord,

This milky gentleness, and course of yours,
Though I condemn it not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more attack'd¹¹ for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

ALB. How far your eyes may pierce, I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.¹²

Gon. Nay, then,—
ALB. Well, well; the event. [Exit.

KENT, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these letters:

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter.

Fool. If a man's brains were in his heels, were't not in danger of kibes?

Lear. Ay, boy.

Fool. Then, if I pry thee, be merry; thy wit shall not go ship-shod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see, thy other daughter will use thee kindly;¹ for though she's as like this as a crab is like an apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. Why, what canst thou tell, my boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this, as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell, why one's nose stands i' the middle of his face?

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep his eyes on either side his nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong:²—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a snail has a house.

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in: not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars are no more than seven, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight?

Fool. Yes, indeed: Thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take it again perforce!³—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou shouldst not have been old, before thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven!

Keep me in temper; I would not be mad!—

Enter Gentleman.

How now! Are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that is maid now, and laughs at my departure,

Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.⁴

the Earl of Gloucester. Our old English earls usually resided in the counties from whence they took their titles. Lear, not finding his son-in-law and his wife at home, follows them to the earl of Gloucester's castle.

1 The Fool bubbles, using the word kindly in two senses; as it means affectionately, and like the rest of her kind, or after their nature.

2 He is musing on Cordelia.

3 The subject of Lear's meditation is the resumption of that moiety of the kingdom he had bestowed on Goneril. This was what Albany apprehended, when he replied to the upbraidings of his wife:—'Well, well: the event.' What Lear himself projected when he left Goneril to go to Regan:—

—Thou shalt find

That I'll resume the shape, which thou dost think I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee. And what Curan afterwards refers to, when he asks Edmund:—'Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?'

4 This idle couplet (apparently addressed to the females present at the representation of the play) most probably crept into the playhouse copy from the mouth of some buffoon actor who 'spoke more than was set down for him.' The severity with which the poet animadvert upon the mummeries and jokes of the clowns of his time (see Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 2) manifests that he had suffered by their indiscretion. Indecent jokes, which the applause of the groundlings occasioned to be repeated, would at last find their way into the

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Court within the Castle of the Earl of Gloucester. Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice, that the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his duchess, will be here with him to-night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not: You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whispered ones, for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments.¹

Edm. Not I: 'Pray you, what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may, then, in time. Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.]

Edm. The duke be here to-night? The better! Best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business! My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy² question, Which I must act:—Briefness, and fortune, work!—Brother, a word; descend:—Brother, I say;

Enter EDGAR.

My father watches:—O, sir, fly this place; Intelligence is given where you are hid; You have now the good advantage of the night:—Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall? He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' the haste, And Regan with him; Have you nothing said Upon his party 'gainst the Duke of Albany?³ Advise⁴ yourself.

Edg.

I am sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming,—Pardon me:—In cunning, I must draw my sword upon you:—Draw: Seem to defend yourself: Now quit you well.

Yield:—come before my father:—Light, ho, here! Fly, brother;—Torches! Torches!—So farewell.

Do more than this in sport.⁵—Father! Father! Stop, stop! No help?

Enter GLOSTER, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out.

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon To stand his auspicious mistress!⁶—

Glo.

But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo.

Where is the villain, Edmund?

prompter's books, &c. Such liberties were indeed exercised by the authors of Lochner, &c. but such another offensive and extraneous address to the audience cannot be pointed out among all the dramas of Shakespeare.

5 Ear-kissing arguments means that they are yet in reality only whispered ones.

6 This and the following speech are omitted in the quarto B.

7 Queasy appears to mean here delicate, unsettled. So Ben Jonson, in Sejanus:—

'These times are rather queasy to be touched.'

Have you not seen or read part of his book?

Queasy is still in use to express that sicklikeness of stomach which the slightest disgust is apt to provoke.

8 Have you said nothing upon the party formed by him against the Duke of Albany?

9 I. e. consider, recollect yourself.

10 These drunken feats are mentioned in Marston's Dutch Courtesan:—'Have I not been drunk for your health, eat glasses, drunk wine, stabbed arms, and done all offices of protested gallantry for your sake?'

11 This was a proper circumstance to urge to Gloucester, who appears to have been very superstitious with regard to this matter, if we may judge by what passes between him and his son in a foregoing scene.

Edm. Fled this way, sir. When by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after.—[Exit Serv.]
By no means,—what?

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;
But that I told him, the revenging gods
'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;
Spoke, with how manifold and strong a bond
The child was bound to the father:—Sir, in fine,
Seeing how loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,
With his prepared sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd mine arm:
But when he saw my best alarm'd spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter,
Or whether gasted¹ by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far:
Not in this land shall he land uncaught;
And found—Despatch.²—The noble duke my master,

My worthy arch³ and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he, which finds him, shall deserve our thanks,
Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He, that conceals him, death.

Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to do it, with curst speech;⁴
I threaten'd to discover him: He replied,
*Thou unpossessing bastard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal⁵
Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee
Make thy words faith'd! No: what I should deny,
(As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce
My very character,⁶) I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practice:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs⁷
To make thee seek it.*

Glo. Strong and fasten'd villain;
Would he deny his letter?—I never got him.

[Trumpets within.]
Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why he comes:—

All ports I'll bar; the villain shall not 'scape;
The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture
I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
May have due note of him; and of my land,
Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
To make thee capable.⁸

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend? since I came hither
(Which I can call but now,) I have heard strange news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue the offender. How dost, my lord?

Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd, is crack'd!

1 That is aghasted, frightened. Thus in Beaumont and Fletcher's Wit at Several Weapons:—'Either the sight of the lady has gasted him, or else he's drunk.'

2 'And found—Despatch.—The noble duke,' &c.—The sense is interrupted. He shall be caught—and found, he shall be punished. Despatch.

3 i. e. chief; a word now only used in composition, as arch-angel, arch-duke, &c. So in Heywood's If You Know Not Me, You Know Nobody:—'Poole, that arch of truth and honesty.'

4 'And found him pight to do it, with curst speech.' Pight is pitched, fixed, settled; curst is vehemently angry, bitter.

'Therefore my heart is surely pight
Of her alone to have a sight.'

Lusty Juventus, 1661.

5 He did with a very curste taunte, checke, and rebuke the feloe.—Erasmus's Apophthegmes, by N. Udal, f. 47.

6 i. e. would any opinion that men have reposed in thy trust, virtue, &c. The old quarto reads, 'could the reposer.'

7 i. e. my hand-writing, my signature.

8 The folio reads, 'potential spurs.' And in the next line but one, 'O strange and fastened villain.'—

Reg. What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

That tead upon my father?

Glo. I know not, madam:

It is too bad, too bad.—

Edm. Yes, madam, he was.

Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have the waste and spoil of his revenues.
I have this present evening from my sister
Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,
That, if they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—
Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father
A child-like office.

Edm. 'Twas my duty, sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practice,⁹ and receiv'd
This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursued?

Glo. Ay, my good lord, he is.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more
Be fear'd of doing harm: make your own purpose,
How in my strength you please.—For you, Edmund,
Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend itself, you shall be ours;
Natures of such deep trust we shall much need;
You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,

Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit you.

Reg. Thus out of season; threading dark-ey'd night.

Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poize,¹⁰
Wherein we must have use of your advice:—
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home;¹¹ the several messengers
From hence attend despatch. Our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow
Your needful counsel to our business,
Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before Gloster's Castle. Enter KENT and Steward, severally.

Stew. Good dawning¹² to thee, friend: Art of the house?

Kent. Ay.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'll mure.

Stew. 'Pr'ythee, if thou love me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why, then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lapebury pinfold,¹³ I would make thee care for me.

Strong is determined, resolute. Our ancestors often used it in an ill sense; as strong thief, strong whore,
&c.

8 i. e. capable of succeeding to my land, notwithstanding the legal bar of thy illegitimacy. 'The king next demanded of him (he being a fool) whether he were capable to inherit any land,' &c.—Life and Death of Will Somers, &c.

9 'He did bewray his practice.' That is, he did betray or reveal his treacherous devices.' So in the second book of Sidney's Arcadia:—'His heart faint and gat a conceit, that with betraying his practice he might obtain pardon.' The quartos read betray.

10 i. e. of some weight, or moment. The folio and quarto B. read prize.

11 That is, not at home, but at some other place.

12 The quartos read, 'good even.' Dawning is used again in Cymbeline, as a substantive, for morning. It is clear from various passages in this scene that the morning is just beginning to dawn.

13 i. e. Lapebury pinfold. 'Lapebury pinfold' may, perhaps, like Lob's pound, be a coined name; but with what allusion does not appear. It is just possible (says Mr. Nares) that it might mean the teeth, as being the Stew. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Stew. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited,¹ hundred-pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lily-liver'd, action-taking knave; a whorson, glass-gazing, superserviceable, finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good-service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deny'st the least syllable of thy addition.²

Stew. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee?

Kent. What a brazen-faced varlet art thou, to deny thou know'st me? Is it two days ago, since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you: Draw, you whorson cunilious barber-monger, draw. [Drawing his sword.]

Stew. Away; I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal! you come with letters against the king; and take vanity³ the puppet's part, against the royalty of her father: Draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado your shanks:—draw, you rascal: come your ways.

Stew. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand; you neat slave,⁴ strike. [Beating him.]

Stew. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter EDMUND, CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Edm. How now? What's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you Goodman boy, if you please; come, I'll flesh you; come on, young master.

Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?

pinfold within the lips. The phrase would then mean, 'If I had you in my teeth.' It remains for some more fortunate inquirer to discover what is really meant.

¹ 'Three-suited knave' might mean, in an age of ostentatious finery like that of Shakespeare, one who had no greater change of raiment than three suits would furnish him with. So in Ben Jonson's Silent Woman:—'Wert a pitiful fellow, and hadst nothing but three suits of apparel.' A one-trunk-inheriting slave may be a term used to describe a fellow, the whole of whose possessions were confined to one coffer, and that too inherited from his father, who was no better provided, or had nothing more to bequeath to his successor in poverty; a poor rogue hereditary, as Timon calls Apemantus. A worsted-stocking knave is another reproach of the same kind. The stockings in England in the reign of Elizabeth were remarkably expensive, and scarce any other kind than silk were worn, even by those who had not above forty shillings a year wages. 'This we learn from Stubbes in his Anatomie of Abuses, 1595. In an old comedy, called The Hog hath Lost his Pearl, by R. Tailor, 1614, it is said:—'Good parts are no more set by, than a good leg in a woollen stocking.' This term of reproach, as well as that of a hundred pound gentleman, occurs in The Phoenix, by Middleton. Action-taking knave is a fellow who, if you beat him, would bring an action for the assault instead of resenting it like a man of courage.

³ An equivocal is here intended, by an allusion to the old dish of eggs in moonshine, which was eggs broken and boiled in sallad oil till the yolks became hard. It is equivalent to the phrases of modern times, 'I'll baste you,' or 'beat you to a mummy.'

⁴ Barber-monger may mean dealer with the lower straddlers; a slur upon the Steward, as taking fees for a recommendation to the business of the family.

⁵ Alluding to the moralities or allegorical shows, in which Vanity, Iniquity, and other vices were personified.

⁶ Neat slave may mean you base cowherd, or it may mean, as Steevens suggests, you finical rascal, you assemblage of foppery and poverty. See Cogswade in Effrloret, Misloudin, Mondinet; by which Sherwood renders a neate fellow.

⁷ To disclaim in, for to disclaim simply, was the Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives;

He dies, that strikes again: What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Corn. What is your difference? speak.

Stew. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestirr'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in thee; a tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir; a stone-cutter, or a painter, could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours at the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Stew. This ancient rufian, sir, whose life I have spar'd,

At suit of his gray beard,—

Kent. Thou whorson zed!⁸ thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted⁹ villain into mortar, and dash the wall of a jakes with him.—Spare my gray beard, you wagtail?

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

You beastly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger has a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords atwain

Which are too intrinsic¹⁰ to unloose: smooth every passion!¹¹

That in the natures of their lords rebels;
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege,¹² affirm, and turn their halcyon¹³ beaks
With every gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.—
A plague upon your epileptic visage!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot.¹⁴ phraseology of the poet's age. See Gifford's Ben Jonson, vol. iii. p. 304.

⁸ Zed is here used as a term of contempt, because it is the last letter in the English alphabet: it is said to be an unnecessary letter, because its place may be supplied by B. Barret omits it in his Alphabet, affirming it to be rather a syllable than a letter. And Mulcaster says 'Z is much harder amongst us, and seldom seen. It is become its lieutenant-general. It is lightlike (i. e. hardly) expressed in English, save in foreign enfranchisements.'

⁹ Unbolted is unsifted; and therefore signifies this coarse villain. Massinger, in his New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act i. Sc. 1, says:—

— I will help your memory,

And tread thee into mortar.

Unbolted mortar is mortar made of unsifted lime; and therefore to break the lumps it is necessary to tread it by men in wooden shoes.

¹⁰ The quarto reads, to intrinsech; the folio, intrinsic. Perhaps intrinsic, for so it should be written, was put by Shakespeare for intrinsech, which he has used in Antony and Cleopatra.

— Come, mortal wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsech

Of life at once untie.

I suspect that the poet meant to write too intrinsic; that is, too intricate, or too much intrammelled. See Florio in v. intrecitaire; or intrinsic for intricated, as we find it in Phillips's World of Words.

¹¹ See Pericles, Act i. Sc. 2.

¹² To renege is to deny. See Antony and Cleopatra, Sc. 1, note 1.

¹³ The bird called the kingfisher, which when dried and hung up by a thread, is supposed to turn his bill to the point from whence the wind blows. So in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, 1633:

— But how now stands the wind?

Into what corner peers my halcyon's bill?

A lylie byrde called the Kings Fisher, being hanged up in the ayre by the neck, his nebbe or byll will be always direct or straight against ye winde.—Book of Notable Things.

¹⁴ In Somersetshire, near Camelot, are many large

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?
 Glo. How fell you out?
 Say that.
 Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
 Than I and such a knave.¹
 Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What's his offence?
 Kent. His countenance likes me not.²
 Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, or his, or hers.
 Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plain;
 I have seen better faces in my time,
 Than stands on any shoulder that I see
 Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow,
 Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
 A saucy roughness; and constrains the garb,
 Quite from his nature.³ He cannot flatter, he t—
 An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth:
 An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.
 These kind of knaves I know, which in this plain-
 ness
 Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
 Than twenty silly ducking observants,
 That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good sooth, in sincere verity,
 Under the allowance of your grand aspect,
 Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
 On flickering Phœbus' front,—

Corn. What mean'st by this?
 Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you dis-commend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer:
 he that beguiled you, in a plain accent, was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to it.⁴

Corn. What was the offence you gave him?
 Kent. I never gave him any:
 It pleas'd the king his master, very late,
 To strike at me, upon his misconstruction:
 When he, conjunct, and flattering his displeasure,
 Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
 And put upon him such a deal of man,
 That worthy'd him, got praises of the king
 For him attempting who was self-subdu'd;
 And, in the fleshment⁵ of this dread exploit,
 Drew on me here again.

Kent. None of these rogues, and cowards,
 But Ajax is their fool.⁶

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks, ho!
 You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart,
 We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
 Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
 On whose employment I was sent to you:
 You shall do almost respect, show too bold malice moors, where are bred great quantities of geese. It was the place where the romances say King Arthur kept his court in the west.

1 Hence Pope's expression:—

'The strong antipathy of good to bad.'

2 I. e. pleases me not.

3 Forces his outside, or his appearance, to something totally different from his natural disposition.'

4 Silly or rather sely, is simple or rustic. Nicely here is with scrupulous nicety, punctilious observance.

5 This expressive word is now only applied to the motion and scintillation of flame. Dr. Johnson says that it means to flutter, which is certainly one of its oldest meanings, it being used in that sense by Chaucer.
 But its application is more properly made to the fluctuating scintillations of flame or light. In The Cuckoo, by Nicols, 1607, we have it applied to the eye:—

'Their soft malkin voice and flickering eye.'

6 'Though I should win you, displeased as you now are, to like me so well as to entreat me to be a knave.'

7 A young soldier is said to flesh his sword the first time he draws blood with it. Fleshment, therefore, is here metaphorically applied to the first act of service, which Kent, in his new capacity, had performed for his master; at the same time, in a sarcastic sense, as though he had esteemed it an heroic exploit to trip a man behind who was actually flouting.

8 I. e. Ajax is a fool to them. 'These rogues and cowards talk in such a boasting strain that, if we were to credit their account of themselves, Ajax would ap-

Against the grace and person of my master,
 Stocking his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks:
 As I've life and honour, there shall he sit till noon.
 Reg. Till noon! till eight, my lord; and all nights too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,
 You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.
 [Stocks brought out.]

Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
 Our sister speaks of:—Come, bring away the stocks.⁹

Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
 His fault is much, and the good king his master
 Will check him for't: your purpose'd low correction
 Is such, as basest and contemptest wretches
 For pilferings and most common trespasses,
 Are punish'd with: the king must take it ill,
 That he, so slightly valu'd in his messenger,
 Should have him thus restrain'd.

Corn. I'll answer that.
 Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,
 To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
 For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—
 [Kent is put in the stocks.]

Come, my good lord; away.

[Exit REGAN and CORNWALL.]
 Glo. I am sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,
 Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
 Will not be rabbi'd, nor stopp'd;¹⁰ I'll entreat for thee.

Kent. 'Pray, do not, sir: I have watch'd, and travell'd hard;
 Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.
 A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:
 Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this; 'twill be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good king, that must approve the common saw!¹¹

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
 To the warm sun!
 Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
 That by thy comfortable beams I may
 Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost sees miracles,
 But misery;—I know 'tis from Cordelia;
 Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
 Of my obscured course; and shall find time
 From this enormous state,—seeking,—to give Losses their remedies:¹²—All weary and o'erwatch'd,

pear a person of no prowess when compared to them.'
 So in King Henry VIII.—

—now this weak
 Was cry'd incomparable, and the ensuing night
 Made it a fool and beggar.'

9 This kind of exhibition was familiar to the ancient stage. In Hick Scorne, which was printed in the reign of Henry VIII., Fly is put into the stocks, and left there until he is freed by Perseverance and Contemplation.
 It should be remembered that formerly in great houses,
 as lately in some colleges, there were moveable stocks for the correction of the servants.

10 A metaphor from bowling.

11 The saw, or proverb alluded to, is in Heywood's Dialogues on Proverbs, b. ii. c. v.:—

'In your running from him to me ye runne
 Out of God's blessing into the worse course.'
 I. e. from good to worse. Kent was thinking of the king being likely to receive a worse reception from Regan than that which he had already received from Goneril.

12 How much has been written about this passage, and how much it has been mistaken! Its evident meaning appears to me to be as follows:—Kent addresses the sun, for whose rising he is impatient, that he may read Cordelia's letter. 'Nothing (says he,) almost sees miracles, but misery: I know this letter which I hold in my hand is from Cordelia; who hath most fortunately been informed of my disgrace and wandering in disguise; and who seeking it, shall find time (I. e. opportunity), out of this enormous (i. e. disordered, unnatural) state of things, to give losses their remedies; to restore her father to his kingdom, herself to his love, and me to his favour.'

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold
This shameful lodging.
Fortune, good night; smile once more; turn thy wheel! [He sleeps.]

SCENE III. A Part of the Heath. Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And, by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No port is free; no place,
That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking. While I may scape,
I will preserve myself: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape,
That ever penury, in contempt of man,
Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with filth;
Blanket my limbs; elf all my hair in knots;¹
And with presented nakedness outface
The winds, and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars,² who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks,³ nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting⁴ villages, sheep-cotes and mills,
Sometime with lunatic bans,⁵ sometime with prayers,
Enforce their charity.—Poor Turligood⁶ poor
Tom!

That's something yet; Edgar, I nothing am. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Before Gloucester's Castle. Enter LEAR, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange, that they should so depart
From home,

And not send back my messengers.

Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before there was no purpose in them
Of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. How!
Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?

1 Hair thus knotted was supposed to be the work of elves and fairies in the night. So in Romeo and Juliet:
—'plait the manes of horses in the night,
And bakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.'

2 Aubrey, in his MS. Remains of Gentleman and Sudimes, Part III. p. 224, b. (MS. Landowne, 226.)
says:—'Before the civil wars, I remember Tom a Bedlam went about begging. They had been such as had been in Bedlam, and come to some degree of sober-ness; and when they were licensed to go out, they had on their left arms an armilla of tunc printed, of about three inches breadth, which was soldered on.'—*H.
Ellis*.

Randle Holme, in his Academy of Arms and Blazon,
b. iii. c. 3, gives the following description of a class of vagabonds feigning themselves mad:—'The Bedlam is in the same garb, with a long staff, and a cow or ox-horn by his side; but his clothing is more fantastick and ridiculous; for being a madman, he is madly decked and dressed all over with rubies, feathers, cuttings of cloth, and what not; to make him seem a madman, or one distracted, when he is no other than a dissem-bling knave.'

In the Bell-Man of London, by Decker, 4th edit. 1640, is another account of one of these characters, under the title of Abraham Man:—'He swears he hath been in Bedlam, and will take frandokely of purpose: you see grimes stuck in sundry places of his naked flesh, especially in his armes, which paine he gladly puts himselfe to, only to make you believe he is out of his wits. He calls himself by the name of Poor Tom, and coming near any body, cries out Poor Tom is a-cold. Of these Abraham-men some be exceeding merry, and doe nothing but sing songs fashioned out of their own braines:
some will dance, others will doe nothing but either laugh or weep: others are dogged, and so sullen both in looke and speech, that spying but a small company in a house they boldly and blindly enter, compelling the servants through feare to give them what they demand.
It is probable, as Steevens remarks, that to sham Abraham, a cant term still in use among sailors and the vulgar, may have this origin.

3 I. e. skewers: the exonymus, or spindle-tree, of which the best skewers are made, is called prick-wood.

4 Peltry. 5 Curses.

6 Turligood, an English corruption of turker, Ital.;

Kent. No, my lord.

Fool. Ha, ha; look! he wears cruel⁷ garters:
Horses are tied by the heads; dogs, and bears, by the neck; monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man is over-hasty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.⁸

Lear. What's he, that hath so much thy place mistook

To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,

Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

Lear. No, no; they would not.

Kent. Yea, they have.

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.¹⁰

Lear. They durst not do't;

They could not, would not do't; 'tis worse than murder,

To do, upon respect, such violent outrage:¹¹
Resolve me, with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose, this usage,
Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home
I did commend your highness' letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place that show'd
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathless, panting forth
From Goneril his mistress, salutations:
Deliver'd letters, spite of intermission,¹²
Which presently they read; on whose contents,
They summon'd up their moiety,¹³ straight took horne;

Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks:

or turkescum, Fr.; both, among other things, signifying a fool or madman. It would perhaps be difficult to decide with certainty whether those words are corruptions of turlupine and turlupin; but at least it seems probable. The turlupine were a fanatical sect, which overran the Continent in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, calling themselves Beghards or Beghines.
Their manners and appearance exhibited the strongest indications of lunacy and distraction; and their popular name, turlupine, was probably derived from the wool-lich houplings they made in their fits of religious raving. Gougeard thus describes them:—'Turlupin cynicorum sectam succincentes, de nuditate pudendum, et publico cotu.' It has not been remarked that Cotgrave interprets 'Mes Turckescum, My Fillock, my pretty knave.'

7 See note 12, Act I. Sc. 5. p. 402, ante.

8 A quibble on crusell, i. e. crusell. So in The Two Angry Women of Abingdon:—

—'I'll warrant you, he'll have
His crusell garters cross about the knee.'

9 The old word for stockings.

10 This dialogue being taken partly from the folle and partly from the quarto, is left without any metrical division, as it was not probably all intended to be preserved.

11 'To do, upon respect, such violent outrage,' I think, means 'to do such violent outrage, deliberately, or upon consideration.' Respect is frequently used for consideration by Shakespeare. Cordelia says, in the first scene:—

'Since that respects of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.'

And in Hamlet:—

—'There's the respect
That makes calumny of so long life.'

I cannot think that respect here means a respected person, as Johnson supposed; or that it is intended for a personification, as Malone asserts.

12 I. e. 'spite of leaving me unanswered for a time.'—
Goneril's messenger delivered letters, which they read notwithstanding Lear's messenger was yet kneeling unanswered.

13 Meiny, signifying a family household, or retinue of servants, is certainly from the French meine, or as it was anciently written, meenie; which word is regarded by Du Cange as equivalent with meoerie or maisonie, from maison; in modern French, menage. It does not appear that the Saxons used many for a family or household.

And meeting here the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceiv'd, had poison'd mine
(Being the very fellow that of late
Display'd so saucily against your highness,¹
Having more man than wit about me, draw;²
He rais'd the house with loud and coward cries:
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which here it suffers.

Foot. Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.³

Fathers, that wear rage,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers, that bear bags,
Shall see their children kind.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor.—
But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours⁴ for thy daughters, as thou canst tell in a year.

Lear. O, how this mother⁵ swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio! down, thou climbing sorrow,
Thy element's below!—Where is this daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not;
Stay here. [Exit.]

Gent. Made you no more offence than what you speak of?

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?
Foot. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserved it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Foot. We'll set thee to school to an ant,⁶ to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter. All that follow their noses are led by their eyes, but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's stinking.⁷ Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.⁸

That sir, which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
But I will tarry, the fool will stay,
And let the wise man fly:
The knave turns fool, that runs away;
The fool no knave, perdy.

1 The personal pronoun, which is found in the preceding line, is understood before the word having, or before draw. The same license is taken by Shakspeare in other places.

2 'If this be their behaviour, the king's troubles are not yet at an end.' This speech is omitted in the quartos.

3 A quibble between dolours and dollars.

4 Lear affects to pass off the swelling of his heart, ready to burst with grief and indignation, for the disease called the mother, or hysterica passio, which, in the poet's time, was not thought peculiar to women only.—It is probable that Shakspeare had this suggested to him by a passage in Harriot's Declaration of Popish Impostures, which he may have consulted in order to furnish out his character of Tom of Bedlam with demoniacal gibberish. 'Ma. Maynie had a spile of the Aisterica passio, as it seems, from his youth, he himself termes it the mother.' It seems the priests persuaded him it was from the possession of the devil. 'The disease I spake of was a spile of the mother, wherewith I had been troubled before my going into Fraunce; whether I do rightly term it the mother or no, I knowe not. A Scottish Doctor of Physic, then in Paris, called it, as I remember, virginitum capitis. It riseth of a winde in the bottome of the belly, and proceeding with a great swelling, causeth a very painful collicke in the stomach, and an extraordinary giddines in the head.'

5 'Go to the ant, thou sluggard, (says Solomon,) learn her ways, and be wise; which having no guile, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in harvest.' If, says the fool, you had been schooled by the ant, you would have known that the king's train, like that sagacious insect, prefer the summer of prosperity to the colder season of adversity, from which no profit can be derived; and desert

Kent. Where learn'd you this, fool?

Foot. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-enter LEAR, with GLOSTER.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They are sick? they are weary?

They have travell'd hard to-night? Mere fetches;
The images of revolt and flying off!
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,
You know the fiery quality of the duke;
How unremoveable and fix'd he is
In his own course.

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!—
Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloster, Gloster,
I'd speak with the duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.
Lear. Inform'd them! Dost thou understand me,
man?

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall; the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands her service:

Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and blood!—

Fiery? the fiery duke?—Tell the hot duke, that—
No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well:
Infirmary doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound; we are not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body: I'll forbear;
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly st
For the sound man. Death on my state! wherefore

[Looking on KENT]
Should he sit here? This act persuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her
Is practice only. Give me my servant forth:
Go, tell the duke and his wife, I'd speak with them,
Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
'Till it cry—Sleep to death!

Glo. I'd have all well betwixt you. [Exit.]

Lear. O, me, my heart, my rising heart!—but,
down.

Foot. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney⁹ did to the eels, when she put them i' the paste alive; she rapp'd 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cry'd, him whose 'mellow-hangings' have been all shaken down, and who by 'one winter's brush' has been left

'open and bare for every storm that blows.'

6 All men, but blind men, though they follow their noses, are led by their eyes; and this class of mankind, seeing the king ruined, have all deserted him: with respect to the blind, who have nothing but their noses to guide them, they also fly equally from a king whose fortunes are declining; for of the noses of blind men there is not one in twenty but can smell him who, being 'muddy'd in fortune's mood, smells somewhat strong of her displeasure.' You need not therefore be surprised at Lear's coming with so small a train.

7 'One cannot too much commend the caution which our moral poet uses on all occasions to prevent his sentiment from being perversely taken. So here, having given an ironical precept in commendation of perfidy and base desertion of the unfortunate, for fear it should be understood seriously, though delivered by his buffoon or jester, he has the precaution to add this beautiful corrective, full of fine sense:—"I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it."'
Warburton.

8 The meaning of this passage seems to be, 'I'll beat the drum till it cries out—Let them awake no more; let their present sleep be their last.' Somewhat similar occurs in Troilus and Cressida—

'—the death tokens of it

Cry no recovery.'

Mason would read, 'death to sleep,' instead of 'sleep to death.'

9 Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616, under the word Cockney, says, 'It is sometimes taken for a child that is tenderly or wantonly brought up; or for one that has been brought up in some great town, and knows nothing of the country fashion. It is used also for a Londoner, or one born in or near the city, (as we say,) within the sound of Bow bell.' The etymology, (says Mr. Narus,)

Down, wanton, down : 'Twas her brother, that in pure kindness to his horse, butter'd his hay.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

[KENT is set at liberty.]

Reg. I am glad to see your highness.

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason

I have to think so: If thou should'st not be glad, I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adultery.—O, are you free?

[To KENT.]

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan, Thy sister's naught: O, Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture here,—

[Points to his heart.]

I can scarce speak to thee: thou't not believe, Of how deprav'd a quality—O, Regan!

Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience; I have hope, You less know how to value her desert, Than she to scant her duty.¹

Lear. Say, how is that?

Reg. I cannot think, my sister in the least Would fail her obligation: If, sir, perchance, She have restrain'd the riots of your followers, 'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end, As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir, you are old; Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine: you should be rul'd, and led By some discretion, that discerns your state Better than you yourself: Therefore, I pray you, That to our sister you do make return; Say, you have wrong'd her, sir.²

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?

Do you but mark how this becomes the house:³

Dear daughter, I confess that I am old;
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg, [Kneeling.
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks:

Return you to my sister.

Lear. Never, Regan:

She hath abated me of half my train;

seems most probable, which derives it from cookery.—Le pays de cognac, or cognacine, in old French, means a country of good cheer. Cognac, in Italian, has the same meaning. Both might be derived from cognacine. This famous country, if it could be found, is described as a region 'where the hills were made of sugar-candy, and the leaves ran down the hills, crying Come eat me.' Some lines in Camden's Remaines seem to make cokney a name for London as well as its inhabitants. This Lubberland, as Florio calls it, seems to have been proverbial for the simplicity or gullibility of its inhabitants. A cokney and a minny-hammer, or simpleton, were convertible terms. Thus Chaucer, in the Reeve's Tale—

'I shall be holden a daffe or a cokeney.'

It may be observed that cokney is only a diminutive of cock; a wanton child was so called as a less circumlocutory way of saying, my 'little cock,' or my bra-cock. Decker, in his News from Hell, 1568, says, 'Tis not our fault; but our mothers, our cokering mothers, who for their labour made us to be called cokneys.' In the passages cited from the Tournament of Tottenham, and Heywood, it literally means a little cock. The reader will find a curious article on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. II. p. 151.

1 It is clear that the intended meaning of this passage is as Stevens observes: 'You less know how to value her desert, than she (knows) to scant her duty, i. e. to be wanting in it.' It is somewhat inaccurately expressed, Shakespeare having, as on some other occasions, perplexed himself by the word less. But all the verbiage of Malone was not necessary to lay this open.

2 'Say,' &c. This line and the following speech is omitted in the quartos.

3 I. e. the order of families, duties of relation. So Sir Thomas Smith, in his Commonwealth of England, 1601:—'The house I call here, the man, the woman, their children, their servants, bond and free.'

Look'd black upon me: struck me with her tongue, Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:— All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bones, You taking airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fie, fie, fie!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames

Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty, You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun, To fall⁴ and blast her pride!

Reg. O, the blest gods!

So will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse;

Thy tender-hefted⁵ nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness; her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort, and not burn: 'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,

To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,⁶

And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt

Against my coming in: thou better know'st

The offices of nature, bond of childhood,

Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;

Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,

Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.

[Trumpets within.]

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks?

Corn. What trumpet's that?

Enter Steward.

Reg. I know't, my sister's;⁷ this approves her letter,

That she would soon be here.—Is your lady come?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows:—

Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your grace?

Lear. Who stock'd my servant? Regan, I have good hope

Thou didst not know of't.—Who comes here? O,

Heavens,

Enter GONERIL.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,⁸ Make it your cause: send down, and take my part!

4 Unnecessary is here used in the sense of necessary; in want of necessities and unable to procure them. Perhaps this is also the meaning of the word in The Old Law, by Massinger:—

'—Your laws extend not to desert, But to unnecessary years, and, my lord, His are not such.'

5 Fall seems here to be used as an active verb, signifying to humble or pull down. 'Ye fen-suck'd fogs, drawn from the earth by the powerful action of the sun, infect her beauty, so as to fall and blast, i. e. humble and destroy her pride.'

6 Tender-hefted may mean moved, or heaving with tenderness. The quartos read tender-hefted, which may be right, and signify giving tender heste or commands. Miranda says, in The Tempest:—

'O my father, I have broke your hest to say so.'

7 A size is a portion or allotment of food. The word and its origin are explained in Minshew's Guide to Tongues, 1617. The term sizer is still used at Cambridge for one of the lowest rank of students, living on a stated allowance.

8 Thus in Othello:—

'The Moor,—I know his trumpet.'

It should seem therefore that the approach of great personages was announced by some distinguishing note or tune appropriately used by their own trumpeters.—Cornwall knows not the present sound; but to Regan, who had often heard her sister's trumpet, the first flourish of it was as familiar as was that of the Moor to the ears of Iago.

9 To allow is to approve, in old phraseology. Thus in Psalm xl. ver. 6:—'The Lord alloweth the righteous'

10 '—hoc oro, munus concedere parenti, Si tua maturis signentur tempora canis, Et sis ipse parens.' Statius Theb. x. 705

Art not ashamed to look upon this beard?—

O, Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand? (To GOWERIL.)

Gow. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Lear. O, sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?—How came my man? the stocks?

Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders
Deserv'd much less advancement.¹

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.²
If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come them to me;
I am now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd?
No, rather I adjure all roofs, and choose
To wage³ against the enmity of the air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—
Necessity's sharp pinch!⁴—Return with her?
Why, the hot-blooded France, that doerless took Our youngest born, I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and, squirrel-like, pension beg
To keep base life afoot:—Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter⁵
To this detested groom. [Looking on the Steward.]

Gow. At your choice, sir.
Lear. I prythee, daughter, do not make me mad;
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;
Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine; and thou art a boil,
A plague-sore, an embossed⁶ carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. But I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:
Mend, when thou canst; be better at thy leisure:
I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I, and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so, sir;
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome: Give ear, sir, to my sister;
For those that mangle reason with your passion,
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.

Lear. Is this well spoken, now?

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir; What, fifty followers?
Is it not well? What should you need of more?
Yea, or so many? sith that both charge and danger Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house,

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.

Gow. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chance'd to slack you,

We could control them: If you will come to me
(For now I spy a danger,) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty; to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it
Lear. Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd

With such a number; What, must I come to you
With five and twenty, Regan? said you so?

Reg. And speak it again, my lord: no more with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well favour'd,

When others are more wicked; not being the worst,
Stands in some rank of praise:—I'll go with thee;

[To GOWERIL.]

Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gow. Hear me, my lord;
What need you five and twenty, ten, or five—
To follow in a house, where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous:
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life is cheap⁷ as beast's: thou art a lady;
If only to go warm were gorgeous,
Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,
Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,—

You heavens give me that patience, patience I need!
You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me not with noble anger!
O, let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural hags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things,—
What they are, yet I know not;⁸ but they shall be
The terrors of the earth. You think, I'll weep;
No, I'll not weep:—
I have full cause of weeping; but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,⁹
Or ere I'll weep:—O, fool, I shall go mad!

[Exit LEAR, GLOSTER, KENT, and Fool.]

Corn. Let us withdraw, 'twill be a storm.

[Storm heard at a distance. This house]

Reg. Is little; the old man and his people cannot Be well bestow'd.

Gow. 'Tis his own blame hath put Himself from rest, and must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular, I'll receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gow. So am I purpos'd.
Where is my lord of Gloster?

Perhaps sumpter originally meant the pannier or basket which the sumpter-horse carried. Thus in Cupid's

'And thy base issue shall carry sumpters.'

We hear also of sumpter-cloak, sumpter-saddles, &c.

⁶ Embossed here means exciting, prothuberant.

⁷ I.e. to be not the worst deserves some praise.

⁸ So cheap here means as little worth. See Baro

Alvaric, 1578, C. 268.

⁹ '—magnum est quidquidque paravi,

Quid ek adhuc dubito.' Ovid. Met. lib. vi

'—hand quid ek acio,

Bed grande quiddam est.' Seneca. Thyestes

Let such as are unwilling to allow that copies of manus must occasionally use the same thoughts and expressions, remember that of both these authors there were early translations. Goiding thus renders the passage from Ovid:—

'The thing that I do purpose on is great, while 'er it is

I know not what it may be yet.'

¹⁰ Flashes anciently signified fragments, as well as mere cracks. Among the Saxons it certainly had that meaning. The word, as Bailey observes, was 'especially applied to the breaking off shivers or thin pieces from precious stones.'

¹ By less advancement Cornwall means that Kent's disorders had entitled him to a post of even less honour than the stocks, a still worse or more disgraceful situation.

² The meaning is, since you are weak, be content to think yourself weak.

³ See p. 305, note 7, ante.

⁴ The words, 'necessity's sharp pinch' appear to be the reflection of Lear on the wretched sort of existence he had described in the preceding lines.

⁵ Sumpter is generally united with horse or mule, to signify one that carried provisions or other necessaries; from sumptus, Lat. In the present instance horse seems to be understood, as it appears to be in the following passage from Beaumont and Fletcher's Two Noble Gentlemen—

'I would have had you furnish'd in such pomp
As never duke of Burgundy was furnish'd;
You should have had a sumpter, though 't had cost me
The laying out myself.'

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth :—he is return'd.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn.

Glo. Whither is he going?
He calls to horse; but will I know not whither.

Corn. 'Tis best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds

Do sorely ruffle;¹ for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Rag.

O, sir, to wilful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters: Shut up your doors;
He is attended with a desperate train:
And what they may incense² him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear.

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord: 'tis a wild
night;

My Regan counsels well; come out o' the storm.
[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Heath. A Storm is heard, with Thunder and Lightning. Enter KENT, and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's here, beside foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most un-quietly.

Kent. I know you; Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element:
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,³
That things might change, or cease:⁴ tears his white hair;

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:
Strives in his little world of man to out-scorn⁵
The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain.
This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear⁶ would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unboasted he runs,
And bids what will take all.⁷

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to outjest
His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;

And dare upon the warrant of my art,⁸

1 Thus the folio. The quartos read, 'Do sorely russel,' i. e. rusle. But ruffle is most probably the true reading. See the first note on Macbeth.

2 To incense is here, as in other places, to incite.

3 The main seems to signify here the main land, the continent. The main is again used in this sense in Hamlet:—

'Goes it against the main of Poland, sir?'

4 The first folio ends this speech at 'change, or cease,' and begins again at Kent's speech, 'But who is with him?'

5 Stevens thinks that we should read, 'out-storm.'
The error of printing scorn for storm occurs in the old copies of Trolius and Cressida, and might easily happen from the similarity of the words in old MSS.

6 That is, a bear whose dugs are drawn dry by its young. Shakespeare has the same image in As You Like It:—

'A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching—'

Again, ibidem:—

'Food to the suck'd and hungry lioness.'

7 So in Antony and Cleopatra, Enobarbus says:—

'I'll strike, and cry, Take all.'

8 I. e. on the strength of that art or skill which teaches us 'to find the mind's construction in the face.' The folio reads:—

'—upon the warrant of my note,' which Dr. Johnson explains, 'my observation of your character.'

9 This and seven following lines are not in the quar-
tos. The lines in crotchets lower down, from 'But, true it is,' &c. to the end of the speech, are not in the folio.

Commend a dear thing to you. There is division,
Although as yet the face of it be cover'd
With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and Cornwall;
Who have (as who have not, that their great stars⁹ Throw'd and set high?) servants, who seem no less;
Which are to France the spies and speculations
Intelligent of our state; what hath been seen,
Either in snuffs and packings¹⁰ of the dukes;
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king; or something deeper,
Whereof, perchance, these are but furnishings:¹¹—
[But, true it is, from France there comes a power
Into this scatter'd kingdom; who already
Wise in our negligence, have secret feet¹²
In some of our best ports, and are at point
To show their open banner.—Now to you:
If on my credit you dare build so far
To make your speed to Dover, you shall find
Some that will thank you, making just report
Of how unnatural and boundand sorrow
The king hath cause to plain.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;
And from some knowledge and assurance, offer
This office to you.]

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent.

No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more Than my out wall, open this purse, and take
What it contains: If you shall see Cordelia
(As fear not but you shall,) show her this ring.
And she will tell you who your fellow¹³ is
That yet you do not know. Fix on this storm
I will go seek the king.

Gent. Give me your hand: have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect, more than all yet:
That, when we have found the king, (in which your pain

That way; I'll this;) he that first lights on him,
Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II. Another Part of the Heath. Storm continues. Enter LEAR and Fool.

Lear. Blow, wind, and crack your cheeks!¹⁴ rage!
blow!

You cataracts, and hurricanes, spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

You sulphurous and thought-executing¹⁵ fires,
Vaunt-couriers¹⁶ to oak-clearing thunderbolts,
Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once,¹⁷
'That make ingrateful man!

So that if the speech be read with omission of the former, it will stand according to the first edition; and if the former lines are read, and the latter omitted, it will then stand according to the second. The second edition is generally best, and was probably nearest to Shak-speare's last copy: but in this speech the first is preferable; for in the folio the messenger is sent, he knows not why, he knows not whither.

10 Snuffs are dialikes, and packings underhand contrivances.

11 A furnish anciently signified a sample. 'To lend the world a furnish of wit, she lays her own out to pawn.'—Green's Groatsworth of Wit.

12 I. e. secret footing. 13 Companion.

14 The poet was here thinking of the common representation of the winds in many books of his time. We find the same allusion in Trolius and Cressida.

15 Thought-executing, 'doing execution with celerity equal to thought.'

16 Vaunt-couriers, Fr. The phrase occurs in other writ-ters of Shakespeare's time. It originally meant the foremost scouts of an army. In The Tempest 'Jove's lightnings' are termed more familiarly,

'—the precursors

O' the dreadful thunder-claps.'

17 There is a parallel passage in the Winter's Tale:—
'Let Nature crush the sides o' the earth together,
And mar the seeds within.'

So again in Macbeth:—

'—and the sum

Of nature's germens tumble all together.'

For the force of the word spill, see Genesis, xxxviii 9

Fool. O, nuncie, court holy-water¹ in a dry house is better than this rain-water out o' door. Good nuncie, in, and ask thy daughter's blessing! Here's a night pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit fire! spout rain! Ner rain, wind, thunder, fire are my daughters; I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness, I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children, You owe me no subscription;² why, then let fall Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave, A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:— But yet I call you servile ministers, That have with two pernicious daughters join'd Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put his head in has a good head-piece.

The cod-piece that will house,

Before the head has any,

The head and he shall lose;—

So beggars marry money.

The man that makes his toe

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry wo,

And turn his sleep to wake.

—For there was never yet fair woman, but she made mouths in a glass.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience, I'll say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, here's grace, and a cod-piece;³ that's a wise man, and a fool.

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love night,

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies Gallow⁴ the very wanderers of the dark, And make them keep their caves: Since I was man, Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder, Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry The affliction, nor the fear.

Lear. Let the great gods, That keep this dreadful pother⁵ o'er our heads, Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch, That hast within thee undivulged crimes, Unwhipp'd of justice: Hide thee, thou bloody hand; Thou perjur'd, and thou simular⁶ man of virtue That art incestuous: Cautif, to pieces shake, That under covert and convenient seeming, Hast practis'd on man's life!—Close pent-up guilts, Rive your concealing continents,⁷ and cry These dreadful summoners grace.⁸ I am a man, More sinn'd against, than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed! Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel; Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest; Repose you there: while I to this hard house, (More hard than is the stone whereof 'tis rais'd; Which even but now, demanding after you, Denied me to come in,) return, and force Their scantied courtesy.

Lear. My wits begin to turn,— Come on, my boy: How dost, my boy? Art cold? I am cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow? The art of our necessities is strange, That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel.

Poor fool and knave, I have one part in my heart That's sorry yet for thee.⁹

Fool. He that has a little tiny wit—

With a heigh, ho, the wind and the rain,—

Must make content with his fortunes fill;

For the rain it raineth every day.¹⁰

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt Lear and Kent]

Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtesan.¹¹

—I'll speak a prophecy ere I go:

When priests are more in word than matter;

When brewers mar their malt with water;

When nobles are their tailor's tutors;

No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors;

When every case in law is right;

No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;

When slanders do not live in tongues;

Nor cutpurses come not to throngs;

When usurers tell their gold 't the field;

And bawds and whores do churches build:—

Then shall the realm of Albion

Come to great confusion.¹²

Then comes the time, who lives to see't,

That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in Gloucester's Castle. Enter Gloucester and Edmund.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this unnatural dealing: When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charged me, on pain of their perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage, and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing: There is division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night;—'tis dangerous to be spoken:—I have locked the letter in my chest: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged at home; there is part of a power already footed:¹³ we must incline to the king. I will seek him, and privily relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: If he ask for me, I am ill and gone to bed. If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is some strange thing toward, Edmund: pray you, be careful. [Exit.]

Edm. This courtesy, forbid thee, shall the duke instantly know; and of that letter too:—

1 Court holy-water is fair words and flattering speeches. 'Gonfere alcuno, (says Florio,) to soothe or flatter one, to set one agogge, or with fair words bring him into a fool's paradise; to fill one with hopes, or court holle-water.' It appears to have been borrowed from the French, who have their Eau benite de la cour in the same sense.

2 i. e. submission, obedience.

3 Meaning the king and himself. The king's grace was the usual expression in Shakespeare's time: perhaps the latter phrase alludes to the saying of a contemporary wit, that there is no discretion below the girdle.

4 To gallow, is to frighten, to scare.

5 Thus the folio and one of the quartos; the other quartos reads thundering.

6 i. e. counterfeit; from simulo, Lat.

7 '—My practices so prevail'd, That I return'd with simular proof enough To make the noble Learians mad.'

Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. 5.

8 Content for that which contains or encloses. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'Heart, once be stronger than thy continent.'

The quartos read,—concealed centers.

8 Summoners are officers that summon offenders before a proper tribunal. See Chaucer's Sompson's Tale, v. 685–670. Thus in Howard's Defensives against the Poison of supposed Prophecies, 1661:— 'They seem to brag most of the strange events which follow for the most part after blazing stars, as if they were the summoners of God, to call princes to the seat of judgment.'

9 The quartos read, 'That sorrow yet for thee.'

10 Part of the Clown's song at the end of Twelfth Night.

11 This speech is not in the quartos.

12 These lines are taken from what is commonly called Chaucer's Prophecy; but which is much older than his time in its original form. It is thus quoted by Puttenham, in his Art of Poetry, 1609:—

'When faith fails in priests saws,
And lords hosts are bolden for laws
And robbery is tane for purchase,
And lerebery for solace,
Then shall the realm of Albion
Be brought to great confusion.'

See the Works of Chaucer, in Whittingham's ediv. &c. v. p. 179.

13 The quartos read, landed.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me :—
That which my father loses ; no less than all :
The younger rises, when the old doth fall. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Part of the Heath, with a Hovel.
Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord ; good my lord,
enter :

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. [Storm still.]

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart ?

Kent. I'd rather break mine own : Good my lord,
enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin : so 'tis to thee ;
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt.¹ Thou'dst shun a bear :
But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,

The body's delicate : the tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there.—Fili'ial ingratitude !
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand,
For lifting food to't ?—But I will punish home :—
No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
To shut me out !—Pour on ; I will endure :—
In such a night as this ! O, Regan, Goneril !—
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave you all—
O, that way madness lies ; let me shun that ;
No more of that,—

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. 'Pr'ythee, go in thyself ; seek thine own ease ;

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in :
In, boys : go first.—[To the Fool.] You houseless poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.—
[Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness,² defend you
From seasons such as these ? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this ; Take physic, pomp ;

¹ Stevens thought that Lear does not address this question to Kent, but to his own bosom ; and would point the passage thus :—

'—Wilt break, my heart ?'

'Taking the words of Lear by themselves (says Mr. Pyc), the sense and punctuation proposed by Stevens is very judicious ; but is confuted by what Kent answers, who must know how Lear spoke it ; and there seems no sort of reason why, as is suggested, he should affect to misunderstand him. Nothing is more natural than for a person absorbed in the contemplation of his own misery, to answer offers of assistance that interrupt him, with petulance.'

² That of two concomitant pains, the greater obscures (to relieve the less, is an aphorism of Hippocrates. See Disquisitiones Metaphysical and Literary, by F. Sayers, [M.D. 1793, p. 68.]

³ He lesser pangs can bear who hath endur'd the chief.
Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

⁴ This line is omitted in the quartos.

⁵ This and the next line are only in the folio. They are very judiciously intended to represent that humility, or tenderness, or neglect of forms which affliction forces on the mind.

⁶ Loop'd and window'd is full of holes and apertures : the allusion is to loop-holes, such as are found in ancient castles, and designed for the admission of light, where windows would have been incommodious.

⁷ A kindred thought occurs in Pericles :—

'O, let those cities that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
Will o'er some high windy city hang his poison
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.'

⁸ This speech of Edgar's is omitted in the quartos.—He gives the sign used by those who are sounding the depth at sea.

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel ;
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.⁹

Edg. [Within.] Fathom and half, fathom and half ! Poor Tom !

[The Fool runs out from the Hovel.]

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit.
Help me, help me !

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there ?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit ; he says his name's poor
Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw ?

Come forth.

Enter EDGAR, disguised as a Madman.

Edg. Away ! the foul fiend follows me :—
Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.—
Humph ! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.¹⁰

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daughters ?
And art thou come to this ?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom ? whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, over bog and quagmire,¹¹ that hath laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his pew ; set ratsbane by his porridge ; made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inched bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor :—Bless thy five wits !¹²
Tom's a-cold.—O, do de, do de, do de.—Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking !¹³ Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes :
There could I have him now,—and there,—and there, and there again, and there. [Storm continues.]

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass ?—

Could'st thou save nothing ? Did'st thou give them
all ?

Fool. Nay, he reserved a blanket, else we had been all ashamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air

Hang fated o'er men's faults,¹⁴ light on thy daughters !

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor ! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters.—

Is it the fashion that discarded fathers

Should have thus little mercy on their flesh ?

Judicious punishment ! 'twas this flesh begot

Those pelican daughters.¹⁵

⁸ So in the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew, Sly says, 'Go to thy cold bed and warm thee ;' which is supposed to be in ridicule of The Spanish Tragedy, or some play equally absurd. The word cold is omitted in the folio.

⁹ Alluding to the Ignis fatuus, supposed to be lights kindled by mischievous beings to lead travellers into destruction. He afterwards recounts the temptations by which he was prompted to suicide ; the opportunities of destroying himself, which often occurred to him in his melancholy moods. Infernal spirits are always represented as urging the wretched to self-destruction. So in Dr. Faustus, 1604 :—

'Swords, poisons, halters, and envenom'd steel,

Are laid before me to despatch myself.'

Shakespeare found this charge against the fiend in Harnet's Declaration, 1603, before cited.

¹⁰ It has been before observed, that the wits seem to have been reckoned five by analogy to the five senses. They were sometimes confounded by old writers, as in the instance cited by Percy and Steevens ; Shakespeare, however, in his 141st Sonnet, considers them as distinct.

¹¹ But my five wits nor my five senses can

Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee.'

¹² To take is to blast, or strike with malignant influence. See a former passage :—

'—strike her young bones,

Ye taking airs, with lameness.'

¹³ So in Timon of Athens :—

'Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Will o'er some high windy city hang his poison

In the sick air.'

¹⁴ The young pelican is fabled to suck the mother's blood. The allusions to this fable are very numerous in old writers.

Edg. Pillicock¹ sat on pillicock's-hill ; —
Hailoo, hailoo, loo, loo !

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen.

Edg. Take heed o' the foul fiend : Obey thy parents ; keep thy word justly ; swear not ; commit not with man's sworn spouse ; set not thy sweet-heart on proud array ; Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been ?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind ; that curled my hair ;² wore gloves in my cap ;³ served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her ; swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven : one, that slept in the contriving of lust, and waked to do it : Wine loved I deeply ; dice dearly ; and in woman, out-paramoured the Turk : False of heart, light of ear,⁴ bloody of hand ; Hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books,⁵ and defy the foul fiend.—Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind : Says suum, mun, ha no nonny, dorphin my boy, my boy, sessa : let him trot by.⁶

[Storm still continues.]

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this ? Consider him well : Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume : —
Ha ! here's three of us are sophisticated ! —Thou

¹ It should be observed that Killico is one of the devils mentioned in Harnett's book. The inquisitive reader may find a further explanation of this word in a note to the translation of Rabelais, edit. 1756, vol. i. p. 194. In Minshew's Dictionary, art. 9299 ; and Chalmers's Works of Sir David Lindsay, Glossary, v. villak.

² Then Ma. Mainy, by the indignation of the first of the seven, [spirits,] began to set his hands unto his side, curled his hair, and used such gestures as Ma. Edmunds (the exorcist) presently affirmed that that spirit was Pride. Herewith he began to curse and banne, saying, What a poxe do I here ? I will say no longer among a company of rascal priests, but go to the court, and brave it amongst my fellows, the noblemen there assembled. —“ Shortly after they [the seven spirits] were all cast forth, and in such manner as Ma. Edmunds directed them, which was, that every devil should depart in some certain form, representing either a beast or some other creature that had the resemblance of that sinne whereof he was the chief author : whereupon the spirit of Pride departed in the form of a peacock ; the spirit of Sloth in the likeness of an ass ; the spirit of Envy in the similitude of a dog ; the spirit of Gultery in the form of a wolfe ; and the other devils had also in their departure their particular likenesses agreeable to their natures.” —Harnett's Declaration, &c. 1603. Before each sin was cast out, Mainy, by gestures acted that particular sin—curling his hair, to show pride, &c. &c.

³ It was anciently the custom to wear gloves in the hat on three distinct occasions, viz. as the favour of a mistress, the memorial of a friend, and as a mark to be challenged by an enemy. Prince Henry boasts that he will pluck a glove from the commonest creature and wear it in his helmet. And Tuoca says to Sir Quintilian, in Decker's Satiricon : —“ Thou shalt wear her glove in thy worshipful hat, like to a leather brooch.” And Pandora in Lily's Woman in the Moon, 1597 : —

— he that first presents me with his head
Shall wear my glove in favour of the dead.

Portia, in her assumed character, asks Bassanio for his gloves, which she says she will wear for his sake ; and King Henry V. gives the presended glove of Alençon to Fluellen, which afterwards occasions his quarrel with the English soldier.

⁴ Credulous of evil, ready to receive malicious reports.

⁵ When spendthrifts, &c. resorted to usurers or tradesmen for the purpose of raising money by means of shop goods, or broken paper commodities, they usually entered their promissory notes, or other similar obligations, in books kept for that purpose. In Lodge's Looking-Glasse for England, 1666, &c. a usurer says to a gentleman, “ I have thy hand set to my book, that thou receivedst forty pounds of me in monie.” To which art the thing itself : —unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as these art.—Off, off, you lendings : —Come ; unbutton here.”

[Tearing off his Clothes.]

Fool. “Py'thée, nuncle, be contented ; this is a naughty⁸ night to swim in.—Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart ; a small spark, all the rest of his body cold.—Look, here comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet :⁹ he begins at curfew, and walks till the first cock ; he gives the web and the pin,¹⁰ squints the eye, and makes the hare-lip ; maldews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world ;¹¹

He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold ;

Bid her alight,

And her troth plight,

And, Avoine thee, witch, avoine thee !¹²

Kent. How fares your grace ?

Enter GLOSTER, with a Torch.

Lear. What's he ?

Kent. Who's there ? What is't you seek ?

Glo. What are you there ? Your names ?

Edg. Poor Tom ; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water ; that in the fury of the heart, when the foul fiend rages, eats cow-dung for sallies ; swallows the old the other answers, “ It was your device to colour the statue, but your conscience knows what I had.”

“ If I but write my name in mercers' books,

I am as sure to have at six months end

A rascal at my elbow with his mace,” &c.

All Fools, by Chapman, 1606.

⁶ “Dolphin my boy, my boy,

Cease, let him trot by ;

It seemeth not that such a foe

From me or you would fly.”

This is a stanza from a very old ballad, written on some battle fought in France ; during which the king, unwilling to put the suspected valour of his son the Dauphin to the trial, therefore, as different champions cross the field, the king always discovers some objection to his attacking each of them, and repeats the two first lines as every fresh personage is introduced ; and at last assists in propping up a dead body against a tree for him to try his manhood upon. Steevens had this account from an old gentleman, who was only able to report part of the ballad. In Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, Cokes cries out, “God's my life ! He shall be Dauphin, my boy !” “Hey nonny, nonny” is merely the burthen of another ballad.

⁷ The words unbutton here, are only in the folio. The quartos read, Come on, be true.

⁹ The name of this fiend, though so grotesque, was not invented by Shakespeare, but by those who wished to impose upon their hearers the belief of his actual existence : this, and most of the fiends mentioned by Edgar, being to be found in Bishop Harnett's book, among those which the Jesuits, about the time of the Spanish invasion, pretended to cast out, for the purpose of making converts. The principal scene of this farce was laid in the family of Mr. Edmund Peckham, a Catholic. Harnett published his account of the detection of the imposture, by order of the privy council. “Frateretto, Flibbertigibbet, Hobberdience, Tocsotto, were four devils of the round or morrice.—These four had forty assistants under them, as themselves doe confesse. Flebergibbe is used by Latimer for a scynophant. And Coggrave explains Coquette by a Flebergibbet or Tidill.”

It was an old tradition that spirits were relieved from the confinement in which they were held during the day, at the time of curfew, that is, at the close of the day, and were permitted to wander at large till the first cock-crowing. Hence, in The Tempest, they are said to “rejoice to hear the solemn curfew.”

¹¹ About St. Withold we have no certainty. This adventure is not found in the common legends of St. Fides Lie, whom Mr. Tyrwhitt thought was meant.

¹² See Macbeth.

rat, and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipped from tything to tything, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned; who hath had three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear,—

*But mice and rats, and such small deer,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.¹*

Beware my follower: Peace, Smolkin;² peace, thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman; Mudo he's call'd, and Mahu.³

Glo. Our flesh, and blood, my lord, is grown so vile, That it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glo. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffer To obey in all your daughters' hard commands: Though their injunction be to bar my doors, And let this tyrannous night take hold upon you, Yet have I ventur'd to come to seek you out, And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher:—What is the cause of thunder?

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; Go into the house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Theban:

What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go, my lord, His wits begin to unsettle.⁴

Glo. Canst thou blame him?

Kent.—Ah, that good

He said it would be thus:—Poor barmish'd man!—Thou say'st, the king grows mad; I'll tell thee, friend,

I am almost mad myself; I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life, But lately, very late; I lov'd him, friend,—No father his son dearer: true to tell thee,

[Storm continues.]

The grief hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this! I do beseech your grace,—

Lear. O, cry you mercy,

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, to the hovel; keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

1 In the metrical Romance of Sir Bevis, who was confined seven years in a dungeon, it is said that—Rattes and mice, and such small deer,
Was his meat that seven yere.

2 'The names of other punie spirits cast out of Twyford, were these:—Hilco, Smolkin, Hillo, &c.—Harriett's Detection, &c. p. 49. Again, Mahu was the chief devil that had possession of Sarah Williams; but another of the possessed named Richard Malny, was possessed by a still more considerable fiend, called Mudo, p. 268; where the said Richard Malny deposes:—'Furthermore it is pretended, that there remaineth still in me the prince of devils, whose name should be Mudo.' And, p. 269:—'When the said priests had despatched their business at Hackney, (where they had been exorcising Sarah Williams,) they then returned towards me, upon pretence to cast the great prince Mudo out of mee.'

In the Goblins, by Sir John Suckling, a catch is introduced, which concludes with these two lines:—

'The prince of darkness is a gentleman;

Mahu, Mahu is his name.'

This catch may not be the production of Suckling, but the original referred to by Edgards's speech.

3 Lord Orford has the following remark in the postscript to his Mysterious Mother, which deserves a place here:—'When Belvidera talks of lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber, she is not mad, but light-headed. When madness has taken possession of a person, such character ceases to be fit for the stage, or at least should appear there but for a short time; it being the business of the theatre to exhibit passions, not distempers. The finest picture ever drawn of a head discomposed by misfortune is that of King Lear. His

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher.

Kent. Good my lord, sooth him; let him take the fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words:

Hush.

Edg. Child Rowland⁴ to the dark tower come,

His word was still,—Fie, foh, and fum,

I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart this house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit,⁵ set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself.

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O, heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the dukes.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True, or false, it hath made thee earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension.

Edm. [Aside.] If I find him comforting the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully.—I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in thy love. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Chamber in a Farm-House, adjoining the Castle. Enter GLOSTER, LEAR, KENT, Fool, and EDGAR.

Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully: I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience:—The gods reward your kindness! [Exit GLOSTER.]

Edg. Frateretto⁶ calls me; and tells me Nero is thoughts dwell on the ingratitude of his daughters, and every sentence that falls from his wildness excites reflection and pity. Had frenzy entirely seized him, our compassion would abate; we should conclude that he no longer felt unhappiness. Shakespeare wrote as a philosopher, Otway as a poet.

4 Capel observes that Child Rowland means the knight Orlando. He would read come, with the quartet absolutely (Orlando being come to the dark tower), and supposes a line to be lost 'which spoke of some giant, the inhabitant of that tower, and the smeller-out of Child Rowland, who comes to encounter him.' He proposes to fill up the passage thus:—

'Child Rowland to the dark tower come,

[The giant roars, and out he ran;]

His word was still, &c.

Part of this is to be found in the second part of Jack and the Giants, which, if not as old as the time of Shakespeare, may have been compiled from something that was so: they are uttered by a giant:—

'Fie, faw, fum,

I smell the blood of an Englishman,

Be he alive, or be he dead,

I'll grind his bones to make my bread.'

5 Cornwall seems to mean the merit of Edmund, which, being noticed by Gloster, provoked or instigated Edgards to seek his father's death.

6 See the quotation from Harriet, in note 2 on the preceding scene. Rabelais says that Nero was a fiddler in hell, and Trajan an angler. The history of Gargantua had appeared in English before 1575, being mentioned in Laneham's Letter from Killingworth, printed in that year.

an angler in the lake of darkness. Pray, innocent,¹ and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. 'Pr'ythee, nuncle, tell me, whether a mad-man be a gentleman, or a yeoman?

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No; he's a yeoman, that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yeoman, that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits Come hissing² in upon them:—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.³

Fool. He's mad, that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's heels,⁴ a boy's love, or a whore's oath.

Lear. It shall be done, I will arraign them straight: Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer:⁵—

[To EDGAR.]

Thou, sapient sir, sit here. [To the Fool.]—Now, you she foxes!—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—

Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?⁶

Come o'er the bourn,⁷ Bessy to me:—

Fool. Her boat hath a leak.

And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee.

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly⁸ for two white herrings. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amazed: Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?

Lear. I'll see their trial first:—Bring in the evidence—

Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;

[To EDGAR.]

And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity, [To the Fool.] Bench by his side:—You are of the commission, Sit you too. [To KENT.]

1 Perhaps he is here addressing the Fool. Fools were anciently termed innocents. So in All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 2:—'The sheriff's fool—a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.'

2 The old copies have hissing, which Malone changed to whizzing. One of the quartos spells the word hizzing, which indicates that the reading of the present text is right.

3 This and the next thirteen speeches are only in the quartos.

4 The old copies read, 'a horse's heels'; but heels was certainly meant. 'Trust not a horse's heels, nor a dog's tooth,' is a proverb in Ray's Collection; which may be traced at least as far back as the time of our Edward II. 'Et Ideo Babio in comediis insinuat dicens,—In fide, dente, pede, mulieris, equi canis est fraus.—Hoc sic vulgariter est dici:—'

'Till horeis fate thou never traist,

Till hondis toth, no woman's faith.'

Forduni Scotichronicon, l. xiv. c. 23.

The proverb in the text is probably from the Italian.

5 Justicer from Justiciarius, was the old term, as we learn from Lombard's Eirenarcha:—'And of this it cometh that M. Fitzherbert, (in his Treatise of the Justices of Peace,) calleth them justiciers (contrarily for justiciars,) and not justices, as we commonly and not altogether improperly doe name them.'

6 When Edgar says, 'Look, where he stands and glares!' he seems to be speaking in the character of a madman, who thinks he sees the fiend. 'Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?' is a question addressed to some visionary spectator, and may mean no more than 'Do you want eyes when you should use them most? that you cannot see this spectre.'

7 A boorn is a brook or rivulet. At the beginning of A Very Merry and Pythie Comedie, called The Longer Thou Livest The More Fool Thou Art, &c. blk. let. no date:—'Entreth Moros, counterfeiting a vain gesture and foolish countenance, synging the foote of many songs, as fooles were wont;' and among them is this passage:—

'Com over the Loorne Beasé,

My lile pretie Beasé,

Come over the boorne, Beasé, to me.'

The old copies read, 'o'er the broome;' and Johnson suggested, as there was no connexion between a boat and a broom, that it was an error. Stevens made the correction, and added this illustration. There is peculiar propriety in this address: Bessy and poor Tom usually travelled together, as appears by a passage cited

Edg. Let us deal justly.

Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin's mouth,

Thy sheep shall take no harm.

Pur! the cat is gray.

Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kicked the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress; Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a jointstool.¹

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim

What store her heart is made of.—Stop her there! Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place! False justicer, why hast thou let her scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits!

Kent. O, pity!—Sir, where is the patience now, That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. My tears begin to take his part so much, They'll mar my counterfeiting. [Aside.]

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me.

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them:—Avant, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite;

Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,

Hound, or spaniel, brach, or lym;¹

Or bobtail tike,² or trundle-tail;

Tom will make them weep and wail:

For, with throwing thus my head,

Dogs leap the hatch, and all are fed.

Do do, do do. Seeca.³ Come, march to wakes and fairs, and market towns:—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry.⁴

from Dick Whippers's Sessions, 1607, by Malone. Mad women, who travel about the country, are called in Shropshire Cousin Betties, and elsewhere Mad Bessies.

8 Much of this may have been suggested by Harwood's book. Sarah Williams deposed, 'That if at any time she did belch, as often times she did by reason that shee was troubled with a wind in her stomack, the priests would say at such time, that then the spirke began to rise in her...and that the wind was the devil.' 'And, (as she saith,) if they heard any croaking in her belly...then they would make a wonderful matter of that.' Hoberdiance is mentioned in a former note. 'One time shee remembereth that, shee having the said croaking in her belly, they said it was the devil that was with the bed, that spake with the voice of a toad,' p. 194, 195, &c.

9 Minikin was anciently a term of endearment.—Baret, in his Alvearie, interprets feat by 'proper, well fashioned, minikin, handsome.'

10 This proverbial expression occurs likewise in Lily's Mother Bomble, 1594.

11 I suspect that bruch signifies a greyhound. A lyne or lyme was a blood-hound, (see Minshew's Dict. in voce;) sometimes also called a limmer or leamer; from the leam or leash, in which he was held till he was let slip. In the book of Ancient Tenures, by T. B. 1679, the words 'canes domini regis leasos,' are translated leash hounds, such as draw after hurt deer in a leash or leyam. So Drayton, in The Muses Elysium:—

'My doghook at my belt, to which my lyam's ty'd.'

12 Tyk is the Runic word for a little worthless dog. Trindetails are mentioned in the Booke of Hunting, &c. blk. let. no date; and in the old comedy of A Woman Kill'd with Kindness.

13 Seeca; this word occurs before in the fourth Scene of this Act. It is spelled Seesey in both places in the old copy. The same word occurs in the Induction to the Taming of the Shrew, where it is spelled seeca; it appears to have been a corruption of cesses, seep or hold, be quiet, have done.

14 A horn was usually carried about by every Tom of Bedlam, to receive such drink as the charitable might afford him, with whatever scraps of food they might give him. When, therefore, Edgar says his horn is dry or empty, he merely means, in the language of the character he assumes, to supplicate that it might be filled with drink. See A Pleasant Dispute between a Coach and a Sedan, 4to. 1636:—'I have observed when a coach is appendant but two or three hundred pounds

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan, see what breeds about her heart: Is there any cause in nature, that makes these hard hearts?—You, sir, I entertain you for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments; you will say, they are Persian attire! but let them be changed.

[To EDGAR.]

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here, and rest awhile.¹

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw the curtains: So, so, so: We'll go to supper i' the morning: So, so, so.

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Come hither, friend: Where is the king my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glo. Good friend, I pr'ythee take him in thy arms;

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him:

There is a litter ready; lay him in't,

And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. Take up thy master: If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life, With thine, and all that offer to defend him, Stand in assured loss: Take up, take up;² And follow me, that will to some provision Give thee quick conduct.

[Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:³— This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses, Which, if convenience will not allow, Stand in hard cure.—Come, help to bear thy master; Thou must not stay behind.] [To the Fool.]

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exit KENT, GLOSTER, and the Fool, bearing off the King.]

Edg. When we our betters see bearing our woes, We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Who alone suffers, suffers most i' the mind; Leaving free things, and happy shows, behind: But then the mind much sufferance doth o'erskip, When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship. How light and portable my pain seems now, When that, which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed, as I father'd!—Tom, away: Mark the high noises,⁴ and thyself bewray,⁵ When false opinion, whose wrong thought defiles thee,

In thy just proof, repeals, and reconciles thee. What will hap more to-night, safe scape the king! Lurk, lurk.] [Exit.]

SCENE VII. A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, EDMUND, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter;—the army of France is landed:—Seek out the villain Gloster.

[Exit some of the Servants.]

Reg. Hang him instantly.

a yeers, make it, the dogges are as leane as rakes; you may tell all their ribbes lying be the fire; and Tom a Bedlam may sooner eate his horne than get it filled with small drinke, and for his old almes of bacon there is no hope in the world.

1 i. e. on the cushions to which he points.

2 One of the quartos reads, 'Take up the king;' the other, 'Take up to keep,' &c.

3 'These two concluding speeches, by Kent and Edgar, are restored from the quarto. The soliloquy of Edgar is extremely fine; and the sentiments of it are drawn equally from nature and the subject. Besides, with regard to the stage, it is absolutely necessary; for as Edgar is not designed, in the constitution of the play, to attend the king to Dover, how absurd would it look for a character of his importance to quit the scene without one word said, or the least intimation what we are to expect from him.'—Theobald.

4 The great events that are approaching, the loud tumult of approaching war.

5 Betray, discover

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company; the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation; we are bound to the like. Our post shall be swift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister;—farewell, my lord of Gloster.⁶

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the king?

Stew. My lord of Gloster hath convey'd him hence. Some five or six and thirty of his knights, Hot questrists⁷ after him, met him at gate; Who, with some other of the lord's dependants, Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast To have well armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

[Exit GONERIL and EDMUND.]

Corn. Edmund, farewell.—Go, seek the traitor Gloster,

Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exit other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life Without the form of justice; yet our power Shall do a courtesy⁸ to our wrath, which men May blame, but not control. Who's there? The traitor?

Re-enter Servants, with GLOSTER.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 'tis he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky⁹ arms.

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard:—O, filthy traitor

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I am none.

Corn. To this chair bind him:—Villain, thou shalt find— [REGAN plucks his Beard.]

Glo. By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done, To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glo. Naughty lady,

These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin, Will quicken,¹⁰ and accuse thee: I am your host; With robbers' hands, my hospitable favours¹¹ You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down, Which came from one that's of a neutral heart, And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false..

6 Meaning Edmund, invested with his father's titles. The Steward, speaking immediately after, mentions the old earl by the same title.

7 A questrist is one who goes in quest or search of another.

8 'Do a courtesy to our wrath,' simply means bend to our wrath, as a courtesy is made by bending the body. To pass on any one may be traced from Magna Charta:—'Neque super eum ibimus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum.' It is common to most of our early writers.—A jury of devils impanneled and deeply sworn to pass on all villains in hell.—'If this be not a Good Play the Devil is in it, 1612.

9 i. e. dry, wither'd, husky arms. This epithet was perhaps borrowed from Harriet:—'It would pose all the cunning exorcists that are this day to be found, to teach an old corkie woman to writhe, tumble, curvet, and fetch her morrice gambols as Martha Bressler did.'

10 i. e. quicken into life.

11 Favours mean the same as features; that is, the different parts of which a face is composed..

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore

To Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at peril—

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him first answer that.

Glo. I am tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.¹

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister In his anointed flesh stick² boarish fangs. The sea, with such a storm as his bare head In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up, And quench'd the stoll'd³ fires: yet, poor old heart, He hold the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern⁴ time, Thou should'st have said, Good porter, turn the key; All cruels else subscrib'd:—But I shall see The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See it shalt thou never:—Fellows, hold the chair:

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot.⁵

[GLOSTER is held down in his Chair, while CORNWALL plucks out one of his Eyes, and sets his Foot on it.]

Glo. He, that will think to live till he be old, Give me some help:—O, cruel! O, ye gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; the other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance,

Serv. Hold your hand, my lord:

have serv'd you ever since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you,

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog?

Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin, I'd shake it on this quarrel: What do you mean?

Corn. My villain! [Draws, and runs at him.]

Serv. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Draws. They fight. CORN. is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.—[To another Serv.]

A peasant stand up thus!

[Snatches a Sword, comes behind him, and stabs him.]

Serv. O, I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left.

To see some mischief on him:—O! [Dies.]

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it:—Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now?

[Tears out GLOSTER's other Eye, and throws it on the ground.]

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son

Edmund?

Edmond, enkindle all the sparks of nature,

To quit⁶ this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!

1 So in Macbeth:—

'They have chain'd me to a stake; I cannot fly,

But, bear-like, I must fight the course.'

2 The quarto reads, 'rash boarish fangs.' To reach is the old hunting term for the stroke made by a wild boar with his fangs.

3 Starred.

4 Thus the folio. The quartos read, 'that dear time.' Deam is deary. The reading in the text is countenanced by Chapman's version of the 24th Iliad:

'_____ in this so sterne a time

Of night and danger.'

5 I. e. yielded, submitted to the necessity of the occasion.

6 This horrible exhibition is not more sanguinary than that of some contemporary dramas. In Sellimus,

Emperor of the Turks, one of the sons of Bajazet, pulls out the eyes of an Aga on the stage, and says:—

Yes, thou shalt live, but never see that day,

Wasting the tapers that should give thee light.

[Pulls out his eyes.]

Immediately after his hands are cut off on the stage.

In Marston's Antonio's Revenge, 1602, Piero's tongue is torn out on the stage.

7 Villain is perhaps here used in its original sense, of one in servitude.

8 Requite.

Thou call'st on him that hates thee: 't was he That made the overture⁹ of thy treason to me; Who is too good to pity thee.

Glo. O, my follies!

Then Edgar was abus'd—

Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go, thrust him out at gates, and let him

smell

His way to Dover.—How is't, my lord? How look

you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt:—Follow me, lady

Turn out that eyeless villain:—throw this slave

Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed space:

Untimely comes this hurt: Give me your arm.

[Exit CORNWALL, led by REGAN;—

Servants unbind GLOSTER, and lead him out.]

1 Serv. I'll never care what wickedness I do, if

If this man comes to good.

2 Serv. If she live long,

And, in the end, meet the old course of death,¹¹

Women will all turn monsters.

1 Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the

Bedlam

To lead him where he would; his roguish madness

Allows itself to any thing.

2 Serv. Go thou; I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs.¹²

To apply to his bleeding face. Now, Heaven help him! [Exeunt severally.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The Heath. Enter EDGAR.

Edg. Yet better thus, and know to be contempt'd,

Than still contemn'd and flatter'd.¹³ To be wext.

The lowest, and most dejected thing of fortune,

Stands still in expectation, lives not in fear:

The lamentable change is from the best;

The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,¹⁴

Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace!

The wretch, that thou hast blown unto the worst,

Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here?—

Enter GLOSTER, led by an old Man.

My father, poorly led?—World, world, O world!

But that thy strange mutations make us hate thee,

Life would not yield to age.¹⁵

Old Man. O, my good lord, I have been your tenant, and your father's tenant, these fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone:

Thy comforts can do me no good at all,

Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. Alack, sir, you cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes;

I stumbled when I saw: Full of 'tis seen,

9 Overture here means an opening, a discovery. 'It was he who first laid thy treasons open to us.'

10 This short dialogue is only found in the quarto.

It is, as Theobald observes, full of nature. Servants could hardly see such barbarity committed without pity;

and the vengeance that they presume must overtake the actors of it, is a sentiment and doctrine well worthy of the stage and of the great moral poet:

11 I. e. die a natural death.

12 Steevens asserted that this passage was ridiculed

by Ben Jonson, in The Case is Altered. Mr. Gifford has shown the folly and falsehood of the assertion; and that it was only a common allusion to a method of stanching blood practised in the poet's time by every barber-surgeon and old woman in the kingdom.

13 'It is better to be thus openly contemned, than to be flattered and secretly contemned.' The expression in this speech, 'owes nothing to thy blasts,' might seem to be copied from Virgil, Æn. xi. 51:—

'Nos juvenem exanimem, et nil jam calcantis ullius

Debetem, vano moniti contumax honor.'

14 The next two lines and a half are not in the quarto.

15 'O world! If reverses of fortune and changes such as I now see and feel, from ease and affluence to poverty and misery, did not show us the little value of life, we should never submit with any kind of resignation to death, the necessary consequences of old age; we should cling to life more strongly than we do.'

Our mean secures us,¹ and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.—Ah, dear son, Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,²
Pd say, I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now? Who's there?

Edg. [Aside.] O, gods! Who is't can say, I am at the worst?

I am worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'Tis poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside.] And worse I may be yet; The worst is not,

So long as we can say, *This is the worst.*³

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glo. Is it a beggar man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not beg.

I the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm; My son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him: I have heard more since;

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods;

They kill us for their sport.⁴

Edg. How should this be?

Bad is the trade must play the fool to sorrow,
Ang'ring itself and others. [Aside.]—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man. Ay, my lord.

Glo. Then, 'pr'ythee, get thee gone: If, for my sake,

Thou wilt o'ertake me, hence a mile or twain,
I the way to Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he's mad.

Glo. 'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure:
Above the rest, be gone.

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,

Come on't what will.

[Exit.]

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold—I cannot daub⁵ it further. [Aside.]

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside.] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scared out of his good wits: Bless the good man from the foul fiend!

1 Mean is here put for our moderate or mean conditions. It was sometimes the practice of the poet's age to use the plural, when the subject spoken of related to more persons than one. To avoid the equivocal, Pope changed the reading of the old copy 'to our mean secures us,' which is certainly more intelligible, and may have been the reading intended, as means being spelled with a final e might easily be mistaken for means, which is the reading of the old copy.

2 So in another scene, 'I see it feelingly.'

3 I. e. while we live; for while we yet continue to have a sense of feeling, something worse than the present may still happen. He recalls his former rash conclusion.

4 'Dil nos quasi pias homines habent.'

Plaut. Captiv. Prolog. l. 22.

Thus also in Sidney's Arcadia, lib. li. :—

'wretched human kinds

Baltes to the stars,' &c.

5 I. e. disguise it.

6 So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue.'

King Richard III.

6 'The devil in Ma. Malin confessed his name to be Moda, and that he had besides himself seven other spirits, and all of them capitaines, and of great fame. Then Edmundes, (the exorcist) began againe with great earnestness, and all the company cried out, &c.—so as both that wicked prince Modu and his company might be cast out.'—Harnet, p. 163. This passage will account for 'five fiends having been in poor Tom at once.'

[Five fiends⁶ have been in poor Tom at once; of just, as Obidicut; Hobbidance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of murder; and Fibberigibbet, of mopping and mowing; who since possesses chambermaids and waitingwomen.⁷ So, bless thee, master!]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched, Makes thee the happier:—Heavens, deal so still! Let the superfluous, and lust-dieted man, That slaves your ordinance,⁸ that will not see Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly, So distribution should undo excess, And each man have enough.—Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head Looks fearfully in⁹ the confined deep: Bring me but to the very brim of it, And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear, With something rich about me: from that place I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm; Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before the DUKE of ALBANY'S Palace. Enter GONERIL and EDMUND; Steward meeting them.

Gen. Welcome, my lord: I marvel, our mild husband¹⁰

Not met us on the way:—Now, where's your master?

Stew. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd I told him of the army that was landed; He smil'd at it: I told him, you were coming; His answer was, The scores: of Gloucester's treachery, And of the loyal service of his son, When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot And told me, I had turn'd the wrong side out:—What most he should dislike, seems pleasant to him; What like, offensive.

Gen. Then shall you go no further. [To EDMUND.]

It is the coward terror of his spirit, That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs, Which tie him to an answer: Our wishes, on the way,

May prove effects.¹¹ Back, Edmund, to my brother; Hasten his musters, and conduct his powers: I must change arms at home, and give the distaff Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant Shall pass between us: ere long you are like to hear,

7 'If she have a little helpe of the mother, epilepsie, or cramp, to teach her role her eyes, wrie her mouth, gnash her teeth, starte with her body, hold her armes and handes stiffe, make antike faces, grines, mow and mop, like an ape, then no doubt the young girl is owle-blasted, and possessed.'—Harnet, p. 136. The five devils here mentioned are the names of five of those who were made to act in this farce, three chambermaids or waiting women, in Mr. Edmund Peckham's family. The reader will now perceive why a coquette is called Fibberigibbet or tiffill by Cogrove. See Act III. Sc. 4. The passage in crotchets is omitted in the folio.

8 'Lear has before uttered the same sentiment, which indeed cannot be too strongly impressed, though it may be too often repeated.'—Johnson. To slave an ordinance is to treat it as a slave, to make it subject to us, instead of acting in obedience to it. So in Heywood's Brazan Age, 1613:—

—none

Could slave him like the Lydian Omphale.'

Again, in A New Way to Pay Old Debts, by Massinger:—'that slaves me to his will.' The quartos read, 'That stands your ordinance,' which may be right, says Malone, and means withstands or obides.

9 It is here put for on, as in other places of these plays.

10 It must be remembered that Albany, the husband of Goneril, disliked the scheme of oppression and ingratitude at the end of the first act.

11 'The wishes which we expressed to each other on the way hither, may be completed, may take effect,' perhaps alluding to the destruction of her husband

If you dare venture in your own behalf,
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech;
[Giving a Favours.]

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air;—
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.
Gon. My most dear Gloucester!

[Exit EDMUND.]

O, the difference of man, and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my bed.¹

Stew. Madam, here comes my lord.

[Exit Steward.]

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.²

Alb. O, Goneril!

You art not worth the dust which the rude wind
Blows in your face—I fear your disposition:³
That nature, which contemns its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself;
She that herself will sliver⁴ and disbranch
From her material sap,⁵ perforce must wither,
And come to deadly use.⁶

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile:
Filths savour but themselves. What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd?
A father, and a gracious aged man,
Whose reverence the head-lugg'd bear would lick,⁷
Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you maddened.
Could my good brother suffer you to do it?

A man, a prince, by him so benefited?
If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
'Twill come,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
Like monsters of the deep.

Gon. Milk-liver'd man!

That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs;
Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning
Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st,⁸ Fools do those villains pity, who are punish'd Ere they have done their mischief.⁹ Where's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;
With plumed helm thy slayer begins threats;
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sitt'st still, and cry'st,
Alack! why does he so?

Alb. See thyself, devil!

1 She bids him decline his head, that she might give him a kiss, (the steward being present,) and that might appear only to him as a whisper.

2 Quarto A reads 'my foot usurp my body.' Quarto B, 'my foot usurps my head.' Quarto C, 'a fool usurps my bed.' The folio reads, 'my foot usurps my body.'

3 Alluding to the proverb, 'It is a poor dog that is not worth the whistling.' Goneril's meaning seems to be, 'There was a time when you would have thought me worth the calling to you,' reproaching him for not having summoned her to consult with on the present occasion.

4 These words and the lines following, to monsters of the deep, are not in the folio. They are necessary to explain the reasons of the detestation which Albany here expresses to his wife.

5 So in Macbeth:—

'—slips of yew
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse.'

6 'She who breaks the bonds of filial duty, and becomes wholly alienated from her father, must wither and perish, like a branch separated from that trunk or body which supplied it with sap.' There is a peculiar propriety in the use of the word material: material, Lat. signifying the trunk or body of the tree.

7 Alluding to the use that witches and enchanters are said to make of withered branches in their charms. A fine insinuation in the speaker, that she was ready for the most unnatural mischief, and a preparative of the poet to her plotting with the bastard against her husband's life.—Warburton. Dr. Warburton might have adduced the passage from Macbeth above quoted in support of his ingenious interpretation.

Proper deformity seems not in the fæd
So horrid, as in woman.¹¹

Gon. O, vain fool!

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd¹² thing, for shame,

Be-monster not thy feature.¹³ Were it my fitness
To let these hands obey my blood,¹⁴
They are apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones;—How'er thou art a fæd,
A woman's shape doth shield thee,
Gon. Marry, your manhood now!

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Cornwall's
dead;

Slain by his servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucester's eyes?

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse

Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereto urg'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell his head:
But not without that harmful stroke, which since Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,

You justicers, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge!—But, O, poor Gloucester!
Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—

This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;
'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside.] One way I like this well;¹⁵
But being widow, and my Gloucester with her,
May all the building in my fancy pluck
Upon my hateful life: Another way,
The news is not so tart.—I'll read and answer. [Exit.]

Alb. Where was his son, when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He is not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back again.

Alb. Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 'twas he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment

Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I live

To thank thee for the love thou show'st the king,
And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither, friend;
Tell me what more thou knowest. [Exeunt.]

8 This line is not in the folio.

9 The rest of this speech is also omitted in the folio.

10 'Goneril means to say that none but fools would be excited to commiserate those who are prevented from executing their malicious designs, and punished for their evil intention.' Malone doubts whether Goneril alludes to her father, but surely there cannot be a doubt that she does, and to the pity for his sufferings expressed by Albany, whom she means indirectly to call a fool for expressing it.

11 That is, 'Diabolic qualities appear not so horrid in the devil, to whom they belong, as in woman, who unnaturally assumes them.'

12 The meaning appears to be 'thou that hast hid the woman under the fæd; thou that hast disguised nature by wickedness.' Steevens thinks that there may be an allusion to the coverings which insects furnish to themselves, like the silk worm, that—

'—labours till it clouds itself all o'er.'

13 It has been already observed that feature was often used for form or person in general, the figure of the whole body.

14 My blood is my passion, my inclination. This verse wants a foot, which Theobald purposed to supply by reading 'beiling blood.'

15 Goneril's plan was to poison her sister, to marry Edmund, to murder Albany, and to get possession of the whole kingdom. As the death of Cornwall facilitated the last part of her scheme, she was pleased at it; but disliked it, as it put 'in the power of her sister to marry Edmund

[SCENE III.¹ The French Camp near Dover.Enter KENT, and a Gentleman.²Kent. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?³*Gent.* Something he left imperfect in the state, Which since his coming forth is thought of; which Imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his personal return was most required, And necessary.Kent. Who bath he left behind him general?Gent. The Mareschal of France, Monsieur le Fer.
Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek: it seem'd, she was a queen
Over her passion; who, most rebel-like,
Sought to be king o'er her.Kent. O, then it mov'd her.Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove
Who should express her godliest. You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once; her smiles and tears
Were like;—a better way.⁴ Those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence,
As pearls from diamonds dropp'd.⁵—In brief, sorrow
Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
Could so become it.Kent. Made she no verbal question?Gent. 'Faith, once, or twice, she hear'd the name of fatherPantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;
Cried, Sisters! sisters!—Shame of ladies! sisters!Kent! *father! sisters! What! 't the storm? 't the night?Let pity not be believed!*⁶—There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes,
And clamour moisten'd;⁷ then away she started
To deal with grief alone.Kent. It is the stars,The stars above us, govern our conditions;⁸

1 This scene is left out in the folio copy, but is necessary to continue the story of Cordelia, whose behaviour is most beautifully painted.

2 The gentlemen whom he sent in the foregoing act with letters to Cordelia.

3 The king of France being no longer a necessary personage, it was fit that some pretext for getting rid of him should be formed before the play was too near advanced towards a conclusion. Decency required that a monarch should not be silently shuffed into the pack of insignificant characters; and therefore his dismissal, (which could be effected only by a sudden recall to his own dominions,) was to be accounted for before the audience. For this purpose, among others, the present scene was introduced. It is difficult to say what use could have been made of the king, had he appeared at the head of his own armament, and survived the murder of his queen. His conjugal concern on the occasion might have weakened the effect of Lear's paternal sorrow; and, being an object of respect as well as pity, he would naturally have divided the spectator's attention, and thereby diminished the consequence of Albany, Edgar, and Kent, whose exemplary virtues deserved to be ultimately placed in the most conspicuous point of view.—Steevens

4 Both the quartos read, 'were like a better way.' Steevens reads, upon the suggestion of Theobald, 'a better day,' with a long and somewhat ingenious, though unsatisfactory argument in defence of K. Warburton reads, 'a better May,' which is plausible enough. Malone adopts a part of his emendation, and reads 'a better May.' I have been favoured by Mr. Boaden with the following solution of this passage, which, as it preserves the reading of the old copy, merits attention:—'The difficulty has arisen from a general mistake as to the simile itself; and Shakespeare's own words here actually convey his perfect meaning, as indeed they commonly do. I understand the passage thus:—

"—You have seen
Sunshine and rain at once; her smiles and tears
Were like; a better way."

'That is, Cordelia's smiles and tears were like the conjunction of sunshine and rain, in a better way or manner. Now in what did this better way consist? Why

Else one self mate and mate,¹¹ could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her since?Gent. No.Kent. Was this before the king return'd?Gent. No, since.Kent. Well, sir; the poor distress'd Lear is it the town:Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers
What we are come about, and by no means Will yield to see his daughter.Gent.Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him: his own unkindness,That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things sting
His mind so venomously, that burning shame
Detains him from Cordelia.Gent.Kent. Alack, poor gentleman!
Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers you heard not?Gent. 'Tis so, they are afoot.Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master Lear,
And leave you to attend him: some dear cause¹⁰
Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exit.SCENE IV. The same. A Tent. Enter Cordelia, Physician, and Soldiers.Cor. Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now
As mad as the vex'd sea: singing aloud;
Crown'd with rank fumiter,¹² and furrow weeds,
With harlocks,¹³ hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel,¹⁴ and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn.—A century send forth;
Search every acre in the high ground field,
And bring him to our eyes. [Exit an Officer.]—What can man's wisdom do,¹⁵simply in the smiles seeming unconconscious of the tears, whereas the sunshine has a watery look through the falling drops of rain—Those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes."

'That the point of comparison was neither a "better day," nor a "better May," is proved by the following passages, cited by Steevens and Malone:—"Her tears came dropping down like rain in sunshine."—Sidney's Arcadia, p. 244.

'I may just observe, as perhaps an illustration, that the better way of Charity is that the right hand should not know what the left hand giveth.'

5 The quartos read emilots, which may be a diminutive of the poet's coiling.

6 Steevens would read dropping, but as must be understood to signify as if, I do not think that jewelled pendants were in the poet's mind. A similar beautiful thought in Middleton's Game of Chess has caught the eye of Milton:—

—the holy dew lies like a pearl
Dropt from the opening eyelids of the morn
Upon the bashful rose."

7 I. e. discourse, conversation.

8 I. e. let not pity be supposed to exist. It is not impossible but Shakespeare might have formed this fine picture of Cordelia's agony from holy writ, in the conduct of Joseph, who, being no longer able to restrain the vehemence of his affection, commanded all his relatives from his presence; and then weep'd aloud, and discovered himself to his brethren.—Theobald.

9 That is, 'her sorrows were accompanied with tears.'

10 Conditions are dispositions.

11 I. e. the edifying husband and wife.

12 Important business.

13 I. e. fumitory, written by the old herbalists fumitory

14 The quartos read hardokes, the folio hardokes. Drayton mentions harlocks in one of his Eclogues:—

'The honey-suckle, the harlocks,
The lily, and the lady-smocke,' &c.

Perhaps the charlock, diaplis arvensis, or wild mustard, may be meant.

15 Darnel, according to Gerard, is the most hurtful of weeds among corn.

16 Steevens says that do should be omitted as needless

In the restoring his bereaved sense ?
He, that helps him, take all my outward worth.

Phy. There is means, madam :
Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks ; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor. All bless'd secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears ! be aidant, and remediate,
In the good man's distress !—Seek, seek for him ;
Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.¹

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Madam, news ;
The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis known before ; our preparation stands
In expectation of them.—O, dear father,
It is thy business that I go about ;
Therefore great France.

My mourning, and important² tears, hath pitted.
No blown³ ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our aged father's right :
Soon may I hear, and see him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Room in Gloster's Castle. Enter REGAN and Steward.

Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth ?

Stew. Ay, madam.

Reg. Himself,

In person there ?

Stew. Madam, with much ado :
Your sister is the better soldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spoke not with your lord at home ?

Stew. No, madam.

Reg. What might import my sister's letter to him ?

Stew. I know not, lady.

Reg. Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.
It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live ; where he arrives, he moves
All hearts against us : Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His nighted life ;⁴ moreover, to decry
The strength of the enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.

Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow ; stay with us ;
The ways are dangerous.

Stew. I may not, madam ;

My lady charg'd my duty in this business.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund ? Might not you to the sense of the passage, and injurious to the metre.

Times in Hamlet :—

'Try what repentance can ; What can it not ?'

Do, in either place, be understood, though suppressed.
Do is found in none of the old copies but quarto B.

1 I. e. the reason which should guide it.

2 Important for importunate, as in other places of these plays. See Comedy of Errors, Act v. Sc. 1. The folio reads importuned.

3 No inflated, no swelling pride.

4 Quam bene est ambitio merat vanissima, ventus,
Et tumidos tumidos vos superavit aque.

Bona on the Spanish Armada.

So in The Little French Lawyer of Beaumont and Fletcher :—

'I come with no blown spirit to abuse you.'

4 I. e. his life made dark as night, by the extinction of his eyes.

5 'I know not well (says Johnson) why Shakspeare gives the Steward, who is a mere factor for wickedness, so much fidelity. He now refuses the letter ; and afterwards, when he is dying, thinks only how it may be safely delivered.'—Johnson.

'Surely when Dr. Johnson made this note, he did not recollect the character Edgar gives of this Steward after he is dead :—

"As dutious to the vices of thy mistress
As badness could require."

'Fidelity in agents of wickedness is, I fear, not so uncommon as to be unfit for the general probability of dramatic manners.'—Fye

Transport her purposes by word ? Belike,
Something—I know not what :—I'll love thee much
Let me unseal the letter.'

Stew.

Madam, I had rather—
Reg. I know, your lady does not love her husband ;
I am sure of that : and, at her late being here,
She gave strange celliads,⁶ and most speaking looks
To noble Edmund : I know, you are of her bosom.

Stew. I, madam ?

Reg. I speak in understanding ; you are, I know it :
Therefore, I do advise you, take this note :⁷
My lord is dead ; Edmund and I have talk'd ;
And more convenient is he for my hand,
Than for your lady's :—You may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this ;⁸
And when your mistress hears thus much from you,
I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.
So, fare you well.
If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.

Stew. 'Would, I could meet him, madam ! I would show
What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.⁹ The Country near Dover. Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR, dressed like a Peasant.

Glo. When shall we come to the top of that same hill ?

Edg. You do climb up it now : look, how we labour.

Glo. Methinks the ground is even.

Edg. Horribly steep :

Hark, do you hear the sea ?

Glo. No, truly.¹¹

Edg. Why, then your other senses grow imperfect
By your eyes' anguish.

Glo.

So may it be, indeed :
Methinks, thy voice is alter'd ;¹² and thou speak'st
In better phrase, and matter, than thou didst.

Edg. You are much deceiv'd ; in nothing am I chang'd,

But in my garments.

Glo.

Methinks, you are better spoken.
Edg. Come on, sir ; here's the place :—stand still.—How fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low !
The crows, and choughs, that wing the midway air,
Show scarce so gross as beetles : Half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire,¹³ dreadful trade !
Methinks, he seems no bigger than his head :
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice ; and yon¹⁴ tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock ;¹⁵ her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight : The marmoring surge,
That on the unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high ;—I'll look no more ;

6 Celliads, Fr. a cast, or significant glance of the eye.

7 That is, observe what I am saying.

8 You may infer more than I have directly told you.

9 Perhaps a ring, or some token, is given to the steward by Regan to be conveyed to Edmund.

10 This scene, and the stratagem by which Gloster is cured of his desperation, are wholly borrowed from Sidney's Arcadia, book ii.

11 Something to complete the measure seems wanting in this or the foregoing hemistich. The quartos read as one line :—

'Horrible steep : hark, do you hear the sea ?'

12 Edgar alters his voice in order to pass afterwards for a malignant spirit.

13 'Samphire grows in great plenty on most of the sea cliffs in this country : it is terrible to see how people gather it, hanging by a rope several fathom from the top of the impending rocks, as it were in the air.'—Smith's History of Waterford, p. 316. edn. 1774.—Dover Cliff was particularly resorted to for this plant, according to Drayton, Polyolbion, b. xviii.

14 Rob Dover's neighbouring ciscoes of samphire, to excite

His dull and sickly taste, and stir up appetite.

It is still eaten as a pickle in those parts of England bordering on the southern coast.

15 I. e. her cock-boat. Hence the term cock-scurion.

Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple¹ down headlong.

Glo.

Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand: You are now within a foot

Of the extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
Would I not leap upright.

Glo.

Let go my hand.

Here, friend, is another purse; in it a jewel
Well worth a poor man's taking: Fairies, and gods,
Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;
Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir. (Seems to go.)

Glo.

With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his despair,
Is done to cure it.

Glo.

O, you mighty gods!

This world I do renounce; and, in your sights
Shake patiently my great affliction off:

If I could bear it longer, and not fall

To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My smuff, and loathed part of nature, should

Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!—
Now, fellow, fare thee well.

[He leaps and falls along.]

Edg.

Gone, sir? farewell.—

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life, when life itself

Yields to the theft: Had he been where he thought,

By this, had thought been past.—Alive, or dead?

Ho, you sir! friend!—Hear you, sir?—speak!

Thus might he pass indeed:—Yet he revives:

What are you, sir?

Glo.

Away, and let me die.

Edg. Had'st thou been ought but gossamer,⁴ feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,

Thou had'st shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost breathe;

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st; art sound.

Ten fusts at each⁵ make not the altitude,

Which thou hast perpendicularly fell;

Thy life's a miracle: Speak yet again.

Glo.

But have I fallen, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn:⁶

Look up a-height;—the shrill-gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will.

Edg.

Give me your arm:

Up:—So;—How is't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg.

This is above all strangeness.

Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that

Which parted from you?

Glo.

A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought, his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd,⁷ and wav'd like the enridged sea;
It was some fiend: Therefore, thou happy father,
Think that the clearest⁸ gods, who make them honours

Of men's impossibilities,⁹ have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now; henceforth I'll bear

Affliction, till it do cry out itself,

Enough, enough, and die. That thing you speak of,

I took it for a man; often 'twould say,

The fiend, the fiend: he led me to that place

Edg. Bear free!¹⁰ and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?

Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed up with Flowers.

The safer sense!¹¹ will ne'er accommodate

His master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;

I am the king himself.

Edg. O, thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect. There's your press-money.¹² That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper:¹³ draw me a clothier's yard.— Look, look, a mouse! Peace, peace;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.¹⁴—
O, well flown, bird!—i' the clout, i' the clout!
hewgh!—Give the word.¹⁵

Edg. Sweet majoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril!—with a white beard!—
They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me, I had white hairs in my beard, ere the black ones were there. To say ay, and no, to every thing I said!—

because its shell is marked with convoluted protuberant ridges.

⁸ That is, the purest; the most free from evil. So in Timon of Athens:—'Boots! you clear gods!

⁹ By men's impossibilities perhaps is meant what men call impossibilities, what appear as such to mere mortal beings.

¹⁰ Bear free and patient thoughts.' Free here means pure, as in other places of these plays.

¹¹ 'The safer sense' (says Mr. Blakeway) seems to me to mean the eyesight, which, says Edgar, will never more serve the unfortunate Lear so well as those which Gloster has remaining will serve him, who is now returned to a right mind. Horace terms the eyes 'oculi fidelis,' and the eyesight may be called the safer sense in allusion to the proverb: 'Seeing is believing.' Gloster afterwards laments the stiffness of his vile sense.¹²

¹² It is evident from the whole of this speech that Lear fancied himself in a battle. For the meaning of press money, see the first scene of Hamlet, which will also serve to explain the passage in Act v. Sc. 3:—

'And turn our impress lances in our eyes.'

¹³ 'Or if thou'lt not thy archery forbear,

To some base rustick do thyself prefer;

And when corn's sown, or grown into the ear,

Practice thy quiver and turn crow-keeper.'

Drayton, Idea the Forty-eighth.

Ascham, in speaking of awkward shooters, says:—

'Another cowereth down, and layeth out his buttocks as though he would shoot at crows.'

The subsequent expression of Lear, 'draw me a clothier's yard,' Steevens thinks, alludes to the old ballad of Chevy Chase:—

'An arrow of a cloth yard long,

Up to the head he drew,' &c.

¹⁴ Bettleaxes.

¹⁵ Lear is here raving of archery, falconry, and a

1 To topple is to tumble: the word is again used in Macbeth. So in Nashe's Lenten Stuffe, 1599:—'Fifty people toppled up their heels there.'

2 That is, 'when life is willing to be destroyed.'

3 'Thus might he die in reality.' We still use the word passing-bell. So in King Henry VI Part II.—
'Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.'

4 'The substance called gossamer is formed of the collected webs of flying spiders, and during calm weather in autumn sometimes falls in amazing quantities.'—Holt White. Some think it the down of plants; others the vapour arising from boggy or marshy ground in warm weather. The etymon of this word, which has puzzled the lexicographers, is said to be summer goose or summer gauze, hence 'gauze o'the summer,' his well known name in the north. See Hora Momenta Crævena, or the Cræven Dialect Exemplified, 1804, 8vo. p. 79.

5 I. e. drawn out at length, or each added to the other. 'Eche, exp. draw out, ab Anglo Saxon ecan, ecian, Diferre, vel a verb. to eak.' Sklener, Etymolog.
Sklener is right in his last derivation, it is from the Anglo-Saxon ecan, to add. Thus Chaucer, in The House of Fame, b. iii. v. 975:—

—'gan somewhat to eche,

To this tiding in his speche.'

And in Troilus and Cressida, b. i. v. 706:—

'As doen these fowles, that hir sorrowes eche.'

Fope changed this to attacht; Johnson would read on and; Steevens proposes at reach. Ignorance of our earlier language has been the stumbling-block of all these eminent critics.

6 I. e. this chalky boundary of England.

7 Welk'd is marked with protuberances. This and enolk are probably only different forms of the same word. The welk is a small shellfish, so called, perhaps,

Ay and no too was no good divinity.¹ When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found them, there I smelt them out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not agree proof.

Glo. The trick² of that voice I do well remember: Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch, a king: When I do stare, see how the subject quakes. I pardon³ that man's life: what was thy cause?—

Adultery.—

Thou shalt not die; Die for adultery! No: The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly Does lecher in my sight.

Let copulation thrive, for Gloucester's bastard son Was kinder to his father, than my daughters Got 'tween the lawful sheets.

To't, luxury,⁴ pell-mell, for I lack soldiers.—

Behold yon simpering dame,

Whose face between her forks presageth snow;⁵

That minces⁶ virtue, and does shake the head

To hear of pleasure's name;

The fitchew, nor the soiled horse,⁶ goes to't

With a more riotous appetite.

Down from the waist they are centaurs,

Though women all above;

But 'to the girdle do the gods inherit,⁸

Beneath is all the fiends'; there's hell, there's dark-

ness,
There is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption:—Fie, fie, fie! pah! pah! Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination: there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

Glo. O, ruin'd piece of nature! This great world Shall so wear out to nought.—Dost thou know me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. Dost thou squiny at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid! I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters sums, I could not see one.

Edg. I would not take this from report;—it is, And my heart breaks at it.

battle, jumbled together in quick transition. 'Well flown bird' was the falconer's expression when the hawk was successful in her flight; it is so used in A Woman Kill'd with Kindness. The clout is the white mark at which archers aim. By 'give the word,' the watchword in a camp is meant. The quartos read, 'O well flown bird in the ayre, hugh, give the word.'

1 It has been proposed to read, 'To say ay and no to every thing I said ay and no to, was no good divinity.' Besides the inaccuracy of construction in the passage as it stands in the text, it does not appear how it could be falsely to dissent from as well as assent to every thing Lear said.

2 Trick is a word used for the air, or peculiarity in a face, voice, or gesture, which distinguishes it from others. We still say he has a trick of winking with his eyes, &c.

3 i. e. incontinence.

4 The construction is, 'Whose face presageth snow between her forks.' So in Timon of Athens, Act iv. Sc. 3.—

'Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow That lies on Dian's lap.'

See Cotgrave's Dict. in v. Fourcheve.

5 i. e. puts on an outward affected seeming of virtue. See Cotgrave in v. Minceur-se. He also explains it under 'Faire la badinette, to mince it, nicke it, be very squeamish, backward, or coy.'

6 The fitchew is the polecat. A soiled horse is a horse that has been fed with hay and corn during the winter, and is turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass, or has it cut and carried to him. This at once cleanses the animal and fills him with blood. In the old copies the preceding as well as the latter part of Lear's speech is printed as prose. It is doubtful whether any part of it was intended for metre.

7 But in its exceptive sense.

8 Proseus.

9 From 'hide all' to 'accuser's lips' is wanting in the quartos

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case of eyes?

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse? Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: Yet you see how this world goes.

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Look with thine ears; see how yon justice rails upon yon simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: Change places; and handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Glo. Ay, sir.

Lear. And the creature run from the cur? There thou might'st behold the great image of authority; A dog's obey'd in office.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:

Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back:

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind

For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozener.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear

Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all.⁹ Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:

Arm it in rage, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

None does offend, none, I say none; I'll able 'em;¹⁰

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power

To seal the accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;

And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now, now, now:

Pull off my boots;—harder, harder; so.

Edg. O, matter and impertinency!¹¹ mix'd!

Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloucester:

Thou must be patient; we came crying hither.

Thou know'st the first time that we smell the air,

We wawl, and cry:¹²—I will preach to thee; mark me.

Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are come

To this great stage of fools;—This a good block?¹³

10 i. e. support or uphold them. So Chapman, in the Widow's Tears, 1612:—

'Admitted! ay, into her heart, and I'll able it.'

Again, in his version of the twenty-third Psalm:—

'I'll able this'

For five revolved years.'

11 Impertinency here is used in its old legitimate sense of something not belonging to the subject.

12 'The child feels that, the man that feeling knows, Which cries first borne, the passage of his life,' &c.

Sidney's Arcadia, lib. ii.

The passage is, however, evidently taken from Pliny, as translated by Philemon Holland, Proem to b. vii.—

'Man alone, poor wretch [nature] hath laid all naked upon the bare earth, even on his birthday to cry out versate presently from the very first hours that he is borne into this world.'—Dowce.

13 Upon the king's saying 'I will preach to thee,' the poet seems to have meant him to pull off his hat, and keep turning it and feeling it. In the attitude of one of the preachers of those times (whom I have seen represented in ancient prints) all the idea of felt which the good hat or block was made of, raises the straggler in his brain of wheeling a troop of horse with the [same substance] which he hold and moulded between his hands. So in Decker's Gull's Hornbook, 1609:—'That cannot observe the tune of his husband, nor know what fashioned block is most kin to his head: for in my opinion the brain cannot chuse his felt well.' Again, in Rus and a Great Cast, no date, Epigram 46, in Sorinus:—

'A pretty blocke Sorinus names his hat,
So much the fitter for his head by that.'

This delicate straggler is mentioned by Ariosto:—

'— fece nel cotto strepito quanto

Avesse avuto addo i piedi feltro.'

So in Fenton's Tragical Discourses, etc. bk. i. 1567:—

'He outcrieth himself for the purpose in a night-gowne

It were a delicate stratagem, to shoe
A troop of horse with felt: I'll put it in proof;
And when I have stolen upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is, lay hand upon him.—Sir,
Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even
The natural fool of fortune.¹—Use me well;
You shall have ransom. Let me have a surgeon,
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds? All myself?

Why, this would make a man, a man of salt;²
To use his eyes for garden water-pots,
Ay, and for laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good sir,—

Lear. I will die bravely, like a bridegroom:
What?

I will be jovial; come, come; I am a king,
My masters, know you that!

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in it.⁴ Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.⁵

[Exit, running; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch;
Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one daughter
Who redeems nature from the general curse
Which twain have brought her to.

Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you? What's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?

Gent. Most sure and vulgar: every one hears that,

Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,

How near's the other army?

Gent. Near, and on speedy foot, the main descry
Stands on the hourly thought.⁶

Edg. I thank you, sir: that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here,

Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir. [Exit Gent.]

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from
me;

Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poor man, made lame by fortune's blows.⁷

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,⁸
Am pregnant to good pity. Give me your hand,
I'll lead you to some bidding.

girl to hym, with a payre of shoes of fette leaste the noyse of his fette might discover his goings, p. 58.—
It had, however, been actually put in practice about fifty years before Shakespeare was born, at a tournament held at Lisle before Henry the VIII. [Oct. 13, 1513,] where the horses, to prevent their sliding on a black stone pavement, were shod with felt or flocks (feltro sive tomento.) See Lord Herbert's Life of King Henry VIII. p. 41.

² This was the cry formerly in the English army when an onset was made on the enemy. So in Venus and Adonis :—

'Gives false alarma, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, Kill, kill.'

³ So in Romeo and Juliet :—'O, I am fortune's fool.'
⁴ 'A man of salt' is a man of tears. In All's Well that Ends Well, we meet with 'Your salt tears head.' And in Troilus and Cressida, 'the salt of broken tears.' Again, in Coriolanus :—

'He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome.'

⁵ The case is not yet desperate. So in Antony and Cleopatra :—'There's sap in't yet.'

⁶ Mr. Boswell thinks that this passage seems to prove that cesses means the very reverse of cesses. See p. 414, and p. 416, note 13, ante.

⁷ The main body is expected to be descried every hour.

Glo. Hearty thanks :
The bounty and the benison of heaven
To boot, and boot!

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor,
Briefly thyself remember :¹⁰—The sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to it. [Edgar opposes.]

Stew. Wherefore, bold peasant,
Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor? Hence;
Lest that the infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Ch'ill not let go, sir, without further 'casion.

Stew. Let go, slave, or thou diest.

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait,¹¹ and let poor folk pass. And ch'ud ha' been zwagger'd out of my life, 'twould not ha' been zo long as 'tis by a vornight. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, che vor'ye,¹² or ise try whether your costard¹³ or my bat be the harder: Ch'ill be plain with you.

Stew. Out, dunghill!

Edg. Ch'ill pick your teeth, sir; Come; no matter vor your foins.¹⁴

[They fight; and Edgar knocks him down.]

Stew. Slave, thou hast slain me:—Villain, take my purse;

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;
And give the letters, which thou find'st about me,
To Edmund earl of Gloster; seek him out
Upon the British party:—O, untimely death

[Dies.]

Edg. I know thee well: A serviceable villain;
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire.

Glo. What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you.—

Let's see his pockets; these letters, that he speaks of,
May be my friends.—He's dead: I am only sorry
He had no other deathsmen.—Let us see:
Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not:
To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts
Their papers, is more lawful.¹⁵

[Reads.] Let our reciprocal vows be remembered.
You have many opportunities to cut him off; if you will wait not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.
There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror:
Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour.

Your wife, (so I would say,) and your affectionate servant,

GENERAL.

O undistinguish'd space of woman's will!¹⁶—

A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange, my brother!—Here, in the sands,

⁷ By this expression may be meant 'my evil genius.'
⁸ The folio reads 'made lame by fortune's blows.'
The original is probably the true reading. So in Shak- speare's thirty-seventh Sonnet :—

'So I, made lame by fortune's dearest sigh,' ⁹ Feeling is probably used here for felt. Borrow known not by relation, but by experience. Warburton explains k. 'Borrow's past and present.'

¹⁰ i. e. 'quickly recollect the past offences of thy life, and recommend thyself to heaven.'

¹¹ Gang your gait, is a common expression in the north. In the last rebellion, the Scotch soldiers, when they had finished their exercise, were dismissed by this phrase, 'gang your gait.'

¹² i. e. warn you. When our ancient writers have occasion to introduce a rustic, they commonly allot him the Somersetshire dialect. Golding, in his translation of the second book of Ovid's Metamorphoses, makes Mercury, assuming the appearance of a clown, speak with the provinciality of Edgar.

¹³ i. e. head. A bat is a staff. It is the proper name of a walking-stick in Sussex even at this day.

¹⁴ i. e. thrusts.

¹⁵ i. e. to rip their papers is more lawful.

¹⁶ This seems to me to mean, 'O how inordinate, how unbounded is the licentious inclination of women.'

These I'll rake up, the post unsanctified!
Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke:¹ for him 'tis well,
That of thy death and business I can tell.

[Exit EDGAR, dragging out the Body.]

Glo. The king is mad: How stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenuous feeling?
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Give me your hand:
Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum.
Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. A Tent in the French Camp. LEAR on a Bed asleep: Physician, Gentleman,² and others attending: Enter CORDELIA and KENT.

Cor. O, thou good Kent, how shall I live, and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,
And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'erpaid.
All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited:³
These weeds are memories⁴ of those worse hours;
I pry'three, put them off.

Kent. Pardon me, dear madam;
Yet to be known, shortens my made intent:⁵
My boon I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I think meet.

Cor. Then be it so, my good lord.—How does the king? [To the Physician.]

Phys. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O, you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
The untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father!

Phys. So please your majesty,
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed
I' the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of his sleep,
We put fresh garments on him.

Phys. Be by, good madam, when we do awake
him;

I doubt not of his temperance.

Cor. Very well.

1 'These I'll rake up, the post unsanctified,' &c.
i. e. I'll cover thee. In Staffordshire, to rake the fire, is to cover it for the night. Unsanctified refers to his want of burial in consecrated ground.

2 That is, the Duke of Albany, whose death is ma-chinated by practice or treason.

3 'Ingenious feeling.' Bullokar, in his Expositor, interprets ingenious by quick conceived, i. e. acute.
This makes Warburton's paraphrase unnecessary.

4 In the folio, the Gentleman and the Physician are one and the same person.

5 i. e. be better dressed, put on a better suit of clothes.
6 Memories are memorials.

7 A made intent is an intent formed. We say in common language to make a design, and to make a resolution.

8 That is, changed by his children; a father whose jarring senses have been untuned by the monstrous ingratitude of his daughters. So care-crazed, crazed by care; we-wearied, wearied by wo, &c.

9 This and the foregoing speech are not in the folio.
It has been already observed that Shakespeare considered soft music as favourable to sleep. Lear, we may suppose, had been thus composed to rest; and now the Physician desires louder music to be played, for the purpose of waking him. So again in Pericles, Cerimon, to recover Thaisa, who had been thrown into the sea,
says:—

'The rough and woful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.'
Again in the Winter's Tale:—

'Music awake her, strike!'

10 Restoration is no more than recovery personified.

Phys. Please you, draw near.—Louder the music
there.⁹

Cor. O, my dear father! Restoration,¹⁰ hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!
Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Had challeng'd pity on them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
[To stand against the deep dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch (poor perds!)
With this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night
Against my fire; And wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack!

'Tis wonder, that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.¹¹—He wakes; speak to him.

Phys. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? How fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong, to take me out o' the grave:—

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?
Lear. You are a spirit, I know; When did you die?
Cor. Still, still, far wide!

Phys. He's scarce awake; let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I?—Fair day-light?—

I am mightily abus'd.¹²—I should even die with pity,
To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—
I will not swear, these are my hands:—let's see;
I feel this pin prick. 'Would, I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O, look upon me sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me
No, sir, you must not kneel.¹³

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward;¹⁴ and, to deal plainly,
I fear, I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks, I should know you, and know this man—
Yet I am doubtful: for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not
Where I did lodge last night: Do not laugh at me;

11 The lines in crochets are not in the folio. The allusion is to the forlorn hope of an army, called in French enfants perdus; amongst other desperate adventures in which they were engaged, the night-watches seem to have been a common one. Warburton is wrong in supposing that those ordered on such services were lightly or badly armed; the contrary is clearly the fact, and to such a fact is the allusion of the poet, 'Poor perds, you are exposed to the most dangerous situation, not with the most proper arms, but with a mere helmet of thin and hoary hair.' The same allusion occurs in Davenant's Love and Honour, 1649:

'I have endured
Another night would tire a perds
More than a wet furrow and a great frost.'

So in Beaumont and Fletcher's Little French Lawyer:—
'I am set here like a perds'

'To watch a fellow that has wrong'd my mistress.'

12 i. e. had not all ended. So in Timon of Athens:—

'And dispossess her all.'

13 I am strangely imposed upon by appearances; I am in a strange mist of uncertainty.

14 'This circumstance is found in the old play of *King
Lear*, apparently written by another hand, and published before any edition of Shakespeare's play had made its appearance. As it is always difficult to say whether such accidental resemblances proceed from imitation, or a similarity of thinking on the same occasion, I can only point out this to the reader, to whose determination I leave the question.'—Steevens.

15 The folio here adds the words 'not an hour more or less.' Which, as they are absurd and superfluous, have been justly degraded as the interpolation of some inconsiderate player

For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am,

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, 'faith. I pray, weep not:

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know, you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,
You see, is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even' o'er the time he has lost.]
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more,
Till further settling.

Cor. Will't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me:

'Pray now, forget and forgive: I am old, and foolish.
[Exeunt LEAR, CORDELIA, Physician, and Attendants.]

[Gent. Holds it true, sir,

That the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 'tis said,

The bastard son of Gloucester.

Gent. They say, Edgar,

His banish'd son, is with the Earl of Kent

In Germany.

Kent. Report is changeable.

'Tis time to look about; the powers o' the kingdom
Approach apace.

Gent. The arbitrement is like to be a bloody.

Kent. Fare you well, sir.

[Exit.
Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly wrought,

Or well, or ill, as this day's battle's fought.']

[Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. The Camp of the British Forces, near Dover. Enter, with Drums, and Colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke, if his last purpose hold;
Or, whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: He's full of alteration,
And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.]

[To an Officer, who goes out.

Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'Tis to be doubted, madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord,

You know the goodness I intend upon you:

Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,

Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

1 'To make him even o'er the time he has lost,' is to make the occurrences of it plain or level to his troubled mind. See Baret's Alvearie, 1573, E. 307.

2 What is printed in crotchets is not in the folio. It is at least proper, if not necessary, and was perhaps only omitted by the players to abridge a play of very considerable length.

3 i. e. his settled resolution.

4 The first and last of these speeches within crotchets are inserted in Hanmer's, Theobald's, and Warburton's editions, the two intermediate ones, which were omitted in all others, are restored from the 4to. 1608. Whether they were left out through negligence, or because the imagery contained in them might be thought too luxuriant, I cannot determine; but surely a material injury is done to the character of the Bastard by the omission;
for he is made to deny that flatly at first, which the poet only meant to make him evade, or return slight answers to, till he is urged so far as to be obliged to shelter himself under an immediate falsehood. Query, however, whether Shakespeare meant us to believe that Edmund had actually found his way to the forefended (i. e. for-bidden) place?—Steevens.

5 Imposes on you; you are deceived.

6 'This business (says Albany) touches us, as France invades our land, not as it emboldens or encourages the

[Reg. But have you never found my brother's way
To the forefended place?

Edm. That thought abuses⁹ you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct
And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.]

Reg. I never shall endure her: Dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not:—

She, and the duke her husband,—

Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers

Gon. I had rather lose the battle, than that sister
Should loosen him and me. [Aside.

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be met.—

Sir, this I hear,—The king is come to his daughter,
With others, whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. [Where I could not be honest
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us as France invades our land,
Not bolds¹⁰ the king; with others, whom, I fear,
More just and heavy causes make oppose.

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg. Why is this reason'd?

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy:

For these domestic and particular broils¹¹

Are not to question here.

Alb. Let us then determine

With the ancient of war on our proceedings.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most convenient: 'pray you, go with us.
Gon. O, ho, I know the riddle: [Aside.] I will go.
As they are going out, enter EDMUND, disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,

Hear me one word.

Alb. I'll overtake you.—Speak.

[Exeunt EDMUND, REGAN, GONERIL, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter.

If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it; wretched though I seem,
I can produce a champion, that will prove
What is avouched there: If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases.¹² Fortune love you!

Alb. Stay till I have read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. [Exit.

Alb. Why, fare thee well; I will o'erlook thy paper.

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view, draw up your powers,
Here is the guess of their true strength and forces
By diligent discovery;¹³—but your haste
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time.¹⁴ [Exit.

king to assert his former title:— Thus in the ancient Interlude of Hycke Scorne:—

'Alas, that I had not one to bolde me.'

Again in Arthur Hull's translation of the fourth Iliad, 4to. 1681:—

'And Pallas bolde the Greekes,' &c.

'To make bolde, to encourage, animum addere.'— Baret.

7 The quartos have it:—

'For these domestic doore particulars.'

The folio reads in the subsequent line:

'Are not the question here.'

8 This speech is wanting in the folio.

9 I. e. all designs against your life will have an end,
These words are not in the quartos.

10 I. e. the conjecture, or what we can gather by diligent espial, of their strength. So in King Henry IV.
Part I. Act iv. Sc. 1:—

'—send discoverers forth

To know the number of our enemies.'

The passage has only been thought obscure for want of a right understanding of the word discovery, which neither Malone nor Steevens seems to have understood

11 I. e. be ready to meet the occasion.

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both! one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive; To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side,¹
Her husband being alive. Now, then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear, and to Cordelia,—
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon: for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.² [Exit.]

SCENE II. *A Field between the two Camps.—Alarm within. Enter, with Drum, and Colours, LEAR, CORDELIA, and their Forces; and exeunt. Enter EDGAR and GLOSTER.*³

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:
If ever I return to you again,
I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, sir!

[Exit EDGAR.]

Alarums; afterwards a Retreat. Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Away, old man, give me thy hand, away;
King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand, come on.

Glo. No further, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure

Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness is all.⁴ Come on.

Glo. And that's true too.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The British Camp near Dover. Enter, in Conquest, with Drum and Colours, EDMUND; LEAR and CORDELIA, as Prisoners; Officers, Soldiers, &c.

Edm. Some officers take them away; good guard;
Until their greater pleasure first be known
That are to censure⁵ them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who, with the best meaning, have incur'd the worst.⁶

For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down;
Myself could else outfrown false fortune's frown.
Shall we not see these daughters, and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down,
And ask of thee forgiveness: So we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh

1 Hardly shall I be able to make my side (i.e. my party) good; to maintain the game. Steevens has shown that it was a phrase commonly used at cards. So in the Paston Letters, vol. iv. p. 155:—'Heydon's son hath borne out the side stoutly here,' &c.

2 Such is my determination concerning Lear; as for my state, it requires now not deliberation, but defence and support.

3 Those who are curious to know how far Shakespeare was indebted to the Arcadia, will find a chapter entitled 'The Pitifull State and Storle of the Paphlagonian unkinde King, and his kinde Sonne; first related by the Sonne, then by the blinde Father,' at p. 141 of the edition of 1590, 4to.

4 I.e. to be ready, prepared, is all. So in Hamlet:—'It is not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all.'

5 I.e. to pass sentence or judgment on them. So in Othello:—'Remains the censure of this hellish villain.'

6 That is 'the worst that fortune can inflict.'

7 'As if we were angels, endowed with the power of prying into the original motives of action and the mysteries of conduct.'

8 Packs and sects are combinations and parties.

9 The thought is extremely noble, and expressed in a sublime of imagery that Seneca fell short of on a similar occasion:—'Ecce spectaculum dignum ad quod respiciat intenti operi suo deus; ecce par deo dignum vir fortis cum mala fortuna compositus.'—Warburton.

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out;—
And take upon us the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies:⁷ And we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects⁸ of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense.⁹ Have I caught thee?

He, that parts us, shall bring a brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like foxes.¹⁰ Wipe thine eyes;
The gowjeers shall devour them, flesh and fell,¹¹
Ere they shall make us weep: we'll see them starve first.

Come. [Exeunt LEAR and CORDELIA, guarded.]

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.
Take thou this note:¹² [Giving a Paper] go, follow them to prison:

One step I have advanc'd thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes: Know thou this,—that men
Are as the time is: to be tender-minded
Does not become a sword:—Thy great employment
Will not bear question:¹³ either say, thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Off. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it; and write happy, when thou hast done.

Mark.—I say instantly; and carry it so,

As I have set it down.

Off. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If it be man's work, I will do it. [Exit Officer.]

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shewn to-day your valiant strain,

And fortune led you well: You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife:
We do require them of you; so to use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit

To send the old and miserable king
To some retention, and appointed guard;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances¹⁴ in our eyes
Which do command them. With him I sent the queen;

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, to appear
Where you shall hold your session. [At this time

10 Alluding to the old practice of smoking foxes out of their holes. So in Harrington's translation of Ariosto, b. xxvii. stan. 17:—

'E'en as a fowle whom smoke and fire doth fright,

So as he dare not in the ground remaine,

Bolts out, and through the smoke and fire he sleeth

Into the tarrier's mouth, and there he dieth.'

11 'The gowjeers shall devour them flesh and fell.' The gowjeers, i.e. morbus Gallicus. Gouge, fr. is a soldier's trull; and as the disease was first dispersed over Europe by the French army, and the women who followed it, the first name it obtained among us was the gowjerries, i.e. the disease of the gouges.—Hammer The expression, however, soon became obscure, its origin not being generally known, and it was at length corrupted to the good year; a very opposite form of expression. In the present instance the quarras, following the common corruption, have the good yeares. Fleesh and fell is fleesh and skell. Thus in The Speculum Vitae, MS.:—

'That alle men sal a domesday rise

Oute of their graves in fleesh and felle.'

So in The Dyrar's Playe, Chester Mysteries, MS. in the Birk. Museum:—

'I made thee man of fleesh and fell.'

12 This was a warrant signed by the Bastard and Goneril, for the execution of Lear and Cordelia, referred to in a subsequent scene by Edmund.

13 I.e. admk of debate.

14 That is the lancemen we have hired by giving them press-money

We sweat and bleed : the friend hath lost his friend :
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness : —
The question of Cordelia, and her father,
Requires a fitter place.¹

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war,
Not as a brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks, our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our powers ;
Bore the commission² of my place and person ;
The which immediacy³ may well stand up,
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot :
In his own grace⁴ he doth exalt himself,
More than in your advancement.

Reg. In my rights,
By me invested, he compeers the best.

Gon. That were the most, if he should husband you.⁵

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla !
That eye, that told you so, look'd but a-squint.⁶

Reg. Lady, I am not well ; else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach.—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony ;
Dispose of them, of me ; the walls are thine :⁷
Witness the world, that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him ?

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.⁸

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine.⁹ [To EDMUND.]

Alb. Stay yet ; hear reason : Edmund, I arrest
thee

On capital treason ; and, in thine, attain't !¹⁰

This gilded serpent : [Pointing to GON.—for your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife ;

'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,

And I, her husband, contradict your bans.

If you will marry, make your love to me,

My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude !

Alb. Thou art arm'd, Gloucester :—Let the trumpet
sound :

If none appear to prove upon thy person,
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge ; [Throwing down a Glove.]

I'll prove it on thy heart,

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less

Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sick, O, sick !

Gon. If not, I'll ne'er trust poison. [Aside.]

Edm. There's my exchange : [Throwing down a Glove] what in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies :

Call by thy trumpet : he that dares approach,
On him, on you, (who not ?) I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly.

Alb. A herald, ho !

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald !

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue ;¹¹ for thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. This sickness grows upon me

Enter a Herald.

Alb. She is not well ; convey her to my tent.

[Exit REGAN, led.]

Come hither, herald.—Let the trumpet sound,—
And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet. [A Trumpet sounds.]

Herald reads.

If any man of quality, or degree, within the lists of the army, will maintain upon Edmund, supposed earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear at the third sound of the trumpet : He is bold in his defence.

Edm. Sound.

[1 Trumpet.]

Her. Again.

[2 Trumpet.]

Her. Again.

[3 Trumpet.]

[Trumpet answers within]

Enter EDMUND, armed, preceded by a Trumpet

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears Upon this call of the trumpet.¹²

Her.

What are you ?

Your name, your quality ? and why you answer
This present summons ?

Edg.

Know, my name is lost ;

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn, and canker-bit :
Yet am I noble as the adversary

I come to cope withal.

Alb.

Which is that adversary ?

Edg. What's he, that speaks for Edmund earl of Gloster ?

Edm. Himself ;—What say'st thou to him ?

Edg.

Draw thy sword ;

That if my speech offend a noble heart,

Thy arm may do thee justice : here is mine.

Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,

My oath, and my profession :¹³ I protest,—

Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,

Despite thy victor sword, and fire-new fortune,

Thy valour, and thy heart,—thou art a traitor :

False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father ;

Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince ;

And, from the extremest upward of thy head,

To the descent and dust beneath thy feet,

A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou, No,

This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent

To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak,

Thou liest.

Edm.

In wisdom, I should ask thy name ;¹⁴
But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
And that thy tongue some 'say'¹⁵ of breeding breathes,
What safe and nicely¹⁶ I might well delay

1 I. e. the determination of what shall be done with Cordelia and her father, should be reserved for greater privacy.

2 Commission for authority.

3 Immediacy is, I think, close and immediate connexion with me, and direct authority from me. Immediacy is the reading of the quartos.

4 Grace here means noble deportment. The folio has addition instead of advancement in the next line.

5 'If he were married to you, you could not say more than this, nor could he enjoy greater power.' In the folio this line is given to Albany.

6 Alluding to the proverb, 'Love being jealous makes a good eye look a-squint.' So Milton :—

'And gladly banish squint suspicion.' Comus.

7 A metaphor taken from the camp, and signifying to surrender at discretion. This line is not in the quartos.

8 'To obstruct their union lies not in your good pleasure, your veto will avail nothing.'

9 It appears from this speech that Regan did not know that Albany had discharged her forces. This line is given to Edmund in the quartos.

10 The folio reads 'thy arrest.'

11 I. e. valour ; a Roman sense of the word. Thus Raleigh :—'The conquest of Palestine with singular virtue they performed.'

12 This is according to the ceremonials of the trial by combat in cases criminal. 'The appellant and his procurator first come to the gate. The constable and marshal demand by voice of herald, what he is, and why he comes so arrayed.'—Selden's Duella.

13 'Here I draw my sword. Behold, it is the privilege or right of my profession to draw it against a traitor.' It is the right of bringing the charge, and maintaining it with his sword, which Edgar calls the privilege of his profession.

14 Because, if his adversary was not of equal rank, Edmund might have declined the combat. Goneril afterwards says :—

'By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer An unknown opposite.'

15 Say, or assay, is a sample, a taste. So in the preface to Maurice Kyffin's translation of the Andria of Terence, 1589 :—'Some other like places I could recite, but these shall suffice for a say.'

16 'What safe and nicely I might well delay.'

This seems to mean 'What I might safely well delay,

By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn :
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head ;
With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart ;
Which, (for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,)
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest forever.—Trumpets, speak.
[Alarums. They fight, EDMUND falls.]

Alb. O, save him, save him !

Gen. This is mere practice, Gloucester :
By the law of arms, thou wast not bound to answer
An unknown opposite ; thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozen'd and beguil'd.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it :—Hold, sir :—
Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil :
No tearing, lady ; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the Letter to EDMUND.]

Gen. Say, if I do ; the laws are mine, not thine :
Who shall arraign me for't ?

Alb. Most monstrous !
Know'st thou this paper ?

Gen. Ask me not what I know.

[Exit GLOUCESTER.]

Alb. Go after her : she's desperate ; govern her.

[To an Officer, who goes out.]

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that have
I done ;

And much more : the time will bring it out ;
'Tis past, and so am I : But what art thou,
That hast this fortune on me ? If thou art noble,
I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.⁴
I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund ;
If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.
The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us :
The dark and vicious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.

Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true ;
The wheel is come full circle ; I am here.

Alb. Methought, thy very gait did prophesy
A royal nobleness :—I must embrace thee ;
Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father.

Edg. Worthy prince, I know't.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself ?
How have you known the miseries of your father ?

Edg. By nursing them, my lord.—List a brief tale :—

And, when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst !
The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near, (O, our lives' sweetness !
That we the pain of death would hourly die,⁵
Rather than die at once !) taught me to shift
Into a madman's rage ; to assume a semblance
That very dogs disdain'd : and in this habit

Met I my father with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones new lost :⁶ became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair ;
Never, (O, fault !) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until, some half hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and, from first to last,
Told him my pilgrimage ; But his flaw'd heart,
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support !)
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good : but speak you on ;
You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold it in ;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this.

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow, but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.⁷

Whilst I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhor'd society ; but then finding
Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strong arms
He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven : threw him⁸ on my father ;
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd : which is recounting
His grief grow puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack : Twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him trans'd.

Alb. But who was this ?
Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent ; who in disguise

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave.]

Enter a Gentleman hastily, with a bloody Knife.

Gen. Help ! help ! O, help !

Edg. What kind of help ?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife ?

Gen. 'Tis hot, it smokes ;

It came even from the heart of—

Alb. Who, man ? speak.

Gen. Your lady, sir, your lady : and her sister
By her is poison'd ; she hath confess'd it.¹¹

Edm. I was contracted to them both ; all three
Now marry in an instant.

Alb. Produces their bodies, be they alive or dead !—
This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity.¹² [Exit Gentleman.]

Enter KENT.

Here comes Kent, sir.

Edg. O ! it is he.

have seem'd a period to such as love not sorrow, but—another, i. e. but I must add another, i. e. another period, another kind of conclusion to my story, such as will increase the horrors of what has been already told.⁹ It will be necessary, if we admit this interpretation, to point the passage thus :—

—but another :—
(To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.)
Whilst I was big, &c.

Malone's explanation is :—'This would have seem'd the utmost completion of woe, to such as do not delight in sorrow, but another, of a different disposition, to amplify misery "would give more strength to which hath too much." Referring to the Bastard's desiring to hear more, and to Albany's thinking that enough had been said.

10 The quarto reads 'threw me on my father.'— Steevens thus defends the present reading :—'There is a tragic propriety in Kent's throwing himself on the body of a deceased friend ; but this propriety is lost in the act of clumsily tumbling a son over the lifeless remains of his father.'

11 Thus the quarto. The folio reads 'she confesses it.'

12 'If Shakespeare had studied Aristotle all his life, he would not, perhaps, have been able to mark with more precision the distinct operations of terror and pity.'
Tyrwhitt.

⁴ I acted punctiliously. This line is omitted in the quartos, but without it the subsequent line is nonsense.

1 To that place where they shall rest for ever : i. e.
thy heart.

2 Albany desires that Edmund's life may be spared at present, only to obtain his confession, and to convict him openly by his own letter.

3 'Knewest thou these letters ?' says Lear to Regan, in the old anonymous play, when he shows her both her own and her sister's letters, which were written to procure her death, upon which she smashes the letters and tears them.

4 Shakespeare gives his heathens the sentiments and practices of Christianity. In Hamlet there is the same solemn act of final reconciliation, but with exact propriety, for the personages are Christians.

5 Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet.

6 The folio reads 'to plague us.'

7 'To die hourly the pains of death,' is a periphrasis for 'to suffer hourly the pains of death.' The quartos read :—

'That with the pain of death would hourly die.'

8 So in Pericles :—

'Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
Which Pericles hath lost.'

9 The lines within crochets are not in the folio.

10 Of this difficult passage, which is probably corrupt, Steevens gives the following explanation :—'This would

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my king and master eye good night;
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of us forgot!—
Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's Cordelia?—

See'st thou this object, Kent?

[The Bodies of GONERIL and REGAN are brought in.]

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm. Yet Edmund was below'd:
The one the other poison'd for my sake,
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so.—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—Some good I mean to do,
Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send,—
Be brief in it,—to the castle, for my writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:—
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O, run—

Edg. To whom, my lord?—Who has the office?
send

Thy token of reprieve.

Edm. Well thought on; take my sword,
Give it the captain.

Alb. Haste thee, for thy life. [Exit EDMUND.]

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid herself.

Alb. The gods defend her! Bear him hence awhile. [EDMUND is borne off.]

Enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his Arms,^a EDGAR, Officer, and others.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O, you are men of stones;

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack:—O, she is gone for ever!—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth:—Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!^b

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,

¹ To ferdo signifies to destroy. It is used again in Hamlet, Act v.:

“—did, with desperate hand,

Ferdo its own life.”

² The old historians say that Cordelia retired with victory from the battle, which she conducted in her father's cause, and thereby replaced him on the throne: but in a subsequent one fought against her, (after the death of the old king,) by the sons of Regan and Goneril, she was taken, and died miserably in prison (Geoffrey, of Monmouth, the original relater of the story, says that she killed herself.) The dramatic writers of Shakespeare's age suffered as small a number of their heroes and heroines to escape as possible; nor could the filial piety of this lady, any more than the innocence of Ophelia, prevail on the poet to extend her life beyond her misfortunes.—Stevens.

³ Kent, in contemplating the unexampled scene of exquisite affection which was then before him, and the unnatural attempt of Goneril and Regan against their father's life, recollects those passages of St. Mark's Gospel in which Christ foretells to his disciples the end of the world, and hence his question, ‘Is this the promised end of all things, which has been foretold to us?’ To which Edgar adds, or only a representation or resemblance of that horror? So Macbeth, when he calls upon Banquo, Malcolm, &c. to view Duncan murdered, says:—

“—up, up, and see

The great doom's image! Malcolm! Banquo!

As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites,

To countenance this horror.”

There is an allusion to the same passage of Scripture in a speech of Gloucester in the second scene of the first act.—Mason.

⁴ To cease, is to die. Albany is looking with atten-

It is a chance that does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O, my good master! [Kneeling.]

Lear. Pr'ythee, away.

Edg.

‘Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all! I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever! Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha! What is't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft, Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in woman:— I kill'd the slave that was a-hanging thee.

Off. ‘Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear.

Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion I would have made them skip: I am old now.

And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are you? Mine eyes are none o' the best:—I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated, One of them we behold.^a Lear. This is a dull sight: Are you not Kent?

Kent.

The same;

Your servant Kent: Where is your servant Cains?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that; He'll strike, and quickly too:—He's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord, I am the very man;—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,

Have follow'd thy sad steps.

Lear.

You are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else; all's cheerless, dark, and deadly.—

Your eldest daughters have fore-doom'd^d themselves,

And desperately are dead.

Lear.

Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he sees; and vain it is That we present us to him.

Edg.

Very bootless.

Enter an Officer.

Off. Edmund is dead, my lord.

Alb.

That's but a trifle here.—

You lords, and noble friends, know our intent. What comfort to this great decay^e may come,

Shall be applied: for us, we will resign,
During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power:—You, to your rights;
[To EDMUND and KENT.]

With boot, and such addition as your honours

tion on the pains employed by Lear to recover his child, and knows to what miseries he must survive, when he finds them to be ineffectual. Having these images present to his eyes and imagination, he cries out, ‘Rather fall, and cease to be at once, than continue in existence only to be wretched.’

⁵ It is difficult for an author who never peruses his first works to avoid repeating some of the same thoughts in his later productions. What Lear has just said has been anticipated by Justice Shallow, in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—‘I have seen the time with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats.’ It is again repeated in Othello:—

“—I have seen the day

That with this little arm and this good sword

I have made my way, &c.”

⁶ ‘If Fortune, to display the plenitude of her power, should brag of two persons, one of whom she had highly elevated, and the other she had wofully depressed we now behold the latter.’ The quarto reads ‘She lov'd or hated,’ which confirms this sense.

⁷ I think, with Mr. Blakeway, that Lear means his eyesight was bedimmed either by excess of grief, or, as is usual, by the approach of death. So in Barot, ‘Dull eyes, inertes oculi:—’ To dull the eyesight, hebetare oculos.’ Albany says of Lear below, ‘He knows not what he sees,’ where the folio erroneously reads ‘he says.’

⁸ Thus the quartos: the folio reads foredone, which is probably right. See note 1, in the preceding column.

⁹ ‘This great decay’ is Lear, whom Shakespeare poetically calls so; and means the same as if he had said, ‘this piece of decayed royalty,’ ‘this ruined majesty.’ Gloucester calls him in a preceding scene ‘ruin'd piece of nature.’

Have more than merited!—All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings.—O, see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no,
life:

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? O, thou wilt come no
more,

Never, never, never, never!—

'Pray you, undo this button: Thank you, sir.—

Do you see this?—Look on her,—look,—her lips.—
Look there, look there!—

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord,—

Kent. Break, heart; I pry thee, break!

Edg. Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him,

That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

Edg. O, he is gone indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long:
He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence.—Our present business

Is general wo. Friends of my soul, you twain
[To Kent and Edgar.]

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;

My master calls, and I must not say, no.

Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey;
Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.

The oldest hath borne most: we, that are young,
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.

[Exeunt, with a dead March.]

THE tragedy of Lear is deservedly celebrated among the dramas of Shakspeare. There is perhaps no play which keeps the attention so strongly fixed; which so much agitates our passions, and interests our curiosity. The artful involutions of distinct interests, the striking oppositions of contrary characters, the sudden changes of fortune, and the quick succession of events, fill the mind with a perpetual tumult of indignation, pity, and hope. There is no scene which does not contribute to the aggravation of the distress or conduct of the action, and scarce a line which does not conduce to the progress of the scene. So powerful is the current of the poet's imagination, that the mind, which once ventures within it, is hurried irresistibly along.

On the seeming improbability of Lear's conduct, it may be observed, that he is represented according to 1 These lines are addressed to Kent as well as to Edgar, else the word honours would have been in the plural number. Bolt is advantage, increase. By honours is meant, honourable conduct.

2 This is an expression of tenderness for his dead Cordelia, (not his fool, as some have thought,) on whose lips he is still intent, and dies while he is searching there for indications of life. 'Poor fool,' in the age of Shakspeare, was an expression of endearment. So in Twelfth Night:—'Alas, poor fool, how have they baffled thee.' Again, in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—'Alas, poor fool, why do I pity him?' With other instances which will present themselves to the reader's memory.

The fool of Lear was long ago forgotten; having filled the space allotted to him in the arrangement of the play, he appears to have been silently withdrawn in the sixth scene of the third act. Besides this, Cordelia was recently hang'd but we know not that the Fool had suffered in the same manner, nor can imagine why he should.—That the thoughts of a father, in the bitterness of all moments, when his favourite child lay dead in his arms, should recur to the antic, who had formerly diverted him, has somewhat in it that cannot be reconciled to the idea of genuine despair and sorrow.—Steevens.

There is an ingenious note by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the variorum Shakspeare, for which I regret I cannot find space, sustaining a contrary opinion; but, as Malone observes, 'Lear from the time of his entrance in this scene to his uttering these words, and from thence to his death, is wholly occupied by the loss of his daughter.—He is now in the agony of death, and surely at such a time, when his heart was just breaking, it would be highly unnatural that he should think of his fool. He had just seen his daughter hang'd, having unfortunately been admitted too late to preserve her life, though time enough to punish the perpetrator of the act.'

histories at that time vulgarly received as true. And, perhaps, if we turn our thoughts upon the barbarity and ignorance of the age to which this story is referred, it will appear not so unlikely as while we estimate Lear's manners by our own. Such preference of one daughter to another, or resignation of dominion on such conditions, would be yet credible, if told of a petty prince of Guinea or Madagascar. Shakspeare, indeed, by the mention of his earls and dukes, has given us the idea of times more civilized, and of life regulated by softer manners; and the truth is, that though he so nicely discriminates, and so minutely describes the characters of men, he commonly neglects and confounds the characters of ages, by mingling customs ancient and modern, English and foreign.

My learned friend, Mr. Warton, who has, in The Advertiser, very minutely criticised this play, remarks, that the instances of cruelty are too savage and shocking, and that the intervention of Edmund destroys the simplicity of the story. These objections may, I think, be answered by repeating that the cruelty of the daughters is an historical fact, to which the poet has added little, having only drawn it into a series of dialogue and action. But I am not able to apologize with equal plausibility for the extrusion of Gloucester's eyes, which seems an act too horrid to be endured in dramatic exhibition, and such as must always compel the mind to relieve its distress by incredulity. Yet let it be remembered that our author well knew what would please the audience for which he wrote.

The injury done by Edmund to the simplicity of the action is abundantly recompensed by the addition of variety, by the art with which he is made to co-operate with the chief design, and the opportunity which he gives the poet of combining perjury with perjury, and connecting the wicked son with the wicked daughters, to impress this important moral, that villainy is never at a stop, that crimes lead to crimes, and at last terminate in ruin.

But though this moral be incidentally enforced, Shakspeare has suffered the virtue of Cordelia to perish in a just cause, contrary to the natural ideas of justice, to the hope of the reader, and what is yet more strange, to the faith of chronicles. Yet this conduct is justified by The Spectator, who blames Tate for giving Cordelia success and happiness in his alteration, and declares, that in his opinion the tragedy has lost half its beauty. Dennis has remarked, whether justly or not, that, to secure the favourable reception of Cato, the town was poisoned with much false and abominable criticism, and that endeavours had been used to discredit and destroy poetical justice. A play in which the wicked prosper, and the virtuous miscarry, may doubtless be good, because it is a just representation of the common events of human life: but since all reasonable beings naturally love justice, I cannot easily be persuaded that the observation of justice makes a play worse: or that, if other excellencies are equal, the audience will not always rise better pleased from the final triumph of persecuted virtue.

In the present case the public has decided.* Cordelia, from the time of Tate has always retired with victory and felicity. And, if my sensations could add any thing to the general suffrage, I might relate, I was many years ago so shocked by Cordelia's death, that I know not whether I ever endured to read again the last scenes of the play till I undertook to revise them as an editor.

There is another controversy among the critics concerning this play. It is disputed whether the predominant image in Lear's disordered mind be the loss of his kingdom or the cruelty of his daughters. Mr. Murphy, a very judicious critic, has evinced by induction of particular passages, that the cruelty of his daughters is the primary source of his distress, and that the loss of royalty affects him only as a secondary and subordinate evil. He observes, with great justness, that Lear would move our compassion but little, did we not rather consider the injured father than the degraded king.

* Dr. Johnson should rather have said that the managers of the theatres royal have decided, and the public has been obliged to acquiesce in their decision. The altered play has the upper gallery on its side; the original drama was patronised by Addison:—

Victrix causa. Dis placuit sed victa Catoni.
Steevens.

The story of this play, except the episode of Edmund, which is derived, I think, from Sidney, is taken originally from Geoffrey of Monmouth, whom Holinshed generally copied; but perhaps immediately from an old historical ballad. My reason for believing that the play was posterior to the ballad, rather than the ballad to the play, is, that the ballad has nothing of Shakspeare's nocturnal tempest, which is too striking to have been omitted, and that it follows the chronicle: it has the rudiments of the play, but none of its amplifications: it first hinted Lear's madness, but did not array it in circumstances. The writer of the ballad added something to the history, which is a proof that he would have added more, if more had occurred to his mind, and more must have occurred if he had seen Shakspeare. JOHNSON

ROMEO AND JULIET.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE original relater of this story appears to have been Luigi da Porto, a gentleman of Vicenza, who died in 1529. His novel seems not to have been printed till some years after his death; being first published at Venice, in 1530, under the title of 'La Giuletta:' there is, however, a dateless copy by the same printer. In the dedication to Madonna Lucina Savorgana, he tells her that the story was related to him by one of his archers, named Peregrino, a native of Verona, while serving in Friuli, to beguile the solitary road that leads from Gradisca to Udine.

Girolamo della Corte, in his History of Verona, relates it circumstantially as a true event, occurring in 1303;* but Maffei does not give him the highest credit as an historian: he carries his history down to the year 1660, and probably adopted the novel to grace his book. The earlier annals of Verona, and above all, Torrisio Sarayna, who published, in 1543, 'Le Histoires e Fatti de Veronesi nelli Tempi d'ill Popolo e Signori Scaligeri,' are entirely silent upon the subject, though some other domestic tragedies grace their narrations.

As to the origin of this interesting story, Mr. Douce has observed that its material incidents are to be found in the Ephesiaca of Xenophon of Ephesus, a Greek romance of the middle ages; he admits, indeed, that this work was not published nor translated in the time of Luigi da Porto, but suggests that he might have seen a copy of the original in manuscript. Mr. Dunlop, in his History of Fiction, has traced it to the thirty-second novel of Massuccio Salernitano, whose 'Novellino,' a collection of tales, was first printed in 1476. The hero of Massuccio is named Mariotto di Giannozza, and his catastrophe is different; yet there are sufficient points of resemblance between the two narratives. Mr. Boswell observes, that 'we may perhaps carry the fiction back to a much greater antiquity, and doubts whether, after all, it is not the tale of Pyramus and Thisbe, enlarged and varied by the luxuriant imagination of the novelist.'

The story is also to be found in the second volume of the Novels of Bandello, (Novel ix.): and it is remarkable that he says it was related to him, when at the baths of Caldara, by the Captain Alexander Peregrino, a native of Verona; we may presume the same person from whom Da Porto received it: unless this appropriation is to be considered supposititious. The story also exists in Italian verse; and I had once a glance of a copy of it in that form, but neglected to note the title or date, and had not time for a more particular examination. It was translated from the Italian of Bandello into French, by Pierre Boileau, who varies from his original in many particulars; and, from the French, Painter gave a translation in the second volume of his Palace of Pleasure, 1567, which he entitled Rhorneo and Julietta. From Boileau's novel the same story was, in 1562, formed into an English poem, with considerable alterations and large additions, by Arthur Brooke; this poem the curious reader will find reprinted entire in the variorum editions of Shakspeare: it was originally printed by Richard Tottel, with the following title: 'The Tragical Hystorye of Romeus and Juliet, written first in Italian, by Bandell; and nowe in English, by Ar. Br.' Upon this piece Malone has shown, by unequivocal testimony, that the play was formed: numerous circumstances are introduced from the poem, which the novelist would not have supplied; and even the identity of expression, which not unfrequently occurs, is sufficient to settle the question. Stevens, without expressly controverting the fact, endeavoured to throw a doubt upon it by his repeated quotations from the Palace of Pleasure. In two passages, it is true, he has quoted Painter, where Brooke is silent; but very little weight belongs to either of them. In one there is very little resemblance; and in the other the circumstance might be inferred from the poem, though not exactly specified. The poem of Arthur Brooke was republished in 1587, with the title thus amplified:—'Containing a rare Example of true Constancie: with the subtill Counsell and Practices of an old Fryer, and their ill Event.'

In the preface to Arthur Brooke's poem there is a very curious passage, in which he says, 'I saw the same argument lately set forth on stage with more commendation than I can looke for, (being there much better set forth then I have or can doe.)' He has not, however, stated in what country this play was represented: the rude state of our drama, prior to 1582, renders it improbable that it was in England. 'Yet, (says Mr. Boswell,) I cannot but be of opinion that Romeo and Juliet may be added to the list, already numerous, of plays in which our great poet has had a dramatic precursor, and that some slight remains of the old play are still to be traced in the earliest quarto.'

'The story has at all times been eminently popular in all parts of Europe. A Spanish play was formed on it by Lope de Vega, entitled Los Castelvies y Monteses; and another in the same language, by Don Francisco de Roxas, under the name of Los Vandos de Verona. In Italy, as may well be supposed, it has not been neglected. The modern productions on this subject are too numerous to be specified; but, as early as 1678, Luigi Groto produced a drama upon the subject, called Hadriana, of which an analysis may be found in Mr. Walker's Memoir on Italian Tragedy. Groto has stated in his prologue, that the story is drawn from the ancient history of Adria, his native place; so that Verona is not the only place that has appropriated this interesting fable.

This has been generally considered one of Shakspeare's earliest plays; and Schlegel has eloquently said, that 'it shines with the colours of the dawn of morning, but a dawn whose purple clouds already announce the thunder of a sultry day.' 'Romeo and Juliet (says the same admirable critic) is a picture of love and its pitiable fate, in a world whose atmosphere is too rough for this tenderest blossom of human life. Two beings, created for each other, feel mutual love at first glance; every consideration disappears before the irresistible influence of living in one another; they join themselves secretly, under circumstances hostile in the

* Captain Breval, in his Travels, tells us that he was shown at Verona what was called the tomb of these unhappy lovers; and that, on a strict inquiry into the histories of Verona, he found that Shakspeare had varied very little from the truth, either in the names, characters, or other circumstances of this play. The fact seems to be, that the invention of the novelist has been adopted into the popular history of the city, just as Shakspeare's historical dramas furnish numbers with their notions of the events to which they relate.

† Malone thinks that the foundation of the play might be laid in 1591, and finished in 1596. Mr. George Chalmers places the date of its composition in the spring of 1592. And Dr. Drake, with greater probability, ascribes it to 1593. There are four early quarto editions in 1597, 1599, 1608, and one without a date. The first edition is less ample than those which succeed. Shakspeare appears to have revised the play; but in the succeeding impressions no fresh incidents are introduced, the alterations are merely additions to the length of particular speeches and scenes. The principal variations are pointed out in the notes.

highest degree to their union, relying merely on the protection of an invisible power. By unfriendly events following blow upon blow, their heroic constancy is exposed to all manner of trials, till forcibly separated from each other, by a voluntary death they are united in the grave to meet again in another world. All this is to be found in the beautiful story which Shakespeare has not invented, and which, however simply told, will always excite a tender sympathy: but it was reserved for Shakespeare to unite purity of heart and the glow of imagination, sweetness and dignity of manners and passionate violence, in one ideal picture. By the manner in which he has handled it, it has become a glorious song of praise on that inexpressible feeling which ennobles the soul, and gives to it its highest sublimity, and which elevates even the senses themselves into soul, and at the same time is a melancholy elegy on its frailty from its own nature and external circumstances; at once the dedication and the burial of love. It appears here like a heavenly spark, that, descending to the earth, is converted into a flash of lightning, by which mortal creatures are almost in the same moment set on fire and consumed. Whatever is most intoxicating in the odour of a southern spring, languishing in the song of the nightingale, or voluptuous in the first opening of the rose, is to be found in this poem. But even more rapidly than the earliest blossoms of youth and beauty decay, it hurries on from the first timidly-bold declaration of love and modest return, to the most unlimited passion, to an irrevocable union; then, amidst alternating storms of rapture and despair, to the death of the two lovers, who still appear enviable as their love survives them, and as by their death they have obtained a triumph over every separating power. The sweetest and the bitterest, love and hatred, festivity and dark forebodings, tender embraces and sepulchres, the fulness of life and self-annihilation, are all here brought close to each other; and all these contrasts are so blended in the harmonious and wonderful work into a unity of impression, that the echo which the whole leaves behind in the mind resembles a single but endless sigh.

'The excellent dramatic arrangement, the signification of each character in its place, the judicious selection of all the circumstances, even the most minute,' have been pointed out by Schlegel in a dissertation referred to in a note at the end of the play; in which he remarks, that 'there can be nothing more diffuse, more wearisome, than the rhyming history, which Shakespeare's genius, "like richest alchemy," has changed to beauty and to worthiness.' Nothing but the delight of seeing into this wonderful metamorphosis can compensate for the laborious task of reading through more than three thousand six and seven-footed lambics, which, in respect of every thing that amuses, affects, and enraptures us in this play, are as a mere blank leaf.—Here all interest is entirely smothered under the coarse, heavy pretensions of an elaborate exposition. How much was to be cleared away, before life could be breathed into the shapeless mass! In many parts what is here given bears the same relation to what Shakespeare has made out of it, which any common description of a thing bears to the thing itself. Thus out of the following hint—

'A courtier, that eche-where was highly had in pryce,
For he was courteous of his speche and pleasant of devise:

Even as a lyon would among the lambes be bolde,
Such was emonge the bashfull mayden Mercutio to be-holde;'

and the addition that the said Mercutio had from his swathing-bands constantly had cold hands,—has arisen a splendid character decked out with the utmost profusion of wit. Not to mention a number of nicer deviations, we find also some important incidents from this invention; for instance, the meeting and the combat between Paris and Romeo at Juliet's grave.—Shakespeare knew how to transform by enchantment letters into spirit, a workman's dross into a poetical master piece.

'Lessing declared Romeo and Juliet to be the only tragedy, that he knew, which love himself had assisted to compose. I know not (says Schlegel) how to end more gracefully than with these simple words, wherein so much lies:—One may call this poem an harmonious miracle, whose component parts that heavenly power alone could so melt together. It is at the same time enchantingly sweet and sorrowful, pure and glowing, gentle and impetuous, full of elegiac softness, and tragically overpowering.'

PROLOGUE.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge, break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.

The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, might could remove,
Is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

SCENE, during the greater Part of the Play, in Verona; once, in the Fifth Act, at Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I. A public Place. Enter Sampson and Gregory, armed with Swords and Bucklers.

Sampson.

GREGORY, o' my word, we'll not carry coals.¹

Gre. No, for then we should be colliers.

Sam. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.

Gre. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.

Sam. I strike quickly, being moved.

Gre. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.

Sam. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.

Gre. To move, is—to stir; and to be valiant, is—to stand to it: therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou run'st away.

Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand: I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.

Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.

Sam. True; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall:—therefore I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.

Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.

Sam. 'Tis all one, I will shew myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.

Gre. The heads of the maids?

Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads: take it in what sense thou wilt.

Gre. They must take it in sense that feel it.

Sam. Me they shall feel, while I am able to stand: and, 'tis known I am a pretty piece of flesh.

Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hadst, thou hadst been poor John.² Draw thy tool; here comes two of the house of the Montagues.³

Enter ABRAHAM and BALTHAZAR.

Sam. My naked weapon is out; quarrel, I will back thee.

Gre. How? turn thy back, and run?

Sam. Fear me not.

Gre. No, marry: I fear thee!

Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.

Gre. I will frown, as I pass by; and let them take it as they list.

Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb⁴ at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.

Ab. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.

1 To carry coals is to put up with insults, to submit to any degradation. Anciently, in great families, the scullions, turnspits, and carriers of wood and coals were esteemed the very lowest of menials, the drudges of all the rest. Such attendants upon the royal household, in progresses, were called the black-guard; and hence the origin of that term. Thus in May Day, a Comedy by Geo. Chapman, 1609:—'You must swear by no man's beard but your own; for that may breed a quarrel: above all things, you must carry no coals.' Again, in the same play:—'Now my ancient being of an uncoil-carrying spirit,' &c. And in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humour:—'Here comes one that will carry coals; ergo, will hold my dog.' Again in King Henry V. Act iii. Sc. 2:—'At Calais they stole a firehorse! I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals.'

2 Poor John is Kate, dried and salted.

3 The disregard of concord is in character. It should be observed that the partisans of the Montague family were a token in their hats in order to distinguish them from their enemies the Capulets. Hence throughout this play they are known at a distance. Gascoigne adverts to this circumstance in a Masque written for Viscount Montacute, in 1575:—

'And for a further proof, he shewed in his hat

Thy token, which the Montacutes did beare always,

For that

They covet to be knowne from Capels, where they pass

For ancient grutch whych long ago tweene these two houses was'

Ab. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?

Sam. Is the law on our side, if I say—ay?

Gre. No.

Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir; but I bite my thumb, sir.

Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?

Ab. Quarrel, sir? no, sir.

Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.

Ab. No better.

Sam. Well, sir.

Enter BENVOLIO, at a distance.

Gre. Say—better; here comes one of my master's kinsmen.⁵

Sam. Yes, better, sir.

Ab. You lie.

Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swashing⁶ blow.

Ben. Part, fools; put up your swords; you know not what you do.

[Beats down their Swords.]

Enter TYBALT.

Tyb. What art thou drawn among these heartless hinds?

Turn thee, Benvolio, look upon thy death.

Ben. I do but keep the peace; put up thy sword, Or manage it to part these men with me.

Tyb. What, drawn, and talk of peace? I hate the word,

As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee:

Have at thee, coward.

[They fight. Enter several Partisans of both Houses, who join the fray; then enter Citizens, with Clubs.]

1 Cit. Clubs, bills, and partizans! strike! beat them down!

Down with the Capulets! down with the Montagues!

Enter CAPULET, in his Gown; and LADY CAPULET.

Cap. What noise is this?—Give me my long sword,⁷ ho!

La. Cap. A crutch, a crutch!—Why call you for Cap. My sword, I say!—Old Montague is come, And flourishes his blade in spite of me.

Enter MONTAGUE and LADY MONTAGUE.

Mon. Thou villain Capulet,—Hold me not, let me go.

La. Mon. Thou shalt not stir one foot to seek a foe.

Enter Prince, with Attendants.

Prin. Rebellious subjects, enemies to peace, Profaners of this neighbour-stained steel,—Will they not hear!—what ho! you men, you beasts,—

That quench the fire of your pernicious rage With purple fountains issuing from your veins,

4 This mode of insult, in order to begin a quarrel, seems to have been common in Shakespeare's time. Decker, in his Dead Term, 1608, describing the various groups that daily frequented St. Paul's Church, says, 'What swearing is there, what shuffling, what jangling, what jeering, what hitting of thumbs, to begot quarrels!' And Lodge, in his Wits Miserie, 1606:—'Behold, next I see Contempts marching forth, giving me the five with his thumbs in his mouth.' The mode in which this contemptuous action was performed is thus described by Cotgrave, in a passage which has escaped the industry of all the commentators:—'Faire la nique: to mocke by nodding or lifting up of the chine; or more properly, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumbe naille into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knacke.' So in Randolph's Muses' Looking Glass:—

———— Dogs and pistols!

To bite his thumb at me!

Wear I a sword

To see men bite their thumbs?"

5 Gregory is a servant of the Capulets: he must therefore mean Tybalt, who enters immediately after Benvolio.

6 i. e. swagging or dashing.

7 The long sword was the weapon used in active warfare; a lighter, shorter, and less desperate weapon was worn for ornament, to which we have other allusions.

———— No sword worn, but one to dance with.

On pain of torture, from those bloody hands
 Throw your mistemper'd weapons to the ground,
 And hear the sentence of your moved prince.—
 Three civil brawls, bred of an airy word,
 By thee, old Capulet and Montague,
 Have thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets;
 And made Verona's ancient citizens
 Cast by their grave besecming ornaments,
 To wield old partisans, in hands as old,
 Canker'd with peace, to part your canker'd hate:
 If ever you disturb our streets again,
 Your lives shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
 For this time, all the rest depart away:
 You, Capulet, shall go along with me;
 And Montague, come you this afternoon,
 To know our further pleasure in this case,
 To old Free-town,² our common judgment-place.
 Once more, on pain of death, all men depart.

[Exeunt Prince, and Attendants; CAPULET, LA. CAP. TYBALT, Citizens and Servants.]

Mon. Who set this ancient quarrel new abroad?
 Speak, nephew, were you by, when it began?

Ben. Here were the servants of your adversary,
 And yours, close fighting ere I did approach:
 I drew to part them; in the instant came
 The fiery Tybalt, with his sword prepar'd;
 Which, as he breath'd defiance to my ears,
 He swung about his head, and cut the winds,
 Who, nothing hurt withal, hiss'd him in scorn:
 While we were interchanging thrusts and blows,
 Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
 Till the prince came, who parted either part.

La. Mon. O, where is Romeo?—saw you him to-day?

Right glad I am, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an hour before the worshipp'd sun
 Peer'd forth the golden window of the east,¹
 A troubled mind drove me to walk abroad;
 Where,—underneath the grove of sycamore,
 That westward rooteth from the city's side,—
 So early walking did I see your son:
 Towards him I made; but he was 'ware of me,
 And stole into the covert of the wood:
 I, measuring his affections by my own,—
 That most are busied when they are most alone,— Pursu'd my humour, not pursuing his,
 And gladly shunn'd who gladly fled from me.

Mon. Many a morning hath he there been seen,
 With tears augmenting the fresh morning's dew,
 Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs:
 But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
 Should in the furthest east begin to draw
 The shady curtains from Aurora's bed,
 Away from light steals home my heavy son,
 And private in his chamber pens himself;
 Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out,
 And makes himself an artificial night:
 Black and portentous must this humour prove,
 Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

1 i. e. angry weapons. So in King John:—

'This inundation of mistemper'd humour,' &c.

2 The poet found the name of this place in Brooke's Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet, 1592. It is there said to be the castle of the Capulets.

3 The same thought occurs in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10:—

'Early before the morn with cremosin ray
 The windows of bright heaven opened had,
 Through which into the world the dawning day
 Might look,' &c.

Again in Summa Totale, or All in All, 4to. 1607:—
 'Now heaven's bright eye (awake by Vesper's Shrine)
 Peepes through the purple windowes of the East.'

4 The old copy reads:—

'Or dedicate his beauty to the same.'

The emendation is by Theobald; who states, with great plausibility, that sunne might easily be mistaken for same. Malone observes, that Shakespeare has evidently imitated the Rosamond of Daniel in the last act of this play, and in this passage may have remembered the following lines in one of the Sonnets of the same writer, who was then extremely popular:—

'And whilst thou spread'st into the rising sunne
 The fairest flower that ever saw the light,
 Now joy thy time before thy sweet be done.'

Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?

Mon. I neither know it, nor can learn of him.

Ben. Have you importun'd him by any means?

Mon. Both by myself, and many other friends:

But he, his own affections' counsellor,
 Is to himself—I will not say, how true—
 But to himself so secret and so close,
 So far from sounding and discovery,
 As is the bud bit with an envious worm,
 Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,
 Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.⁴
 Could we but learn from whence his sorrows grow,
 We would as willingly give cure, as know.

[Enter ROMEO, at a distance.]

Ben. See, where he comes; So please you, step aside;

I'll know his grievance, or be much denied.

Mon. I would, thou wert so happy by thy stay,
 To hear true shrift.—Come, madam, let's away.

[Exeunt MONTAGUE and Lady.]

Ben. Good morrow, cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new struck nine.

Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long.

Was that my father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was:—What sadness lengthens Romeo's hours?

Rom. Not having that, which having makes them short.

Ben. In love?

Rom. Out—

Ben. Of love?

Rom. Out of her favour, where I am in love.

Ben. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,
 Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!

Rom. Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
 Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will!
 Where shall we dine?—O, me!—What fray was here?

Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.
 Here's much to do with hate, but more with love:
 Why then, O, brawling love! O, loving hate!
 O, any thing, of nothing first create!
 O, heavy lightness! serious vanity!
 Misshapen chaos of well seeming forms!
 Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health!
 Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!—
 This love feel I, that feel no love in this.
 Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No, coz, I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good heart's oppression.

Rom. Why, such is love's transgression.—

Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast;
 Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest
 With more of thine:—this love, that thou hast shown,
 Doth add more grief to too much of mine own.
 Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
 Being urg'd,⁵ a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;

These lines add great support to Theobald's emendation. There are few passages in the poet where so great an improvement of language is obtained by so slight a deviation from the text of the old copy.

5 i. e. should blindly and recklessly think he can surmount all obstacles to his will.

6 Every ancient sonneteer characterized Love by contraries. Watson begins one of his canzoni:—

'Love is a soure delight, and sugred griefe,
 A living death, and ever-dying life,' &c.

Turberville makes Reason harangue against it in the same manner:—

'A ferie frost, a flame that frozen is with le!

'A heave burden light to beare! A vertue fraught with vice!'

7 The old copy reads, 'Being purg'd a fire,' &c.—The emendation I have admitted into the text was suggested by Dr. Johnson. To urge the fire is to kindle or excite it. So in Chapman's version of the twenty-first Iliad:—

'And as a cauldron, under put with store of fire,

Bavins of sere-wood urging it,' &c.

So Akenside, in his Hymn to Cheerfulness:—

'Haste, light the tapers, urge the fire,
 And bid the joyless day retire.'

Being ver'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears:
What is it else? a madness most decreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.
Farewell, my coz. [Going.]

Ber. Soft, I will go along;
An if you leave me so, you do me wrong.
Rom. Tut, I have lost myself; I am not here;
This is not Romeo, he's some other where.
Ber. Tell me in sadness,¹ whom she is you love.
Rom. What, shall I groan, and tell thee?

Ber. Groan? why, no;
But sadly tell me who.
Rom. Bid a sick man in sadness make his will:
Ah, word ill urg'd to one that is so ill!
In sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.
Ber. I aim'd so near, when I supposed you lov'd.
Rom. A right good marksman!—And she's fair
I love.
Ber. A right fair mark, fair coz, is soonest hit.
Rom. Well, in that hit, you miss: she'll not be hit

With Cupid's arrow, she hath Dian's wit;
And, in strong proof of chastity well arm'd,²
From love's weak childish bow she lives unharm'd.
She will not stay the siege of loving terms,
Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes,
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
O, she is rich in beauty; only poor,
That, when she dies, with beauty dies her store.³

Ber. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste?
Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes huge waste;

For beauty, starv'd with her severity,
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise; wisely too fair,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love; and, in that vow,
Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Ber. Be rul'd by me, forget to think of her.
Rom. O, teach me how I should forget to think.
Ber. By giving liberty unto thine eyes;
Examine other beauties.

Rom. 'Tis the way
To call hers, exquisite, in question more:⁴
These happy masks,⁵ that kiss fair ladies' brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair;
He, that is stricken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost;

1 I. e. tell me gravely, in seriousness.

2 As this play was written in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, those speeches of Romeo may be regarded as an oblique compliment to her majesty, who was not liable to be displaced at hearing her chastity praised after she was suspected to have lost it, or her beauty commended in the sixty-seventh year of her age, though she never possessed any when young. Her declaration that she would continue unmarried increases the probability of the present supposition.—Steevens.

3 The meaning appears to be, as Mason gives it, 'She is poor only, because she leaves no part of her store behind her, as with her all beauty will die:—'

'For beauty starv'd with her severity
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.'

4 I. e. to call her exquisite beauty more into my mind, and make it more the subject of conversation. Question is used frequently with this sense by Shakespeare.

5 This is probably an allusion to the masks worn by the female spectators of the play: unless we suppose that these means no more than the.

6 The quarto of 1607 reads:—

'And too soon marr'd are those so early married.'

Puttenham, in his Arte of Poesy, 1589, uses this expression, which seems to be proverbial, as an instance of a figure which he calls the Rebound:—

'The maid that soon married is, soon married is.'

The jingle between marr'd and made is likewise frequent among the old writers. So Sidney:—

'Oh! he is marr'd, that is for others made!'

Spenser introduces it very often in his different poems.
7 Fille de terre is the old French phrase for an heiress. Earth is likewise put for lands, i. e. landed estate, in other old plays. But Mason suggests that earth may here mean corporal part, as in a future passage of this play:—

Show me a mistress that is passing fair,
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read, who pass'd that passing fair?
Farewell; thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ber. I'll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Street. Enter CAPULET, PARIS, and Servant.

Cep. And Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and 'tis not hard, I think,
For men so old as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honourable reckoning are you both;
And pity 'tis, you liv'd at odds so long.
But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?

Cep. By saying o'er what I have said before:
My child is yet a stranger in the world,
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years;
Let two more summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

Par. Younger than she are happy mothers made.
Cep. And too soon marr'd are those so early made.⁸

The earth hath swallow'd all my hopes but she,
She is the hopeful lady of my earth:⁹
But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent is but a part;¹⁰
An she agree, within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustomed feast,
Whereto I have invited many a guest,
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more, most welcome, makes my number more.
At my poor house, look to behold this night
Earth-treading stars, that make dark heaven light.
Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel
When well apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight
Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit¹¹ at my house; hear all, all see,
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Which, on more view of many, mine being one,¹²
May stand in number, though in reckoning none.¹³
Come, go with me;—Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out, Whose names are written there, [gives a Paper,]
and to them say,

My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.
[Exeunt CAPULET and PARIS.
Serv. Find them out, whose names are written

'Can I go forward when my heart is here?

Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.'

So in Shakespeare's 146th Sonnet:—

'Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth.

8 I. e. in comparison to.

9 For 'lusty young men' Johnson would read 'lusty yeomen.' Ritson has clearly shown that young men was used for yeomen in our elder language. And the reader may convince himself by turning to Spelman's Glossary in the words juniores and yeoman.

10 To inherit, in the language of Shakespeare, is to possess.

11 By a perverse adherence to the first quarto copy of 1597, which reads, 'Such amongst view of many,' &c. this passage has been made unintelligible. The subsequent quartos and the folio read, 'Which one [on] more,' &c.; evidently meaning, 'Hear all, see all, and like her most who has the most merit; her, which, after regarding attentively the many, my daughter being one, may stand unique in merit, though she may be reckoned nothing, or held in no estimation. The allusion, as Malone has shown, is to the old proverbial expression, 'One is no number,' thus adverted to in Dekker's Honest Whore:—

— to fall to one

— is to fall to none,

For one no number is.'

And in Shakespeare's 136th Sonnet:—

'Among a number one is reckon'd none,

Then in the number let me pass untold.'

It will be unnecessary to inform the reader that which is here used for who, a substitution frequent in Shakespeare, as in all the writers of his time. One of the later quartos has corrected the error of the others, and reads as in the present text:—

'Which on more view,' &c

here? It is written—that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard,—and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find those persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned :—In good time.

Enter BENVOLIO and ROMEO.

Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burning,
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish;
Turn giddy, and be help by backward turning;
One desperate grief cures with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.

Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.¹

Ben. For what, I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken skin.

Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my food,
Whipped and tormented, and—Good-e'en, good fellow.

Serv. God gi' good e'en.—I pray, sir, can you read?

Rom. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery.

Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book:
But, I pray, can you read any thing you see?

Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.

Serv. Ye say honestly; Rest you merry!

Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read.

[Reads. Signior Martino, and his wife and daughters;
County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters;
The lady widow of Vitruvius;
Signior Placentio, and his lovely nieces;
Mercutio, and his brother Valentine;
Mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters;
My fair niece Rosaline;
Livia;
Signior Valentio, and his cousin Tybalt;
Lucio, and the lively Helena.
A fair assembly; [Gives back the Note.] Whither should they come?

Serv. Up.

Rom. Whither?

Serv. To supper; to our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Serv. My master's.

Rom. Indeed, I should have asked you that before.

Serv. Now I'll tell you without asking: My master is the great rich Capulet; and if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine.² Rest you merry. [Exit.]

Ben. At this same ancient feast of Capulet's
Supper the fair Rosaline, whom thou so lov'st;
With all the admired beauties of Verona.
Go thither; and, with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye
Maintains such falsehood, then turn tears to fire;
And these,—who, often drown'd, could never die,
—Transparent heretics, be burnt for liars!
One fairer than my love! the all-seeing sun
Ne'er saw her match, since first the world begun.

Ben. Tut! you saw her fair, none else being by,
Herself poise'd with herself in either eye:

1 The quarto of 1597 adds, 'And yet I know not who are written here: I must to the learned to learn of them: that's as much as to say, the tailor,' &c.

2 The plantain leaf is a blood-stancher, and was formerly applied to green wounds. So in Albumazar:—
'Help, Armollina, help! I'm fallen!' the cellar:
Bring a fresh plantain-leaf, I've broke my shin.'

3 This cant expression seems to have been once common; it often occurs in old plays. We have one still in use of similar import:—To crack a bottle.

4 Heath says, 'Your lady's love, is the love you bear to your lady, which, in our language, is commonly used for the lady herself.' Perhaps we should read, 'Your lady love.'

5 In all the old copies the greater part of this scene was printed as prose. Capell was the first who exhibited it as verse; the subsequent editors have followed him, but perhaps erroneously.

But in those crystal scales, let there be weigh'd
Your lady's love' against some other maid
That I will show you, shining at this feast,
And she shall scant show well, that now shows best.

Rom. I'll go along, no such sight to be shown,
But to rejoice in splendour of mine own. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter
LADY CAPULET and Nurse.

La. Cap. Nurse, where's my daughter? call her forth to me.

Nurse. Now, by my maidenhead,—at twelve year old,

I bade her come.—What, lamb! what, lady-bird!—
God forbid!—where's this girl? what, Juliet!

Enter JULIET.

Jul. How now, who calls?

Nurse. Your mother.

Jul. Madam, I am here,

What is your will?

La. Cap. This is the matter:—Nurse, give leave awhile,

We must talk in secret.—Nurse, come back again,
I have remember'd me, thou shalt hear our counsel.
Thou know'st my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. 'Faith, I can tell her age unto an hour.

La. Cap. She's not fourteen.

Nurse. I'll lay fourteen of my teeth,
And yet, to my teen⁶ be it spoken, I have but four,

She is not fourteen: How long is it now
To Lammass-tide?

La. Cap. A fortnight, and odd days.

Nurse. Even or odd, of all days in the year,
Come Lammass-eve at night, shall she be fourteen.
Susan and she,—God rest all Christian souls!—
Were of an age.—Well, Susan is with God;
She was too good for me: But, as I said,
On Lammass-eve at night shall she be fourteen;
That shall she, marry; I remember it well.

'Tis since the earthquake now eleven years;
And she was wean'd,—I never shall forget it,—
Of all the days of the year, upon that day;
For I had then laid wormwood to my dug,
Sitting in the sun under the dove-house wall,
My lord and you were then at Mantua:—
Nay, I do bear a brain:—but, as I said,
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple
Of my dug, and felt it bitter, pretty fool!
To see it tetchy, and fall out with the dug,
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trow,
To bid me trudge.

And since that time it is eleven years:
For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about,
For even the day before, she broke her brow:
And then my husband—God be with his soul!
'A was a merry man;—took up the child;
Yea, quoth he, don't thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit;
Wilt thou not, Juliet? and, by my holy-dam,
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—Ay:
To see now, how a jest shall come about!
I warrant, as I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it; Wilt thou not, Juliet?
quoth he:

And, pretty fool, it stung⁷, and said—Ay.

6 i. e. to my sorrow. This old word is introduced for the sake of the jingle between teen, and four, and fourteen.

7 Mr. Tyrwhitt thinks that Shakespeare had in view the earthquake which had been felt in England in his own time, on the 6th of April, 1580; and that we may from hence conjecture that Romeo and Juliet was written in 1581.

8 The nurse means to boast of her retentive faculty.—
To bear a brain is to possess much mental capacity either of attention, ingenuity, or remembrance. Thus in Marston's Dutch Courtesan:—
'My silly husband, alas! knows nothing of it, 'tis I that must bear a brain for all.'

9 To sting is to stop. Barret translates 'Looky-must'

La. Cap. Enough of this; I pray thee, hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes, madam; Yet I cannot choose but laugh,

To think it should leave crying, and say—Ay:

And yet, I warrant, it had upon his brow

A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone;

A parlous knock, and it cried bitterly.

Yes, quoth my husband, fall'st upon thy face?

Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age;

Will thou not, Jul? it stinted, and said—Ay.

Jul. And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.

Nurse. Peace, I have done. God mark thee to his grace!

Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:

An I might live to see thee married once,
I have my wish.

La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme
I came to talk of:—Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How stands your disposition to be married?

Jul. It is an honour that I dream not of.

Nurse. An honour! were not I thine only nurse,
I'd say, thou hadst suck'd wisdom from thy teat.

La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now; younger than you,

Here in Verona, ladies of esteem,

Are made already mothers: by my count,

I was your mother much upon these years

That you are now a maid. Thus, then, in brief;—
The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.

Nurse. A man, young lady! lady, such a man,
As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.⁶

La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.⁷

La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentleman?

This night you shall behold him at our feast;

Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face;

And find delight writ there with beauty's pen;

Examine every married⁸ lineament,

And see how one another lends content;

And what observ'd in this fair volume lies,

Find written in the margin of his eyes.⁹

supprimere, to stinte weeping; and 'to stinte talks,' by 'sermones restringere.' So Ben Jonson in Cynthia's Revels—

'—Stint thy babbling tongue,
Fond Echo.'

Again, in What You Will, by Marston—

'Fish! for shame, stint thy idle chat.'

Spanner uses the word frequently.

1 This tautologous speech is not in the first quarto of 1597.

2 I.e. as well made as if he had been modelled in wax. So in Wiley beguiled:—'Why, he is a man as one should picture him in wax.' So Horace uses 'Ceres brachia,' waxen arms, for arms well shaped.—Od. xiii.

3. Which Decier explains:—'Des bras faits au tour comme nous disons d'un bras rond, qu'il est comme de cire.'

4 After this speech of the Nurse, Lady Capulet, in the old quarto, says only:—

'Well, Juliet, how like you of Paris' love?'

She answers, 'I'll look to like,' &c.; and so concludes the scene, without the intervention of that stuff to be found in the later quartos and the folio.

5 Thus the quarto of 1599. The quarto of 1609 and the folio read, 'several lineaments.' We have, 'The unity and married calm of states,' in Troilus and Cressida. And in his eighth Sonnet:—

'If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear.'

6 The comments on ancient books were generally printed in the margin. Horatio says, in Hamlet, 'I knew you must be edified by the margin,' &c. So in The Rape of Lucrece:—

'But she that never eop'd wkh stranger eyes
Could pick no meaning from their parling looks,
Nor read the subtle shining secrets
Writ in the glassy margin of such books.'

This speech is full of quibbles. The unbound lover is a quibble on the binding of a book, and the binding in marriage; and the word cover is a quibble on the law phrase for a married woman, femine covertæ.

This precious book of love, this unbound lever,
To beautify him, only lacks a cover:

The fish lives in the sea;¹⁰ and 'tis much pride,
For fair without the fair within to hide:

That book in many's eyes doth share the glory,
That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;

So shall you share all that he doth possess,
By having him, making yourself no less.

Nurse. No less? nay, bigger; women grow by men.

La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?

Jul. I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
But no more deep will I endart¹¹ mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up, you called, my young lady asked for, the nurse curs'd in the pantry, and every thing in extremity. I must hence to wait; I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Street. Enter ROMEO, MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, with five or six Maskers, Torch-Bearers, and others.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our excuse?

Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such proflinity.¹²

We'll have no cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf,

Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,¹³

Scaring the ladies like a crow-keeper;¹⁴

Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke

After the prompter, for our entrance:

But, let them measure us by what they will,

We'll measure them a measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch,¹⁵—I am not for this ambling;

Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

6 Dr. Farmer explains this, 'The fish is not yet caught.' Mason thinks that we should read, 'The fish lives in the shell;' for the sea cannot be said to be a beautiful cover to a fish, though a shell may. The poet may mean nothing more than that those books are most esteemed by the world where valuable contents are embellished by as valuable binding.

7 The quarto of 1597 reads, engage mine eye.

8 Shakespeare appears to have formed this character on the following slight hint:—'Another gentleman, called Mercutio, which was a courtlike gentleman, very well beloved of all men, and by reason of his pleasant and courteous behaviour was in all companies well entertained.'—Painter's Palace of Pleasure, tom. ii. p. 231.

9 In King Henry VIII., where the king introduces himself at the entertainment given by Wolsey, he appears, like Romeo and his companions, in a mask, and sends a messenger before with an apology for his intrusion. This was a custom observed by those who came uninvited, with a desire to conceal themselves, for the sake of intrigue, or to enjoy the greater freedom of conversation. Their entry on these occasions was always prefaced by some speech in praise of the beauty of the ladies, or the generosity of the entertainer; and to the proflinity of such introductions it is probable Romeo is made to allude. In Historiomastix, 1610, a man expresses his wonder that the maskers enter without any compliment:—'What, come they in so blunt, without device?' Of this kind of masquerading, there is a specimen in Timon, where Cupid precedes a troop of ladies with a speech.

10 The Tartarian bows resemble in their form the old Roman or Cupid's bow, such as we see on medals and bas-reliefs. Shakespeare uses the epithet to distinguish it from the English bow, whose shape is the segment of a circle.

11 See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

12 A torch-bearer was a constant appendage to every troop of maskers. To hold a torch was anciently no degrading office. Queen Elizabeth's gentlemen pensioners attended her to Cambridge, and held torches while a play was acted before her in the Chapel of King's College on a Sunday evening.

Mer. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,

With nimble soles: I have a soul of lead,
So stokes me to the ground, I cannot move.
Mer. You are a lover; borrow Cupid's wings,
And soar with them above a common bound.
Rom. I am too sore pierc'd with his shaft,
To soar with his light feathers; and so bound,
I cannot bound! a pitch above dull wo:
Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Mer. And, to sink in it, should you burden love,
Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boisterous; and it pricks like thorn.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;
Prick love from pricking, and you beat love down.—
Give me a case to put my visage in:

[Putting on a Mask.]

A visor for a visor!—what care I,
What curious eye doth quote¹ deformities?
Here are the beetle-brows, shall blush for me.

Ber. Come, knock, and enter: and no sooner in,
But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless rushes² with their heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandiose phrase,— I'll be a candle-holder, and look on,—
The game was ne'er so fair, and I am done.³

Mer. Tut! dun's the mouse, the constable's own word:
If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mire⁴
Of this (save reverence) love, wherein thou stick'st
Up to the ears.—Come, we burn daylight,⁵ ho.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mer. I mean, sir, in delay
We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.
Take our good meaning; for our judgment sits
Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.⁶

1 Let Milton on this occasion keep Shakespeare in countenance. Par. Lost, book iv. l. 130:—
"— in contempt

2 At one slight bound high over-leap'd all bound.¹ ...
3 To quote is to note, to mark. See Hamlet, Act II. Sc. 1.

4 Middleton (the author of The Witch) has borrowed this thought in his play of Blurt Master Constable, 1602:—

"— bid him, whose heart no sorrow feels,
Tickle the rushes with his wanton heels,
I have too much lead at mine."

It has been before observed that the apartments of our ancestors were strewn with rushes, and so it seems was the ancient stage. "On the very rushes when the Comedy is to dance."—Decker's Gull's Hornbook, 1609. Shakespeare does not stand alone in giving the manners and customs of his own times to all countries and ages. Marlowe, in his Hero and Leander, describes Hero as "— fearing on the rushes to be flung."

4 To hold the candle is a common proverbial expression for being an idle spectator. Among Ray's proverbial sentences we have, 'A good candle-holder proves a good gamester.' This is the 'grandiose phrase' with which Romeo is proverb'd. There is another old proverbial maxim subsequently alluded to, which advises to give over when the game is at the fairest.

5 Dun is the mouse is a proverbial saying to us of vague signification, alluding to the colour of the mouse; but frequently employed with no other intent than that of quibbling on the word done. Why it is attributed to a constable we know not. It occurs in the comedy of Patient Grissel, 1603. So in The Two Merry Milk-maids, 1620:—"Why then, 'tis done, and dun's the mouse, and undone all the courtiers." To draw dun out of the mire was a rural pastime, in which dun meant a dun horse, supposed to be stuck in the mire, and sometimes represented by one of the persons who played, at others by a log of wood. Mr. Gifford has described the game, at which he remembers often to have played, in a note to Ben Jonson's Masque of Christmas, vol. vi. p. 282:—"A log of wood is brought into the midst of the room; this is dun, (the cart horse), and a cry is raised that he is stuck in the mire. Two of the company advance, either with or without ropes, to draw him out. After repeated attempts, they find themselves

Rom. And we mean well, in going to this mask;
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why, may one ask?

Rom. I dreamt a dream to-night.

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well, what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed, asleep, while they do dream things true.

Mer. O, then, I see, queen Mab hath been with thee. She is the fairies' midwife;⁷ and she comes In shape no bigger than an agate-stone On the fore-finger of an alderman.⁸ Drawn with a team of little atomes;⁹ Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep: Her wagon-spokes made of long spinners' legs; The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers; The traces, of the smallest spider's web; The collars, of the moonshine's watery beams: Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film: Her wagoner, a small grey-coated gnat,¹⁰ Not half so big as a round little worm Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid: Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut, Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub, Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers. And in this state she gallops night by night Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love: On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtiers' straight: O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees: O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream; Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues, Because their breaths with sweet-meats tainted are.¹¹

Sometimes she gallops o'er a courtier's nose,¹² And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:¹³ And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail, Ticking a parson's nose as he lies asleep, Then dreams he of another benefice: Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck, And then dreams he of cutting foreign throats, Of breaches, ambuscados, Spanish blades.¹⁴ unable to do it, and call for more assistance. The game continues till all the company take part in it, when dun is extricated of course; and the merriment arises from the awkward and affected efforts of the rustics to lift the log, and sundry arch contrivances to let the ends of it fall on one another's toes.

6 This proverbial phrase, which was applied to superfluous actions in general, occurs again in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

7 The quarto of 1597 reads, 'Three times a day; and right wits instead of five wits.'

8 The fairies' midwife does not mean the midwife to the fairies, but that she was the person among the fairies whose department it was to deliver the fancies of sleeping men of their dreams, those children of an idle brain. When we say the king's judges, we do not mean persons who judge the king, but persons appointed by him to judge his subjects.—Steevens. Warburton, with some plausibility, reads, 'the fancy's midwife.'

9 The quarto of 1597 has, 'of a burgomaster.' The citizens of Shakespeare's time appear to have worn this ornament on the thumb. So Glaphorne in his comedy of Wit in a Constable:—"And an alderman, as I may say to you, he has no more wit than the rest of the bench; and that lies in his thumb ring." Shakespeare compares his fairy to the figure carved on the agate-stone of a thumb ring.

10 Atomes for atoms.

11 There is a similar fanciful description of Queen Mab's chariot in Drayton's Nymphidia, which was written several years after this tragedy.

12 This probably alludes to the 'kissing comfits,' mentioned by Falstaff in the last act of the Merry Wives of Windsor.

13 This speech received much alteration after the first edition in the quarto of 1597: and Shakespeare has inadvertently introduced the courtier twice. Mr. Tyrwhitt finding 'courtiers' knees' in the first instance printed in the second folio, would read courtiers' (i. e. noblemen's) knees. Steevens remarks that the whole speech bears a resemblance to a passage of Claudian in Sextum Consulatum Honorii Augusti Praefatio.

14 A place in court

15 The quarto of 1597 reads, 'counter mines.' Spanish blades were held in high esteem. A sword was called a Toledo, from the excellence of the Toletan steel.

Of healths five fathom deep ; and then anon
Drums in his ear ; at which he starts and wakes ;
And being thus frighted, swears a prayer or two,
And sleeps again. This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night ;
And bakes the elf-locks¹ in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once untangled, much misfortune bodes.
This is the hag, when maids lie on their backs,
That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
Making them women of good carriage.²
This, this is she—

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace ;
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talk of dreams ;
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy ;
Which is as thin of substance as the air ;
And more inconstant than the wind, who woos
Even now the frozen bosom of the north,
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Ben. This wind, you talk of, blows us from ourselves ;

Supper is done, and we shall come too late.

Rom. I fear, too early ; for my mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels ; and expire³ the term
Of a despised life, clos'd in my breast,
By some vile forfeit of untimely death ;
But He, that hath the steerage of my course,
Direct my sail ! On, lusty gentlemen.

Ben. Strike, drum.⁴ [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A Hall in Capulet's House. Musicians waiting. Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where's the Potpan, that he helps not to take away ? he shift a trencher !⁵ he scrape a trencher !

2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard,⁶ look to the plate :—good thou, save me a piece of marchpane ; and, as thou lovest

1 i. e. faury locks, locks of hair clouded and tangled in the night. It was a common superstition ; and Warburton conjectures that it had its rise from the horrid disease called Plica Polonica.

2 So in Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. 2 :—

—let them be men of great repute and carriage.

3 Moth. Sampson, master ; for he was a man of good carriage, great carriage ; for he carried the town-gates.⁷

4 So in The Rape of Lucrece :—

'An expir'd date cancell'd are well begun.'

And in Mother Hubbard's Tale :—

'Now whereas time flying with wings swift
Expir'd had the term,' &c.

4 Here the folio adds :—'They march about the stage, and serving men come forth with their napkins.'

5 This scene is not in the first copy in the quarto of 1597.

6 To shift a trencher was technical. So in The Miles of Enford Marriage, 1608 :—'Learne more manners, stand at your brother's back, as to shift a trencher neatly,' &c. Trenchers were used in Shakespeare's time, and long after, by persons of good fashion and quality. They continued common till a late period in many public societies, and are now, or were lately, still retained at Lincoln's Inn.

7 The court cupboard was the ancient sideboard ; it was a cumbersome piece of furniture, with shelves or shelves gradually receding, like stairs, to the top, whereon the plate was displayed at festivals. They are mentioned in many of our old comedies. Thus in Chapman's Monsieur D'Olive, 1606 :—'Here shall stand my court cupboard, with its furniture of plate.' Again in his May Day, 1611 :—'Court cupboards planted with flagons, cans, cups, beakers,' &c. Two of these ancient pieces of furniture are still in Stationer's Hall : they are used at public festivals, to display the antique silver vessels of the Company, consisting of cans, cups, beakers, flagons, &c. There is a print in a curious work, entitled Laurea Austriaca, folio, 1627, representing an entertainment given by King James I. to the Spanish Ambassadors, in 1623 ; from which the reader will get a better notion of the court cupboard than volumes me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell.—Antony ! and Potpan !

2 Serv. Ay, boy ; ready.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—Cheerly, boys ; be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all. [They retire behind.]

Enter CAPULET, &c. with the Guests and the Maskers.

Cap. Gentlemen, welcome ! ladies, that have their toes

Unplagu'd with corns, will have a bout with you :—Ah ha, my mistresses ! which of you all

Will now deny to dance ? she that makes dainty she, I'll swear hath corns ; Am I come near you now ? You are welcome, gentlemen ! I have seen the day, That I have worn a visor ; and could tell

A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such as would please :—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone :
You are welcome, gentlemen !—Come, musicians, play.

A hall ! a hall ! give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.]

More lights, ye knaves ; and turn the tables up,⁸

And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—

Ah, sirrah, this unlook'd-for sport comes well.

Nay, sit, nay, sit, good cousin !⁹ Capulet ;

For you and I are past our dancing days ;

How long is't now, since last yourself and I

Were in a mask ?

2 Cap. By'r lady, thirty years. [much :

1 Cap. What, man ! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so

'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio,

Come pentecost as quickly as it will,

Some five and twenty years ; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more : his son is older, sir :

His son is thirty.

1 Cap. Will you tell me that ?

His son was but a ward two years ago.¹²

Rom. What lady's that, which doth enrich the hand

Of yonder knight ?

Serv. I know not, sir.

Rom. O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright !

It seems she¹³ hangs upon the cheek of night of description would afford him. It was sometimes also called a cupboard of plate, and a livery cupboard.

8 Marchpane was a constant article in the desserts of our ancestors. It was a sweet cake, composed of flours, almonds, pistachoes, pine kernels, and sugar of roses, with a small portion of flour. They were often made in fantastic forms. In 1622, the Stationers' Company paid 'for ix. marchpaines xxvi. s. viii. d.'

9 An exclamation commonly used to make room in a crowd for any particular purpose, as we now say, a ring ! a ring ! So Marston, Sat. iii. :—

—A hall ! a hall !

Room for the spheres, the orbs celestia.

Will dance Kempe's jig.¹⁴

The passages are numberless that may be cited in illustration of this phrase.

10 The ancient tables were flat leaves or boards joined by hinges and placed on trestles ; when they were to be removed they were therefore turned up. The phrase is sometimes taken up. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, ed. 1839, p. 158 :—'After that the boards-and was taken up.'

11 Cousin was a common expression for kinsman. Thus in Hamlet, the king, his uncle and stepfather, addresses him with—

'But now, my cousin Hamlet and my son.'

12 This speech stands thus in the quarto of 1597 :—

'Will you tell me that ? it cannot be so :

His son was but a ward three years ago ;

Good youths, 'faith !—Oh, youth's a jolly thing !'

There are many trifling variations in almost every speech of this play ; but when they are of little consequence I have not encumbered the page with them. The last of these three lines, however, is natural and pleasing.—Steevens.

13 Steevens reads, with the second folio :—

'Her beauty hangs upon,' &c.

Shakespeare has the same thought in his 37th Sonnet :—

'Which like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beautiful, and her old face new.'

Lyly in his Euphues, has 'A fair pearl in a Morian's ear.'

Like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear:
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows:
The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand,
And, touching hers, make happy my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague:—
Fetch me my rapier, boy:—What! dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To leer and scorn at our solemnity?
Now, by the stock and honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

I Cap. Why, how now, kinsman? wherefore storm you so?

Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

I Cap. Young Romeo is't?

Tyb. 'Tis he, that villain Romeo.

I Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all this town,
Here in my house, do him disparagement:
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will; the which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence, and put off these frowns,
An ill becoming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest;
I'll not endure him.

I Cap. He shall be endur'd;
What, Goodman boy?—I say, he shall:—Go to;—
Am I the master here, or you? go to.
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my soul!—
You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock-a-hoop! you'll be the man!

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.

I Cap. Go to, go to.
You are a saucy boy:—Is't so, indeed?—
This trick may chance to scath' you:—I know what
You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time—
Well said, my hearts:—You are a primcox;* go to:—
Be quiet, or—More light, more light, for shame!—
I'll make you quiet; What! Cheerly, my hearts.

Tyb. Patience perforce² with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw: but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall. [Exit.]

Rom. If I profane with my unworthy hand

[To JULIET.]

This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this:—
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,

Which mannerly devotion shows in this:
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmers' kiss.

Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmers too?

Jul. Ay, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.

Rom. O then, dear saint, let lips do what hands do;³

They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.

1 i. e. do you an injury. The word has still this meaning in Scotland.

2 A pert forward youth. The word is apparently a corruption of the Latin præcox.

3 There is an old adage:—'Patience perforce is a medicine for a mad dog.' To which this is an allusion.

4 Juliet had said before, that 'palm to palm was holy palmers' kiss.' She afterwards says, that 'palmers have lips that they must use in prayer.' Romeo replies, That the prayer of his lips was, that they might do what hands do; that is, that they might kiss.

5 The poet here, without doubt, copied from the mode of his own time; and kissing a lady in a public assembly, we may conclude, was not then thought indecorous. In King Henry VIII. Lord Sande is represented as kissing Anne Boleyn, next whom he sat at supper.

Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect I take.

Thus from my lips, by yours, my sin is purg'd. [Kissing her.]

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O, trespass sweetly urg'd. Give me my sin again.

Jul. You kiss by the book.

Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.

Rom. What is her mother?

Nurse. Marry, bachelor!

Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous:
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal:
I tell you,—he, that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O, dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Rom. Away, begone; the sport is at the best.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

I Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;

We have a trifling foolish banquet towards.—

Is it e'en so? Why, then I thank you all;

I thank you, honest gentlemen: good night:—

More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.

Ah, sirrah, [To 2 Cap.] by my fay, it waxes late;

I'll to my rest. [Exeunt all but JULIET and Nurse.]

Jul. Come hither nurse: What is your gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.

Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?

Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petrucchio.

Jul. What's he, that follows there, that would not dance?

Nurse. I know not.

Jul. Go ask his name:—if he be married,

My grave is like to be my wedding bed.

Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague,

The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!

Too early seen unknown, and known too late!

Predigions birth of love it is to me,

That I must love a loathed enemy.

Nurse. What's this? what's this?

Jul. A rhyme I learn'd even now

Of one I danc'd withal. [One calls within, Juliet.]

Nurse. Anon, anon:—

Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone. [Exeunt.]

Enter CHORUS.

Now old desire doth in this deathbed lie,

And young affection gapes to be his heir;

That fair,⁵ which love gross'd for, and would die,

With tender Juliet match'd is now not fair.

Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,

Alike bewitched by the charm of looks;

But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,

And she steal love's sweet bait from fearful hooks.

Being belov'd a foe, he may not have access

To breathe such vows as lovers use to swear,

And she as much in love, her means much less

To meet her new-belov'd any where:

5 Towards is ready, at hand. A banquet, or rare supper, as it was sometimes called, was similar to our dessert.

7 Here the quarto of 1697 adds:—

'I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been in bed an hour ago:
Light to my chamber, ho!'

8 'This chorus is not in the first edition, quarto, 1607. Its use is not easily discovered; it conduces nothing to the progress of the play; but relates what is already known, or what the next scene will show; and relates it without adding the improvement of any moral sentiment.'—Johnson.

9 Fair, it has been already observed, was formerly used as a substantive, and was synonymous with beauty. The old copies read:—

'That fair for which love gross'd for,' &c.
This reading Malone defends. Stevens treats it as a corruption, and says, that fair, in the present instance, is used as a dissyllable.

But passion lends them power, time means to meet,
Temp'ring extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. An open Place, adjoining Capulet's Garden. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.

[He climbs the Wall, and leaps down within it.]

Enter BENVOLIO, and MERCUTIO.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo!

Mer. He is wise;
And, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:

Call, good Mercutio.

Mer. Nay, I'll conjure, too.—
Romeo! humours! madman! passion! lover!
Appear thou in the likeness of a sigh,
Speak but one rhyme, and I am satisfied;
Cry but—Ah me! pronounce^a but—love and dove;
Speak to my gossip Venus one fair word,
One nickname for her purblind son and heir,
Young Adam Cupid, he that shot so trim,^b
When king Cophetua lov'd the beggar-maid.—
He hearth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not;
The ape^c is dead, and I must conjure him.—
I conjure thee by Rosaline's bright eyes,
By her high forehead, and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh,
And the demesnes that there adjacent lie,
That in thy likeness thou appear to us.

Ben. An if he hear thee, thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him: 'twould anger him
To raise a spirit in his mistress' circle
Of some strange nature, letting it there stand
Till she had laid it, and conjur'd it down;
That were some spite: my invocation
Is fair and honest, and in his mistress' name,
I conjure only but to raise up him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himself among those trees,
To be consorted with the humorous^d night:
Blind is his love, and best befits the dark.

Mer. If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
As maids call medlars, when they laugh alone.^e—
Romeo, good night:—I'll to my truckle-bed;
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:
Come, shall we go?

Ben. Go, then; for 'tis in vain
To seek him here, that means not to be found.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Capulet's Garden. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.

[JULIET appears above, at a Window.]
But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks!
It is the east, and Juliet is the sun!

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief,
That thou her maid art far more fair than she:
Be not her maid,^f since she is envious;
Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.—
It is my lady: O, it is my love:
O, that she knew she were!—

She speaks, yet she says nothing; What of that?
Her eye discourses, I will answer it.
I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:
Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head?
The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars
As daylight doth a lamp; her eye in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright,
That birds would sing, and think it were not night.
See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!
O, that I were a glove upon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek!

Jul.

Ah me!

Rom.

She speaks:—

O, speak again, bright angel! for thou art
As glorious to this sight,^g being o'er my head,
As is a winged messenger of heaven
Unto the white-upturned wond'ring eyes
Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O, Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou
Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:
Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?
[Aside.]

Jul. 'Tis but thy name, that is my enemy;—
Thou art thyself though, not a Montague.
What's Montague? it is nor hand, nor foot,
Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part
Belonging to a man. O, be some other name!
What's in a name? that which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet;
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd:
Retain that dear perfection which he owes,
Without that title: Romeo, doff thy name;
And for that name, which is no part of thee,
Take all myself.

Rom.

I take thee at thy word:
Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;
Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,

So stumblest on my counsel?

Rom.

By a name

I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
Because it is an enemy to thee;
Had I it written, I would tear the word.

² This is the reading of the quarto of 1597. Those of 1609 and 1609, and the folio, read proceeds, an evident corruption. The folio of 1632 has cousily meaning cousin, which has been the reading of many modern editions. Steevens endeavours to persuade himself and his readers that provant may be right, and mean provide, fur-nish.

³ All the old copies read, Abraham Cupid. The alteration was proposed by Mr. Upton. It evidently alludes to the famous archer Adam Bell. So in Decker's Satirromastix:—'He shoots his bolt but seldom; but when Adam lets go, he hits.' 'He shoots at thee too, Adam Bell; and his arrows stick here.' The ballad alluded to is King Cophetua and the Beggar-Maid, or, as it is called in some copies, 'The Song of a Beggar and a King.' It may be seen in the first volume of Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. The following stanza Shakspeare had particularly in view:—

'The blinded boy that shoots so trim,
From heaven down did hit;
He drew a dart and shot at him,
In place where he did lie.'

⁴ This phrase in Shakspeare's time was used as an expression of tenderness like poor fool, &c.

⁵ I. e. the humid, the moist deity night. Chapman uses the word in this sense in his translation of Homer, b. ii. ed. 1698:

'The other gods and knights at arms, slept all the humorous night.'

And Drayton in the thirteenth Song of his Polyolbion:—
— which late the humorous night

Bespangled had with pearl.

And in The Barons' Wars, canto i.—
'The humorous fogs deprive us of his light.
Shakspeare uses the epithet, 'vaporous night,' in Measure for Measure.

⁶ After this line in the old copies are two lines of ribaldry, which have justly been degraded to the margin:—

'O Romeo, that she were, ah that she were An open casket, thou a puerile peer.'

⁷ I. e. be not a votary to the moon, to Diana.

⁸ The old copies read, 'to this night.' Theobald made the emendation, which appears to be warranted by the context.

Jul. My ears have not yet drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's utterance,¹ yet I know the sound;
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dislike.²

Jul. How can'st thou hither, tell me? and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb;
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out:
And what love can do, that dares love attempt,
Therefore thy kinsmen are no let³ to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,
Than twenty of their swords;⁴ look thou but sweet,
And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I have not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from their sight;

And, but⁵ thou love me, let them find me here:
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued⁶ wanting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to inquire:
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.

I am no pilot; yet, wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the furthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face;

Else would a maiden blush belpaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.
Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny
What I have spoke; but farewell compliment!⁷
Dost thou love me? I know, thou wilt say—Ay;
And I will take thy word: yet, if thou swear'st,
Thou mayst prove false; at lovers' perjuries,
They say, Jove laughs.⁸ O, gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:—
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but, else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond;
And therefore thou may'st think my haviour light:
But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange.⁹

1 We meet with almost the same words as those here attributed to Romeo in King Edward III. a tragedy, 1596:—

*'I might perceive his eyes in her eye lost,
His eye to drink her sweet tongue's utterance.'*

2 I.e. if either thee displease. This was the usual phraseology of Shakespeare's time. So k likes me well, for it pleases me well.

3 I.e. no stop, no hindrance. Thus the quarto of 1597. The subsequent copies read, 'no stop to me.'

4 Beaumont and Fletcher have copied this thought in The Maid in the Mill:—

'The lady may command, sir;

She bears an eye more dreadful than your weapon.'

5 But is here again used in its exceptive sense, without or unless.

6 I.e. postponed, delayed or deferred to a more distant period. So in Act iv. Sc. 1:—

'I hear thou must, and nothing may prorogue it,

On Thursday next be married to the county.'

The whole passage above, according to my view of it, has the following construction:—'I have night to screen me; yet unless thou love me, let them find me here. It were better that they ended my life at once, than to have death delayed, and to want thy love.'

7 I.e. farewell attention to forms.

8 This Shakespeare found in Ovid's Art of Love; perhaps in Marlowe's translation:—

*'For Jove himself sits in the azure skies,
And laughs below at lovers' perjuries.'*

With the following beautiful antithesis to the above lines (says Mr. Douce) every reader of taste will be gratified. It is given memoriter from some old play, the name of which is forgotten:—

*'When lovers swear true faith, the list'ning angels
Stand on the golden battlements of heaven,
And wait their vows to the eternal throne.'*

I should have been more strange, I must confess,
But that thou over-heard'st, ere I was ware,
My true love's passion: therefore pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear,
That tips with silver¹⁰ all these fruit-tree tops,—

Jul. O, swear not by the moon, the inconstant moon,

That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Least that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all;
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear: although I joy in thee,
I have no rash of this contract to-night:
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say—It lightens.¹¹ Sweet, good night!
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet.
Good night, good night! as sweet repose and rest
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night?

Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine.

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it:
And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it? for what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.

And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee,
The more I have, for both are infinite.

[Nurse calls within.
I hear some noise within; Dear love, adieu!
Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay, but a little, I will come again. [Exit.]

Rom. O, blessed, blessed night! I am afeard,
Being in night, all this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night, indeed.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,¹²
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow,
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,

9 To be distant, or shy.

10 This image struck Pope:—

'The moonbeam trembling falls,

And tips with silver all the walls.'

And in the celebrated simile at the end of the eighth Iliad:—'And tips with silver every mountain's head.'

11 So in The Miracles of Moses, by Drayton, 1604:—

'Lightning ceaselessly to burn,

Swifter than thought from place to place to pass,

And being gone, doth suddenly return

Ere you could say precisely what it was.'

The same thought occurs in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

All the intermediate lines from 'Sweet, good night' to 'Stay but a little,' &c. were added after the first impression in 1597.

12 In Brooke's Tragical History of Romeo and Juliet, she uses nearly the same expressions:—

*'If your thought be chaste, and have on virtue ground,
If wedlock be the end and mark, which your desire hath found,*

Obedience set aside, unto my parents due,

The quarrel take that long ago between our households grew,

*Both me and mine I will all whole to you to take,
And following you whereso you go, my father's house
forsake:*

But if by wanton love and by unlawful suit

You think in ripest years to pluck my maidenhood's dainty fruit,

*You are beguill'd, and now your Juliet you beseech
To cease your suit, and suffer her to live among her likers.'*

Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite:
And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee my lord throughout the world:

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. I come anon:—But if thou mean'st not well,
I do beseech thee,—

Nurse. [Within.] Madam.

Jul. By and by, I come:—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul,—

Jul. A thousand times good night! [Exit.]

Rom. A thousand times the worse, to want thy light.—

Love goes toward love, as school-boys from their books;

But love from love, toward school with heavy looks.
[Retiring slowly.]

Re-enter JULIET, above.

Jul. Hist! Romeo, hist!—O, for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle¹ back again!
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;

Else would I tear the cave² where echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine

With repetition of my Romeo's name;

Rom. It is my soul, that calls upon my name;
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,

Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!

Rom. My sweet?

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine.

Jul. I will not fail; 'tis twenty years till then.
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,
Rememb'ring how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee gone;
And yet no further than a wanton's bird;

Who lets it hop a little from her hand,
Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves,

And with a silk thread plucks it back again,
So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would, I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I;
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.

Good night, good night! parting is such sweet sorrow,
That I shall say—good night, till it be morning. [Exit.]

1 The tassel, or tiercel, (for so it should be spelt,) is the male of the goshawk, and is said to be so called because it is a tierce or third less than the female. This is equally true of all birds of prey. This species of hawk had the epithet of gentle annexed to it, from the ease with which it was tamed, and its attachment to man. Tardif, in his book of Falconry, says that the tiercel has its name from being one of three birds usually found in the aerie of a falcon, two of which are females, and the third a male; hence called tiercelet, or the third. According to the old books of sport the falcon gentle and tiercel gentle are birds for a prince.

2 This strong expression is more suitably employed by Milton:—'A shout that tore hell's concave.'

3 The quarto of 1597 puts the cold, distant, and formal appellation Madam, into the mouth of Romeo.—The two subsequent quartos and the folio have 'my sweet,' which is a palpable corruption; but it is difficult to say what word was intended. 'My sweet,' is the reading of the second folio.

4 In the folio and the three later quartos these four lines are printed twice over, and given once to Romeo and once to the Friar.

5 'Flecked' is spotted, dappled, streaked, or variegated. Lord Surrey uses the word in his translation of the fourth Æneid:—

'Her quivering cheekes flecked with deadly stain.'
So in the old play of The Four Prentices:—

'We'll fleck our white steeds in your Christian blood.'
6 This is the reading of the second folio. The quarto of 1597 reads:—

'From forth day's path and Titan's fry wheels.'
The quarto of 1599 and the folio have 'burning wheels.'

Rom. Sleep dwell upon thine eyes, peace in thy breast!—

'Would, I were sleep and peace, so sweet to rest!
Hence will I to my ghostly father's cell;

His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. [Exit.]

SCENE III. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR
LAURENCE, with a Basket.

Fri. The gray-ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,¹

Checkering the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And flecked² darkness like a drunkard reels

From forth day's path-way, made by Titan's wheels:³

Now, ere the sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheer, and night's dank dew to dry,

I must fill up this osier cage of ours,
With baleful weeds, and precious-juiced flowers.⁴

The earth, that's nature's mother, is her tomb;⁵
What is her burying grave, that is her womb:

And from her womb children of divers kind
We sucking on her natural bosom find;

Many for many virtues excellent,
None but for some, and yet all different.

O, mickle is the powerful grace⁶ that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities:

For nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give;

Nor aught so good, but, strain'd from that fair use,
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse:

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied;
And vice sometime's by action dignified.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power:

For this, being smelt, with that part⁷ cheers each part;

Being tasted, slays all senses with the heart.
Two such opposed foes encamp them still!⁸

In man as well as herbs, grace, and rude will;
And, where the worse is predominant,

Full soon the canker death eats up that plant.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Good morrow, father!

Fri. Benedicite!
What early tongue so sweet salutes me?

Young son, it argues a distemper'd head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed:

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie;

7 So Drayton, in the eighteenth Song of his Polyol-bion, speaking of a hermit:—

'His happy time he spends the works of God to see,
In those so sundry herbs which there in plenty grow,

Whose sundry strange effects he only seeks to know
And in a little massard, being made of exters small,

Which serveth him to do full many a thing withal,
He very choicely sorts his simples got abroad.'

Shakespeare has very artificially prepared us for the part Friar Laurence is afterwards to sustain. Having thus early discovered him to be a chemist, we are not surprised when we find him furnishing the draught which produces the catastrophe of the piece. The passage was, however, suggested by Arthur Brooke's poem.

8 'Omni parens, eadem rerum commune sepulchrum.'
Lucretius.

'The womb of nature, and perhaps her grave.'
Milton.

'Time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave.'
Pericles

9 Efficacious virtue.

10 I.e. with its odour. Not, as Malone says, 'with the olfactory nerves, the part that smells.'

11 So in Shakespeare's Lover's Complaint:— terror and dear modesty

Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.'
Our poet has more than once alluded to these opposed foes. So in Othello:—

'Yes, curse his better angel from his side.'

See also his forty-fourth Sonnet. He may have remembered a passage in the old play of King Arthur, 1587:—

'Peace hath three foes encamped in our breasts
Ambition, wrath, and envy.'

But where unbrused youth with unstuff'd brain
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign :

Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art uprout'd by some distemp'rance;
Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin! wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father? no;
I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. That's my good son: But where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.

I have been feasting with mine enemy:
Where on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I bear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo,
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is set

On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage: When, and where, and how,
We met, we woo'd, and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us this day.

Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love then lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Jesu Maria! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow cheeks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste,
To season love, that of it doth not taste!
The sun not yet thy sighs from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo, here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet:
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes were all for Rosaline;
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence
then—

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'st me off for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,

To lay one in, another out to have.

1 This apparent false concord occurs in many places, not only of Shakespeare, but of all old English writers.
It is sufficient to observe that in the Anglo-Saxon and very old English the third person plural of the present tense ends in eth, and often familiarly in es, as might be exemplified from Chaucer and others. This idiom was not worn out in Shakespeare's time, who must not therefore be tried by rules which were invented after his time. We have the same grammatical construction in Cymbeline:—

'His steeds to water at those springs
On chaic'd flowers that lies.'

And in Venus and Adonis:—

'She lifts the coffer lids that close his eyes
Where lo! two lamps burnt out in darkness lies.'
Again in a former scene of this play:—

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish Aëre,
Which once untangled much misfortune bodes.'

2 'It is incumbent upon me, or it is of importance to me to use extreme haste.' So in King Richard III.—

'—it stands me much upon,

To stop all hopes.' &c.

3 The allusion is to archery. The clout, or white mark, at which the arrows were directed, was sustained by a black pin, placed in the centre of it. To hit this was the highest ambition of every marksman. So in No Wit like a Woman's, a comedy by Middleton, 1657:

'They have shot two arrows without heads,
They cannot stick 'till the but yet; hold out, knight,
And I'll cleave the black pin 'till the midst of the white.'
So in Marlowe's Tamburlaine:—

Rom. I pray thee, chide not: she, whom I love
now,

Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow;
The other did not so.

Fri. O, she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be;
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your households' rancour to pure love.

Rom. O, let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.³

Fri. Wisely, and slow; they stumble that run fast. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Street. Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

Mer. Where the devil should this Romeo be?— Came he not home to-night?

Ben. Not to his father's; I spoke with his man.

Mer. Ah, that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline,

Torments him so, that he will sure run mad.

Ben. Tybalt, the kinsman of old Capulet,
Hath sent a letter to his father's house.

Mer. A challenge, on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answer it.

Mer. Any man, that can write, may answer a letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answer the letter's master, how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas, poor Romeo, he is already dead!
stabbed with a white wench's black eye; shot through the ear with a love-song; the very pin of his heart cleft with the blind bow-boy's butt-shaft.²
And is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben. Why, what is Tybalt?

Mer. More than prince of cats,⁴ I can tell you.
O, he is the courageous captain of compliments.
He fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests me his minim rest, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk button,⁵ a duellist, a duellist;
a gentleman of the very first house,—of the first and second cause:⁶ Ah, the immortal passado! the punto reverso! the hay!

Ben. The what?

Mer. The pox of such antic, limping, affecting fantasies; these new tuners of accents!—By Jesu, a very good blade!—a very tall man—a very good whore!—Why, is not this a lamentable thing, grandsire,⁷ that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies, these fashion-mongers, these panderers-mogs, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench?⁸ O,
their bows, their bows!

'For kings are clouts that every man shoots at,
Our crown the pin that thousands seek to cleave.'

4 Tybalt, the name given to a cat in the old storybook of Reynard the Fox. So in Decker's Satiromastix.

'The' you were Tybalt, prince of long-tailed cats.'
Again, in Have With You to Saffron Walden, by Nash:

'Not Tybalt prince of cats.'

5 So in the Return from Parnassus:—

'Strikes his poinard at a button's breadth.'

The phrase also occurs in the Fantaisies de Bruscambille, 1612, p. 181:—'Un coup de mousquet sans fourcheute dans le sixieme bouton.'

6 I. e. a gentleman of the first rank, or highest em-nence, among these duellists; and one who understands the whole science of quarrelling, and will tell you of the first cause, and the second cause, for which a man is to fight. The Clown, in As You Like It, talks of the seventh cause in the same sense.

7 All the terms of the fencing school were originally Italian: the rapier, or small thrusting sword, being first used in Italy. The hay is the word hay, you have it, used when a thrust reaches the antagonist. Our fencers on the same occasion cry out ha!

8 Humorously apostrophizing his ancestors, whose sober times were unacquainted with the fopperies here complained of.

9 During the ridiculous fashion which prevailed of great 'boulstered breeches,' (See Strutt's Manners and Customs, vol. iii. p. 98; Strype's Annals, vol. i. p. 73, Appendix; vol. ii. Appendix, note 17,) it is said that it was necessary to cut away hollow places in the benches

Enter ROMEO.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his roe, like a dried herring:—O, flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!—Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in; Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;—marry, she had a better love to be-rhyme her: Dido, a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots; Thisbe, a gray eye or so,¹ but not to the purpose.—Signior Romeo, bon jour! there's a French salutation to your French slop.² You gave us the counterfeit fairly last night.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the slip; Can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and, in such a case as mine, a man may strain courtesy.

Mer. That's as much as to say—such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning—to court'sy.

Mer. Thou has most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my pump well flowered.³

Mer. Well said: Follow me this jest now, till thou hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O, single-soled⁴ jest, solely singular for the singleness.

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio; my wits fail.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a watch.

Mer. Nay, if thy wits run the wild-goose chase,⁵ I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five: Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast never with me for any thing, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter sweeting;⁶ it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O, here's a wit of cheverel,⁷ that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad!

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide a broad goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs tolling up and down to hide his bauble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me stop in my tale against the hair.⁸

Ben. Thou would'st else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O, thou art deceiv'd, I would have made it short: for I was come to the whole depth of my tale; and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly geer!

Enter Nurse and PETER.

Mer. A sail, a sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter!

Peter. Ason!

Nurse. My fan, Peter.⁹

Mer. 'Prythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good den,¹⁰ fair gentleman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. 'Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the prick¹¹ of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you?

Rom. One, gentlewoman, that God hath made himself to mar.

Nurse. By my troth, it is well said;—For himself to mar, quoth'st?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yes, is the worst well? very well took, i' faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will indite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho!

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No hare, sir; unless a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent.

An old hare hoar,¹²

And an old hare hoar,

Is very good meat in lent;

But a hare that is hoar,

Is too much for a score,

When it hears ere it be spent.—

of the House of Commons, to make room for those monstrous protuberances, without which those who stood on the new form could not sit at ease on the old bench.

1 A gray eye appears to have meant what we now call a blue eye. He means to admit that Thisbe had a tolerable fine eye.

2 The slop was a kind of wide-kneed breeches, or rather trousers.

3 Here is a vein of wit too thin to be easily found. The fundamental idea is, that Romeo wore pinked pumps, that is, punched with holes in figures. It was the custom to wear ribands in the shoes formed in the shape of roses or other flowers. Thus in The Masque of Gray's Inn, 1614:—'Every masker's pump was fastened with a flower suitable to his cap.'

4 Malone and Stevens have made strange work with their conjectures of the meaning of single-soled. I have shown, (in a former note,) that single meant simple, silly. Single-soled had also the same meaning:—'He is a good senyill soule, and can do no harm; est doli neclius non simplex.'—Horman's Vulgaria.

5 One kind of horserace, which resembled the flight of wild geese, was formerly known by this name.—Two horses were started together, and which ever rider could get the lead, the other rider was obliged to follow him wherever he chose to go. This explains the pleasantry kept up here. 'My wit fails,' says Mercutio. Romeo exclaims briskly, 'Switch and spurs, switch and spurs.' To which Mercutio rejoins,

'Nay, if thy wits run the wild goose chase,' &c. Burton mentions this sport, Anat. of Melan. p. 266, edit. 1682.—See also the article Chase in Chambers's Dictionary.

6 The allusion is to an apple of that name.

7 Soft stretching leather, kid leather.

8 This phrase, which is of French extraction, a contre poil, occurs again in Troilus and Cressida:—'Merry against the hair.'

9 The business of Peter carrying the Nurse's fan, seems ridiculous to modern manners, but it was formerly the practice. In The Serving Man's Comfort, 1598, we are informed, 'The mistress, must have one to carry her cloake and hood, another her fanne.' So in Love's Labour's Lost:—'To see him walk before a lady, and to bear her fan.'

10 I.e. 'God give you a good even.' The first of these contractions is common in our old dramas. So in Brome's Northern Lass:—'God you good even, sir.'

11 So in King Henry VI. Part III. Act I. Sc. 4:—

'And made an evening at the noontide prick.' I.e. the point of noon. A prick is a point, a note of distinction in writing, a stop. So in Bright's Character, or Arte of Short Writing, 1598:—'If the worde end in ed, as I loved, then make a prick in the character of the word on the left side.'

12 Hoar, or hoary is often used for mouldy, as things grow white from moulding. These lines seem to have been part of an old song. In the quarto, 1597, we have this stage direction:—'He walks by them [i.e. the Nurse and Peter] and sings.'

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mar. Farewell, ancient lady; farewell, lady, lady.

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.]

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so full of his ropery?¹

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down an 'a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his skains-mates:²—And thou must stand by too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you: I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexed, that every part about me quivers. Scurvy knave!—'Pray you, sir, a word: and, as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out; what she bade me say, I will keep to myself: but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her into a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behaviour, as they say: for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very weak dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress. I protest unto thee,— Nurse. Good heart! and, i' faith, I will tell her as much: Lord, lord, she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to shrift this afternoon;

And there she shall at Friar Laurence's cell Be shriv'd, and married. Here is for thy pains.

Nurse. No, truly, sir; not a penny.

Rom. Go to; I say, you shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there.

Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall:

Within this hour my man shall be with thee; And bring these cords made like a tackled stair,³

Which to the high top-gallant of my joy Must be my convoy in the secret night.

Farewell!—Be trusty, and I'll quit thy pains.

Farewell!—Commend me to thy mistress.

Nurse. Now God in heaven bless thee!—Hark you, sir.

Rom. What say'st thou, my dear nurse?

1 The burthen of an old song. See Twelfth Night, Act II. Sc. 3.

2 Ropery was anciently used in the same sense as rogery is now. So in The Three Ladies of London, 1584:—

'Thou art very pleasant, and full of thy ropery.'

3 By skains-mates the old lady probably means engaggering companions. A skain, or skeln, was an Irish knife or dagger, a weapon suitable to the purpose of ruffling fellows. Green, in his Quip for an Upstart Courtier, describes 'an ill-flavoured knave, who wore by his side a skaine, like a brewer's bung knife.'

4 i. e. like stairs of rope in the tackle of a ship. A stair, for a flight of stairs, is still the language of Scotland, and was once common to both kingdoms.

5 So in Arthur Brooke's poem:—

'A pretty babe, quoth she, it was, when it was young, Lord, how it could full prettily have prated with its tongue.'

6 The Nurse is represented as a prating, silly creature; she says that she will tell Romeo a good joke about his mistress, and asks him whether rosemary and Romeo do not both begin with a letter; he says, yes, an

Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you ne'er hear say—

Two may keep counsel, putting one away?

Rom. I warrant thee; my man's as true as steel.

Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady,—lord, lord!—when 'twas a little prating thing,—O,—there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, that would fain lay knife aboard: but she, good soul, had as lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the properer man: but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, she looks as pale as any clout in the varsal world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?⁷

Rom. Ay, nurse; What of that? both with an R.

Nurse. Ah, mocker! that's the dog's name. R is for the dog. No; I know it begins with some other letter: and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it.

Rom. Commend me to thy lady. [Exit.]

Nurse. Ay, a thousand times.—Peter!

Pet. Anon!

Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Capulet's Garden. Enter JULIET.

Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send the nurse;

In half an hour she promis'd to return. Perchance, she cannot meet him: that's not so.—O, she is lame! love's herks should be thoughts,¹ Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams, Driving back shadows over louring hills: Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love, And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Now is the sun upon the highest hill Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve

Is three long hours,—yet she is not come. Had she affections, and warm youthful blood,

She'd be as swift in motion as a ball; My words would bandy her to my sweet love,

And his to me: But old folks, many feign as they were dead;

Unwieldy, slow, heavy and pale as lead.

Enter Nurse and PETER.

O, God, she comes!—O, honey nurse, what news? Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away.

Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit PETER.]

Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O, Lord! why look'st thou sad?

Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily; If good, thou sham'st the music of sweet news By playing it to me with so sour a face.

Nurse. I am weary, give me leave awhile:—Fie, how my bones ache! What a jaunt have I had!

Jul. I would, thou had'st my bones, and I thy news:

Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

R. She, whom we must suppose could not read, thought he mocked her, and says, No, sure I know better, R is the dog's name, yours begins with some other letter. This is natural enough, and in character. R put her in mind of that sound which dogs make when they snarl. Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, says, 'R is the dog's letter, and hirreth in the sound.'
Irritata canis quod R. R. quam plurima dicit.
Lucil.

7 The speech is thus continued in the quarto, 1597:—
—should be thought,
And run more swift than hasty powder first
Doth hurry from the fearful cannon's mouth
Oh, now she comes! Tell me, gentle nurse,
What says my love?

The greatest part of this scene is likewise added since that edition. Shakespeare, however, seems to have thought one of the ideas comprised in the foregoing quotation from the earliest quarto too valuable to be lost. He has, therefore, inserted it in Romeo's first speech to the Apothecary, in Act v.—
As violently as hasty powder first
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb!

ENGLISH LANGUAGE,

RECOMMENDATIONS.

THIS volume is designed to be a complete defining and pronouncing dictionary for general use. With reference to the first object, it embraces a much larger proportion of Dr. Webster's great work, than is usual in abridgments of this kind, comprising more than half the matter of the two original quartos. With reference to the second object, important additions have been made from other sources, which render it a more comprehensive work than any of the kind in our language; embracing, as it does, not only the pronunciation of English words, but of Latin, Greek, and Scripture Proper Names. Being formed with these views, it contains:

1st. All the words which are found in the American Dictionary, with numerous additions from other quarters.

2d. All the definitions of the original work, with all the shades of meaning as there given, expressed in the author's own language, though to some extent in abridged terms. The plan, however, has been to give the definitions, especially of synonymous words, with great fullness; so that this work is a substitute, to a great extent, for a book of synonyms.

3d. A complete system of English Pronunciation, every word being so marked, as to exhibit the power of each letter, and the proper place of the accent, at a single glance.

4th. A synopsis of words of disputed pronunciation. This enables the reader to examine for himself, as to doubtful points. About nine hundred words are given in the synopsis, with the decisions of seven distinguished writers on English orthoepy.

5th. The whole of Walker's Key to the Pronunciation of Latin, Greek, and Scripture Proper Names. This is the sole and acknowledged standard on these subjects, both in England and America. When printed by itself, this work makes a volume of nearly three hundred pages, 8vo.

Of the numerous recommendations of the original work and the abridgment, the following only can be here given.

From officers of Yale and Middlebury Colleges, and of the Andover Theological Institution.

"The merits of Dr. Webster's American Dictionary of the English language are very extensively acknowledged. We regard it as a great improvement on all the works which have preceded it: the definitions have a character of discrimination, copiousness, perspicuity, and accuracy, not found, we believe, in any other dictionary of the English language."

From Rev. Dr. Wayland, President of Brown University.
"It gives me pleasure to state, that I have made use of your quarto or octavo dictionary, ever since the time of their publication; and that for copiousness, for exactitude of definition, and adaptedness to the present state of literature and science, they seem to me to be the most valuable works of the kind that I have ever seen in our language."

From Dr. Chapin, President of Columbia College, D. C.
"I am prepared, after protracted and careful examination, to say that, in my judgment, the dictionary of Noah Webster possesses unrivaled merit."

From Hon. Judge Story.
"I have had occasion to use and examine Dr. Webster's quarto dictionary, and the abridgment of it by Mr. Worcester. Each of them appears to me to be executed with great care, learning, and ability."

From Dr. Fish and other officers of the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Ct.

"We have seen and examined your American Dictionary, and we think it unrivaled by any work of the kind in the English language."

From the Medical Faculty of Yale College, and other distinguished physicians.

"The subscribers having examined Dr. Webster's quarto and octavo dictionaries, take pleasure in expressing our approbation of these works. The definitions, the most important part of such works, as to practical purposes, are full and correct, and the vocabulary is by far the most extensive that has been published; indeed, it is so complete as to be a substitute for all other dictionaries of the language."

From the Rev. T. H. Gallaudet, late Principal of the American Deaf and Dumb Asylum.

"I have no hesitation in saying, that Dr. Webster's English Dictionary is decidedly the best with which I am acquainted."

Similar recommendations have been given by more than a hundred members of Congress, and by various corporations of literary men and teachers.

FOREIGN TESTIMONIALS.

From the Cambridge Independent Press.

"When this work is as well known in Britain as it is in America, it will supersede every other book of the kind in the same department of letters. Its excellence is obvious and indisputable."

From the Dublin Literary Gazette.

"Dr. Webster's knowledge of languages appears to be extensive, and his researches for authorities to establish the meaning of words, not to be met with in other dictionaries, numerous. The introduction of technical and scientific terms is a very valuable addition to a general dictionary. The notation adopted by him for expressing the true sound of the vowels, is much simpler than that introduced by Sheridan, and followed by Walker."

From the Examiner.

"The veteran Webster's work is new to this country; but, as far as we can judge, it seems to justify the highly favorable character it has long maintained in America; and our view is corroborated by that of a learned friend and critic, who does not hesitate to say, that it is the best and most useful dictionary of the English language that he has ever seen."

From the Sun.

"It is impossible to refer to any one page, without discovering that Dr. Webster is a capital etymologist. His derivations are exceedingly just, and his explanations of terms are full without being redundant."

From the Aberdeen Chronicle.

"We beg to call the attention of our readers to the republication of this work, the supreme excellence of which is so obvious, that it is unnecessary for us to enlarge on its merits."

Extended critiques on the work, confirming these views, have appeared in the Westminster Review, and the Scientific Journal of Professor Jameson of Edinburgh.

Nurse. Jesu, what haste? can you not stay awhile?
Do you not see, that I am out of breath?
Jul. How art thou of breath, when thou hast breath

To say to me—thou art out of breath?
The excuse, that thou dost make in this delay,
Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse.
Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that;
Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance:
Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad?

Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, not he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg excels all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare: He is not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What have you dined at home?

Jul. No, no: But all this I did know before;
What says he of our marriage? what of that?

Nurse. Lord, how my head akes! what a head have I?

It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces.
My back o' t'other side,—O, my back, my back!—
Beslew your heart for sending me about,
To catch my death with jaunting up and down!

Jul. I faith, I am sorry that thou art not well:
Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love?

Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And, I warrant, a virtuous:—Where is your mother?

Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within;
Where should she be? How oddly thou repliest?
Your love says like an honest gentleman,—
Where is your mother?

Nurse. O, god's lady dear!
Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow;
Is this the poultice for my aking bones?
Henceforward do your messages yourself.

Jul. Here's such a coil,—come, what says Romeo?

Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shrift to-day?
Jul. I have.

Nurse. Then hie you hence to Friar Laurence's cell,

There stays a husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks,
They'll be in scarlet straight at any news.
Hie you to church; I must another way,
To fetch a ladder, by the which your love
Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark:
I am the drudge and toil in your delight;
But you shall bear the burden soon at night.
Go, I'll to dinner; hie you to the cell.

Jul. Hie to high fortune!—honest nurse, farewell.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE and ROMEO.¹

Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That after-hours with sorrow chide us not!

Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can,
It cannot countervail the exchange of joy
That one short minute gives me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,

¹ This scene is exhibited in quite another form in the first quarto, 1597. But it is hardly worth exhibiting here in its original state. The reader may see it in the variorum Shakespeare, or in the play as published by Stevens among the twenty quartos.

² So in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece:—

'These violent vanities can never last.'

³ 'He that travels too fast is as long before he comes to the end of his journey as he that travels slow. Provocation produces mishap.'—Johnson.

⁴ This passage originally stood thus:—

'Youth's love is quick, swifter than swiftest speed,
See where she comes!—'

So light a foot ne'er hurts the trodden flower;
Of love and joy, see, see, the sovereign power!'

Then love-devouring death do what he dare.

It is enough I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights have violent ends,²
And in their triumph die! like fire and powder,
Which, as they kiss, consume: The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite:
Therefore, love moderately: long love doth so;
Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow.³

Enter JULIET.

Here comes the lady:—O, so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:⁴
A lover may bestride the gossamers⁵
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

Jul. Good even to my ghostly confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thank thee, daughter, for us both.

Jul. As much to him, else are his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah, Juliet, if the measure of thy joy

Be heap'd like mine, and that thy skill be more

To blazon it, then sweeten with thy breath

This neighbour air, and let rich music's tongue

Unfold the imagin'd happiness that both

Receive in either by this dear encounter.

Jul. Conceit⁶ more rich in matter than in words,

Braids of his substance, not of ornament:

They are but beggars that can count their worth;⁷

But my true love is grown to such excess,

I cannot sum up half my sum of wealth.

Fri. Come, come with me, and we will make short work;

For, by your leaves, you shall not stay alone,

Till holy church incorporate two in one. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A public Place. Enter MERCUTIO, BENVOLIO, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire;
The day is hot,¹ the Capulets abroad,
And, if we meet, we shall not 'scape a brawl;
For now these hot days, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of these fellows, that when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, God send me no need of thee! and, by the operation of the second cup, draws it on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Jack in thy mood as any in Italy; and as soon moved to be moody, and as soon moody to be moved.

Ben. And what to?

Mer. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shortly, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes: What eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg, for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not fall out with a tailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his

⁵ See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 6.

⁶ Conceit here means imagination. Vide Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 4.

⁷ So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.'

⁸ It is observed, that, in Italy, almost all assassinations are committed during the heat of summer. In Sir Thomas Smith's Commonwealth of England, 1583, b. ii. c. xix. p. 70, it is said:—'And commonly every yeere, or each second yeere, in the beginning of summer or afterwards, (for in the warme time the people for its most part be more unruly,) even in the calme time of peace, the prince with his council chooseth out,' &c.

new shoes with old riband? and yet thou wilt tutor me from quarrelling!¹

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee simple? O, simple!²

Enter TYBALT, and others.

Ben. By any head, here come the Capulets.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them. Gentlemen, good den: a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of us? Couple it with something; make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consortest with Romeo,—

Mer. Consort!³ what, dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlestick; here's that shall make you dance. 'Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Either withdraw into some private place, Or reason coldly of your grievances, Or else depart; here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them gaze;

I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter ROMEO.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir! here comes my man.

Mer. But I'll be hang'd, sir, if he wear your livery: Marry, go before to the field, he'll be your follower; Your worship, in that sense, may call him—man.

Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee, can afford No better term than this—Thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee Doth much excuse the appertaining rage To such a greeting:—Villain am I none; Therefore farewell. I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries That thou hast done me; therefore turn, and draw.

Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee; But love thee better than thou canst devise, Till thou shalt know the reason of my love: And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied.

Mer. O calm, dishonourable, vile submission! *A la stoccata*⁴ carries it away. [Draws.]

Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk?

Tyb. What would'st thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of cats,⁵ nothing but one of your nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, dry-beat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pitcher⁶ by the ears? make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you. [Drawing.]

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado. [They fight.]

1 i. e. thou wilt endeavour to restrain me by prudential advice from quarrelling.

2 This and the foregoing speech have been added since the first quarto, with some few circumstances in the rest of the scene, as well as in the ensuing one.

3 To comprehend Mercutio's capitious indignation, it should be remembered that a consort was the old term for a set or company of musicians.

4 The Italian term for a thrust or stab with a rapier.

5 Alluding to his name. See Act II. Sc. 4.

6 Warburton says that we should read picche, which signifies a coat or covering of skin or leather; meaning the scabbard. A picche or leathern coat seems to have been the common dress of a carman. The old copy reads—scabbard.

7 After this the quarto, 1597, continues Mercutio's speech as follows:—

'—A pox o' both your houses! I shall be fairly mounted upon four men's shoulders for your house of the Montagues and the Capulets; and then some peasanly rogue, some sexton, some base slave, shall write my epitaph, that Tybalt came and broke the

Rom. Draw, Benvolio:

Beat down their weapons:—Gentlemen, for shame Forbear this outrage:—Tybalt—Mercutio—

The prince expressly hath forbid this bandying In Verona streets:—hold, Tybalt;—good Mercutio.

[Exeunt TYBALT and his Partizans.]

Mer. I am hurt;—

A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:— Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben.

What, art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 'tis enough.—

Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeon.

[Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve to ask me to-morrow, and you shall find me a grave man.⁷ I am peppered, I warrant, for this world:—A plague o' both your houses!—Zounds, a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a braggart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall faint.—A plague o' both your houses! They have made worm's meat of me:

I have it, and soundly too:—Your houses!

[Exeunt MERCUTIO and BENVOLIO.]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf; my reputation stain'd With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour Hath been my kinsman:—O, sweet Juliet, Thy beauty hath made me effeminate, And in my temper softens'd valour's steel.

Re-enter BENVOLIO.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath aspir'd⁸ the clouds, Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth depend;

This but begins the wo, others must end.

Re-enter TYBALT.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain! Away to heaven, respective lenity,⁹

And fire-ey'd fury be my conduct!¹⁰ now:—

Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again,

That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul

Is but a little way above our heads,

Staying for thine to keep him company;

Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him.

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that did'st consort him here, Shalt with him hence.

prince's laws, and Mercutio was slain for the first and second cause. Where's the surgeon?

Boy. He's come, sir.

Mer. Now he'll keep a mumbling in my guts on the other side.—Come, Benvolio, lend me thy hand: A pox o' both your houses!

As for the jest, 'You shall find me a grave man,' it was better in old language than it is at present; Lidgate says, in his Elegy upon Chaucer:—

'My master Chaucer now is grave.'

In Sir Thomas Overbury's description of a Sexton, Characters, 1616, we have it again:—'At every church-style commonly there's an ale-house; where let him be found never so idle-pated, hee is still a grave drunkard.'

8 We never use the verb aspire, without some particle, as to and after. There are numerous ancient examples of a similar use of it with that in the text thus Marlowe, in his Tamburlaine:—

'Until our bodies turn to elements,

And both our souls aspire celestial thrones.'

So in Chapman's version of the ninth Iliad:—

'—and aspire d the gods' eternal seats

9 This day's unhappy destiny hangs over the days yet to come. There will yet be more mischief.

10 'Respective lenity' is 'considerate gentleness.'

11 Conduct for conductor.

Rom. This shall determine that.

[They fight; TYBALT falls.]

Ben. Romeo, away, be gone!

The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:
Stand not amaz'd:—the prince will doom thee death
If thou art taken:—hence!—be gone!—away!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool!

Ben. Why dost thou stay?
[Exit Romeo.]

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he, that kill'd Mercutio?
Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. Up, sir, go with me;
I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives, and others.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O, noble prince, I can discover all
The unlucky manage of this fatal brawl:
There lies the man, slain by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio.

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O, my brother's child!

Unhappy sight! ah, me, the blood is spill'd
Of my dear kinsman!—Prince, as thou art true,^a
For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.
O, cousin, cousin!

Prin. Benvolio, who began this bloody fray?

Ben. Tybalt, here slain, whom Romeo's hand did slay;

Romeo that spoke him fair, bade him bethink
How nice^b the quarrel was, and urg'd withal
Your high displeasure:—All thus—uttered
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd,
Could not take truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt deaf to peace, but that he tilts
With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast;
Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point,
And, with a martial scorn, with one haub beats
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity
Retorts it: Romeo, he cries aloud,
Hold, friends! friends, part! and, swifter than air
tongue,
His agile arm beats down their fatal pass,

1 In the first quarto, 'O! I am fortune's slave.'— Shakespeare is very fond of alluding to the mockery of fortune. Thus we have in Lear:—'I am the natural fool of fortune.' And in Timon of Athens:—'Ye fools of fortune.'
In Julius Caesar the expression is, 'He is but fortune's knave.' Hamlet speaks of 'the fools of nature.'
And in Measure for Measure we have 'merely thou art death's fool.' See Pericles, Act III. Sc. 2.

2 As thou art just and upright. So in King Richard III. 1:—'And if King Edward be as true and just.'

3 Nice here means silly, trifling, or wanton.

4 The charge of falsehood on Benvolio, though produced at hazard, is very just. The author, who seems to intend the character of Benvolio as good, meant perhaps to show how the best minds, in a state of faction and discord, are distorted to criminal partiality.——
Johnson.

5 The sentiment here enforced is different from that found in the first edition, 1597. There the Prince concludes his speech with these words:—

'Pity shall dwell, and govern with us still;

Mercy to all but murderers,—pardoning none that kill.
6 The poet probably remembered Marlowe's King
Edward II. which was performed before 1593:—

'Gallop apace, bright Phœbus, through the skies,

And duskie night in rusty iron car;

Between you both, shorten the time, I pray,

That I may see that most desired day.'

There is also a passage in Barnabe Riche's Farewell to the Militarie Profession, 1633, which bears some resemblance to this.

7 Here ends this speech in the original quarto. The rest of the scene has likewise received considerable alterations and additions.

8 A great deal of ingenious criticism has been bestowed in endeavouring to ascertain the meaning of this expression. Dr. Warburton thought that the run-away in question was the sun; but Mr. Heath has most completely disproved this opinion. Mr. Steevens considers the passage as extremely elliptical, and regards the

And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm
An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled:
But by and by comes back to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertain'd revenge,
And to't they go like lightning; for, ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slain;
And, as he fell, did Romeo turn and fly;
This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague,
Affection makes him false;—he speaks not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this black strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life:

I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give;
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio;

Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend;

His fault concludes but, what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And, for that offence,

Immediately we do exile him hence:

I have an interest in your hates' proceeding;

My blood for your rude brawls doth lie a-bleeding;

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,

That you shall all repent the loss of mine:

I will be deaf to pleading and excuses;

Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses;

Therefore use none: let Romeo hence in haste,

Else, when he's found, that hour is his last.

Bear hence this body, and attend our will:

Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.^a

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter JULIET.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery footed steeds,^b

Towards Phœbus' mansion; such a wagoner

As Phaeton would whip you to the west,

And bring in cloudy night immediately.^c

Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night!

That run-away's eyes may wink:^d and Romeo

Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!^e

Lovers can see to do their amorous rites

By their own beauties:^f or, if love be blind,

It best agrees with night.—Come, civil^g night, night as the run-away; making Juliet wish that its eyes, the stars, might retire, to prevent discovery. Mr.

Justice Blackstone can perceive nothing optative in the lines, but simply a reason for Juliet's wish for a cloudy night; yet, according to this construction of the passage, the grammar is not very easily to be discovered.—
Whoever attentively reads over Juliet's speech will be inclined to think, or even to be altogether satisfied, that the whole tenor of it is optative. With respect to the calling night a run-away, one might surely ask how it can possibly be so termed in an abstract point of view?
Is it a greater fugitive than the morning, the noon, or the evening? Mr. Steevens lays great stress on Shak-speare's having before called the night a run-away in the Merchant of Venice:—

'For the close night doth play the run-away.'

But there it was already far advanced, and might therefore with great propriety be said to play the run-away; here it was not begun. The same remark will apply to the passage cited from the Fair Maid of the Exchange.
Where then is this run-away to be found? or can it be Juliet herself? She who has just been secretly married to the enemy of her parents might with some propriety be termed a run-away from her duty; but she had not abandoned her native pendency. She therefore invokes the night to veil those rites which she was about to perform, and to bring her Romeo to her arms in darkness and silence. The lines that immediately follow may be thought to favour this interpretation; and the whole scene may possibly bring to the reader's recollection an interesting part in the beautiful story of Cupid and Psyche.—Douce.

9 So in Marlowe's Hero and Leander:—

'—dark night is Cupid's day.'

Milton, in his Comus, might have been indebted to Shakespeare:—

'Virtue can see to do what virtue would

By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk.'

10 Civil is grave, solemn.

Thou sover-suited matron, all in black,
And learn me how to lose a winning match,
Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenhoods:
Hood my unmann'd blood bating in my cheeks,¹
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,

Think true love acted, simple modesty.
Come, night!—Come, Romeo! come, thou day in night!

For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night
Whiter than new snow upon a raven's back.—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night;²

Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish³ sun.—
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it; and, though I am sold,
Not yet enjoy'd: So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child, that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O, here comes my nurse,

Enter Nurse, with Corda.

And she brings news: and every tongue, that speaks
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.— Now, nurse, what news? What hath thou there, the cords,

That Romeo bade thee fetch?

Nurse. Ay, ay, the corda.
[Throws them down.]

Jul. Ah me! what news! why dost thou wring thy hands?

Nurse. Ah, well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's dead!

We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Alack the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!

Jul. Can heaven be so envious?

Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot:—O, Romeo! Romeo!—
Who ever would have thought it?—Romeo!

Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me
thus?

This torture should be roar'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but I,⁴
And that bare vowel I shall poison more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice:⁵
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that make thee answer, I.
If he be slain, say—I; or if not, no:
Brief sounds determine of my weal, or woe.

Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,—
God save the mark!⁶—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All in gore blood; I swooned at the sight.

Jul. O, break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at once!

To prison, eyes! ne'er look on liberty!
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here;
And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy bier!

Nurse. O, Tybalt, Tybalt, the best friend I had!
O, courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!

Jul. What storm is this, that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?

1 These are terms of falconry. An unmann'd hawk is one that is not brought to endure company. Bating is fluttering or beating the wings as striving to fly away.
2 Why here walk I, in the black brow of night.

3 Garish. King John.
4 Milton has this speech in his thoughts when he wrote Il Penseroso:—

'Hide me from day's garish eye.'
Hence also 'Till civil-suited morn appear.' Garish is gaudy, glittering.

5 In Shakespeare's time the affirmative particle ay was usually written I, and here it is necessary to retain the old spelling.

6 See what is said of the basilisk, King Henry VI. Part II. Act III. Sc. 2.

7 See Uchello, Act I. Sc. 1.

My dear-lov'd cousin, and my dearer lord?—
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom!
For who is living, if those two are gone?

Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd;
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd.

Jul. O, God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's
blood?

Nurse. It did, it did; alas the day! it did.
Jul. O, serpent heart, hid with a flowing face!

Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!

Dove feather'd raven! wolfish-ravens lamb!
Despised substance of divinest show!

Just opposite to what thou justly seem'st,
A damned saint, an honourable villain!—

O, nature! what hadst thou to do in hell,
When thou didst bower the spirit of a fiend

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?
Was ever book, containing such vile matter,

So fairly bound? O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace!

Nurse. There's no trust,
No faith, no honesty in men; all perjur'd,

All forsworn, all naught, all dissemblers.—
Ah, where's my man? give me some ayes vile:—

These griefs, these woes, these sorrows make me old.
Shame come to Romeo!

Jul. Blister'd be thy tongue,
For such a wish! he was not born to shame:

Upon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throne where honour may be crown'd

Sole monarch of the universal earth.
O, what a beast was I to chide at him.

Nurse. Will you speak well of him that kill'd your cousin?

Jul. Shall I speak ill of him that is my husband?
Ah, poor my lord, what tongue shall smooth⁷ thy
name,

When I, thy three-hours wife, have mangled it?—
But wherefore, villain, didst thou kill my cousin?

That villain cousin would have kill'd my husband:
Back, foolish tears, back to your native spring;

Your tributary drops belong to woe,
Which you, mistaking, offer up to joy.⁸

My husband lives, that Tybalt would have slain;
And Tybalt's dead, that would have slain my husband:

All this is comfort: Wherefore weep I, then?
Some word there was, worse than Tybalt's death,

That murder'd me; I would forget it fain;
But, O! it presses to my memory,

Like damned guilty deeds to sinners' minds;
Tybalt is dead, and Romeo—banish'd:

That—banish'd, that one word—banish'd,
Hath slain ten thousand Tybalts.⁹ Tybalt's death

Was wo enough, if it had ended there:
Or,—if sour wo delights in fellowship,

And needily will be rank'd with other griefs,—
Why follow'd not, when she said—Tybalt's dead,

Thy father, or thy mother, nay, or both,
Which modern¹⁰ lamentation might have mov'd?

But, with a rear-ward following Tybalt's death
Romeo is banish'd,—to speak that word,

Is father, mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
All slain, all dead:—Romeo is banish'd,—

There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,

7 The same image occurs in Macbeth:—
'— look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it.'

The succeeding line has its parallel in King John:—
'Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens.'

8 To smooth is to flatter, to speak fair; it is here metaphorically used for to mitigate or assuage the asperity of censure with which Romeo's name would be now mentioned.

9 So in The Tempest:—
'— I am a fool
To weep at what I'm glad of.'

10 I. e. is worse than the loss of ten thousand Tybalts.
11 Modern is trite, common. So in As You Like It:—
'Full of wise saws, and modern instances'

In that word's death; no words can that wound sound.—
Where is my father, and my mother, nurse?
Nurse. Weeping and wailing over Tybalt's corpse:
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Jul. Wash they his wounds with tears? mine shall be spent,

When theirs are dry, for Romeo's banishment.
Take up those cords:—Poor ropes, you are beguiled,
Both you and I; for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed;
But I, a maid, die maiden-widowed.
Come, cords; come, nurse; I'll to my wedding bed;
And death, not Romeo, take my maidenhead.

Nurse. Hie to your chamber: I'll find Romeo
To comfort you:—I wot well where he is.
Hark ye, your Romeo will be here at night;
I'll to him; he is hid at Laurence's cell.

Jul. O, find him! give this ring to my true knight,
And bid him come to take his last farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR
LAURENCE and ROMEO.

Fri. Romeo, come forth; come forth, thou fearful
man;

Affliction is enshrou'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father, what news? what is the prince's doom?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar
Is my dear son with such sour company:
I bring thee tidings of the prince's doom.

Rom. What less than dooms-day is the prince's doom?

Fri. A gentler judgment vanish'd from his lips,
Not body's death, but body's banishment.

Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say—death:
For exile hath more terror in his look,

Much more than death: do not say—banishment.
Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:

Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walls,
But purgatory, torture, hell itself.

Hence-banished is banish'd from the world,
And world's exile is death:—then banishment
Is death miſterm'd: calling death banishment,
Thou cut'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smil'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O, deadly sin! O, rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,
Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy,¹ and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here,
Where Juliet lives:² and every cat and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven, and may look on her,
But Romeo may not.—More validity,³
More honourable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;
Who, even in pure and vestal modesty,
Still blush as thinking their own kisses sin;
But Romeo may not; he is banished:
Flies may do this, when I from this must fly
They are free men, but I am banished.
And say'st thou yet, that exile is not death?
Hadt thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-tooth'd knife,
No sudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,
But—banished—to kill me; banished?

1 The quarto, 1597, reads 'This is mere mercy,' i. e. absolute mercy.

2 From this and the foregoing speech of Romeo, Dryden has borrowed in his beautiful paraphrase of Chaucer's Palamon and Arcite:—

'Heaven is not but where Emily abides,
And where she's absent all is hell besides.'

3 Validity is again employed to signify worth, value, in the first scene of King Lear. By courtship, courtesy, courtly behaviour is meant.

O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profess'd,
To mangle me with that word—banishment?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak a word.

Rom. O, thou wilt speak again of banishment.
Fri. I'll give thee armour to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,⁴
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished!—Hang up philosophy!
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,

Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom:
It helps not, it prevails not, talk no more.

Fri. O, then I see that madmen have no ears.
Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.⁵
Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then might'st thou speak, then might'st thou tear
thy hair,

And fall upon the ground, as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knocks; good Romeo, hide thyself.

Rom. Not I; unless the breath of heart-sick groans,

Mistlike, unfold me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?
Romeo, arise;

Thou wilt be taken:—Stay awhile: stand up;
Run to my study:—By and by:—God's will!

What wilfulness is this?—I come, I come.

Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will?

Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall know my errand;

I come from Lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome, then.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. O, holy friar, O, tell me, holy friar,
Where is my lady's lord, where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made drunk.

Nurse. O, he is even in my mistress' case,
Just in her case!

Fri. O, woful sympathy!
Piteous predicament!

Nurse. Even so lies she,
Blubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering:—
Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man:

For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand;
Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse!

Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir!—Well, death's the end of all.

Rom. Spak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her?
Doth she not think me an old murderer,

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood remov'd but little from her own?

Where is she? and how doth she? and what says
My conceal'd lady⁶ to our cancell'd love?

4 So in the poem of Remeus and Juliet, the Friar says:—

'Virtue is always thrall to troubles and annoy,
But wisdom in adversity finds cause of quiet joy.'

5 The same phrase, and with the same meaning, occurs in The Winter's Tale:—

'—Can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? dispute his own estate?'

i. e. is he able to talk over his own affairs, or the present state he is in?

6 The epithet conceal'd is to be understood, not of the person, but of the condition of the lady; so that,

Nurse. O, she says nothing, sir, but weeps and weeps;

And now falls on her bed; and then starts up,
And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries,
And then falls down again.

Rom. As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand
Murder'd her kinsman.—O, tell me, friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this anatomy
Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack
The hateful mansion. [Drawing his sword.]

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art;
Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote
The unreasonable fury of a beast:¹
Unseemly woman, in a seeming man!
Or ill seeming beast, in seeming both!
Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself?
And slay thy lady too that lives in thee,
By doing damned hate upon thyself;
Why rail'st thou on thy birth,² the heaven, and earth?

Since, birth, and heaven, and earth, all three do meet
In thee at once; which thou at once would'st lose.
Fie, fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like a usurer, abound'st in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Thy noble shape is but a form of war;
Digressing from the valour of a man:
Thy dear love, sworn, but hollow perjury,
Killing that love which thou hast vow'd to cherish:
Thy wit that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both.
Like powder in a skill-less soldier's flask,³
Is set on fire by thine own ignorance,
And thou dismember'd with thine own defence.⁴
What, rouse thee, man! thy Juliet is alive,
For whose dear sake thou wast but lately dead;
There art thou happy: Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou slew'st Tybalt; there art thou happy too:
The law, that threaten'd death, becomes thy friend,
And turns it to exile; there art thou happy:
A pack of blessings lights upon thy back;
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love:
Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
Go, get thee to thy love, as was decreed,
Ascend her chamber, hence and comfort her;
But, look, thou stay not till the watch be set,
For then thou canst not pass to Mantua;
Where thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of the prince, and call thee back
With twenty hundred thousand times more joy
Than thou went'st forth in lamentation.—
Go before, nurse: commend me to thy lady;

the sense is, 'My lady, whose being so, together with our marriage which made her so, is concealed from the world.'

² Art thou, quoth he, a man? thy shape saith, so thou art,

Thy crying and thy weeping eyes denote a woman's heart,

For manly reason is quite from off thy mind outchased,
And in her stead affections lewd, and fancies highly placed;

So that I stood in doubt, this hour at the least,
If thou a man or woman wert, or else a brutish beast.

³ Romeo has not here relied on his birth, &c. though in his interview with the Friar, as described in the poem, he is made to do so. Shakespeare copied the remonstrance of the Friar, without reviewing the former part of this scene. He has in other places fallen into a similar inaccuracy, by sometimes following and sometimes deserting his original. The lines from Why rail'st thou on thy birth, &c. in thy own defence, are not in the first copy; they are formed on a passage in the poem.

And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
Which heavy sorrow makes them apt unto:
Romeo is coming.⁵

Nurse. O, Lord, I could have staid here all the night,

To hear good counsel: O, what learning is!—
My lord, I'll tell my lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my sweet prepare to chide.
Nurse. Here, sir, a ring she bid me give you, sir:
Hie you, make haste, for it grows very late.

[Exit Nurse.]
Rom. How well my comfort is reviv'd by this!

Fri. Go hence: Good night! and here stands all your state;

Either be gone before the watch be set,
Or by the break of day disguis'd from hence
Sojourn in Mantua: I'll find out your man,
And he shall signify from time to time
Every good hap to you, that chances here:
Give me thy hand; 'tis late: farewell: good night.⁶

Rom. But that a joy past joy calls out on me,
It were a grief, so brief to part with thee:
Farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, and PARIS.

Cap. Things have fall'n out, sir, so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter:
Look you, she lov'd her kinsman Tybalt dearly,
And so did I;—Well, we were born to die.—
'Tis very late, she'll not come down to-night:

I promise you, but for your company,
I would have been a-bed an hour ago.

Par. These times of wo afford no time to woo:
Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.

La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow:

To-night she's mew'd up to her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
Of my child's love: I think, she will be rul'd
In all respects by me; may more, I doubt it not.
Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed;
Acquaint her here of my son Paris' love;
And bid her, mark you me, on Wednesday next—
But, soft; What day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too soon,

O' Thursday let it be;—O' Thursday, tell her,

She shall be married to this noble earl:—

Will you be ready? do you like this haste?

We'll keep no great ado;—a friend, or two:

For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, if we revel much:

Therefore we'll have some half a dozen friends,

And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone:—O' Thursday be it, then:—

⁵ So in King Richard II. Act v. Sc. 3:—

'And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.'

And in Barnabe Riche's Farewell:—'Knowing that you should otherwise have used me than you have, you should have digressed, and swerved from your kind.'

⁶ To understand the force of this allusion, it should be remembered that the ancient English soldiers, using match-locks, instead of locks with flint, as at present, were obliged to carry a lighted match hanging at their belts, very near to the wooden flask in which they carried their powder. The same allusion occurs in Hemmours' Ordinary, an old collection of English Epigrams:

'When she his flask and touch-box set on fire,

And till this hour the burning is not cure.'

⁷ And thou torn to pieces with thine own weapons

⁸ Much of this speech has also been added since the first edition

⁹ The whole of your fortune depends on this.

¹⁰ Desperate means only bold, adventurous, as if he had said in the vulgar phrase, I will speak a bold word, and venture to promise you my daughter.—Johnson.

'Witness this desperate tender of mine honour.'

Weakest goes to the Wall, &c.

Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.—
Farewell, my lord.—Light to my chamber, ho!
Afore me, it is so very late, that we May call it early by and by:—Good night!¹

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Juliet's Chamber.² Enter ROMEO and JULIET.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree:³
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountain tops;
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. You light it not daylight, I know it, I:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,⁴
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.⁵

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;
I am content, so thou wilt have it so.

I'll say, you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;
Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads;
I have more care to stay, than will to go:—
Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, hence, be gone, away:
It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords, and unpleasing sharps.
Some say, the lark makes sweet division;⁶
This doth not so, for she divideth us:
Some say, the lark and loathed toad chang'd eyes;⁷
O, now I would they had chang'd voices too!
Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence with hunts-up⁸ to the day.
O, now be gone; more light and light it grows.

Rom. More light and light?—more dark and dark our woes.

1 The latter part of this scene is a good deal varied from the first quarto.

2 The stage direction in the first edition is, 'Enter Romeo and Juliet at a Window.' In the second quarto, 'Enter Romeo and Juliet aloft.' They appeared, probably, in the balcony which was erected on the old English stage. See Malone's Account of the Ancient Theatres, in vol. III. of Boswell's edition of Shakespeare.

3 This is not merely a poetical supposition. It is observable that the nightingale, if undisturbed, sits and sings upon the same tree for many weeks together. (As almost all birds sing only during the period of incubation, this may be accounted for; the male bird sings near where the female is sitting.) What Eustathius has observed relative to a fig-tree mentioned by Homer, in his twelfth Odyssey, may be applied to the passage before us:—'These particularities, which seem of no consequence, have a very good effect in poetry, as they give the relation an air of truth and probability. For what can induce a poet to mention such a tree, if the tree were not there in reality?'—Steevens.

4 Compare Sidney's Arcadia, 13th edition, p. 109:—'The moon, then full, (not thinking soon to be a torch-bearer to such beauty,) guided her steps.'

5 The quarto, 1597, reads:—

'Then stay awhile, thou shalt not go [so] soon.'

The succeeding speech, I think, (says Mr. Boswell,) is better in the same copy:—

'Let me stay here, let me be ta'en, and die;

If thou wilt have it so, I am content.

I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,

It is the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;

I'll say it is the nightingale that beats

The vauky heaven so far above our heads,

And not the lark, the messenger of morn;

Come, death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so—

What says my love? let's talk, 'tis not yet day.'

6 Adivision, in music, is a variation in melody upon some given fundamental harmony.

7 grataque feminis

Imbelli cithara carmina dividet.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Madam!

Jul. Nurse?

Nurse. Your lady mother's coming to your chamber:

The day is broke; be wary, look about.

[Exit Nurse.]

Jul. Then, window, let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell! one kiss, and I'll descend.

[ROMEO descends.]

Jul. Art thou gone so? my love! my lord! my friend!

I must hear from thee every day i' the hour,

For in a minute there are many days:

O! by this count I shall be much in years,⁹

Ere I again behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell! I will omit no opportunity
That may convey my greetings, love, to thee.

Jul. O, think'st thou, we shall ever meet again?

Rom. I doubt it not; and all these woes shall serve
For sweet discourses in our time to come.

Jul. O, God! I have an ill-divining soul!¹⁰

Methinks, I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb:

Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale.

Rom. And trust me, love, in my eye so do you:

Dry sorrow drinks our blood. Adieu! adieu!

[Exit ROMEO.]

Jul. O, fortune, fortune! all men call thee fickle:

If thou art fickle, what dost thou with him

That is renown'd for faith? Be fickle, fortune;

For then, I hope, thou wilt not keep him long,

But send him back.

La. Cap. [Within.] Ho, daughter! are you up?

Jul. Who is't that calls? is it my lady mother?

Is she not down so late, or up so early?

What unaccustom'd cause procures¹¹ her hither?

Enter LADY CAPULET

La. Cap. Why, how now, Juliet?

Jul. Madam, I am not well.

La. Cap. Evermore weeping for your cousin's

death?

What, wilt thou wash him from his grave with tears?

An if thou could'st, thou could'st not make him live;

Therefore, have done: Some grief shows much of

love:

But much of grief shows still some want of wit.

7 The toad having very fine eyes, and the lark very ugly ones, was the occasion of a common saying, that the toad and the lark had changed eyes. This tradition was expressed in a rustic rhyme:—

————— To heav'n Pd fly,

But that the toad beguill'd me of mine eye.'

The sense of the passage is, the lark, they say, has changed eyes with the toad, and now I would they had changed voices too, since the lark's song serves but to separate us. The croak of the toad would have been no indication of the appearance of day, and consequently no signal for her lover's departure.

8 The hunts-up was originally a tune played to wake sportsmen, and call them together. It was a common burthen of hunting ballads. Fustianham says that one Gray grew into good estimation with the Duke of Somerset for making certain merry ballads, whereof one chiefly was the hunts-up, the hunts-up. One of these ballads is given by Mr. Douce, in his Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 192. According to Cotgrave, the Reveille or morning song to a new married woman, was called the hunts-up. So Drayton, in his Polyolbion:—

'But hunts-up to the morn, the feather'd sytans sing.'

And in his third Eclogue:—

'Time plays the hunts-up to thy sleepy head.'

9 'Illa ego quem fueram te decedente puella,

Protrius ut redeas, facta videtur anus.'

Ovid, Epist. 1

10 This miserable prescience of futurity I have always regarded as a circumstance peculiarly beautiful. The same kind of warning from the mind, Romeo seems to have been conscious of on his going to the entertainment at the house of Capulet:—

'My mind misgives me,

Some consequence yet hanging in the stars,

Shall bitterly begin his fearful date

From this night's revels'

Steevens

11 Procures for drings.

Jul. Yet let me weep for such a feeling loss.

La. Cap. So shall you feel the loss, but not the friend

Which you weep for.

Jul. Feeling so the loss,

I cannot choose but ever weep the friend.

La. Cap. Well, girl, thou weep'st not so much for his death,

As that the villain lives which slaughter'd him.

Jul. What villain, madam?

La. Cap. That same villain, Romeo.

Jul. Villain and he are many miles asunder.

God pardon him! I do with all my heart;

And yet no man, like he, doth grieve my heart.

La. Cap. That is, because the traitor murderer lives.

Jul. Ay, madam, from the reach of these my hands.

'Would, none but I might vengeance my cousin's death!

La. Cap. We will have vengeance for it, fear thou not:

Then weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,—

Where that same banish'd runaway doth live,—

That shall bestow on him so sure a draught,¹

That he shall soon keep Tybalt company:

And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.

Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied

With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—

Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd:—

Madam, if you could find out but a man

To bear a poison, I would temper it;

That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,

Soon sleep in quiet.—O, how my heart abhors

To hear him nam'd,—and cannot come to him,—

To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt

Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him!

La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such a man.

But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.

Jul. And joy comes well in such a needful time:

What are they, I beseech your ladyship?

La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father,

child;

One, who, to put thee from thy heaviness,

Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,

That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.

Jul. Madam, in happy time,² what day is that?

La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday

morn,

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county Paris, at Saint Peter's church,

Shall happily make thee there a joyful bride.

Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,

He shall not make me there a joyful bride.

I wonder at this haste; that I must wed

Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.

1 Juliet's equivocations are rather too artful for a mind disturbed by the loss of a new lover.—Johnson.

2 Thus the first quarto. The subsequent quartos and the folio less intelligibly read:—

'Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dream.'

3 à la bonne heure. This phrase was interjected when the hearer was not so well pleased as the speaker.

—Johnson. Bishop Lowth uses it in his Letter to Warburton, p. 101:—'And may I not hope then for the honour of your lordship's animadversions? In good time: when the candid examiner understands Latin a little better; and when your lordship has a competent knowledge of Hebrew.'

4 County, or countie, was the usual term for an earl in Shakespeare's time. Paris is in this play first styled a young earle. So Barret, 'a countie or an earle, comes un comite,' and 'a countie or earldome, comitatus.' Fairfax very frequently uses the word.

5 Thus the quarto 1597. The quarto 1599, and the folio, read 'the earth doth drizzle dew, which is philosophically true; and so perhaps the poet wrote, for in The Rape of Lucrece he says:—

'But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set.'

Malone.

Steevens adds:—'When our author, in A Midsummer Night's Dream, says, "And when she [i. e. the moon] weeps, weeps every little flower," he only means that every little flower is moistened with dew, as if with tears; and not that the flower itself drizzles dew. This

I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam, I will not marry yet; and when I do, I swear, It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate, Rather than Paris:—These are news, indeed!

La. Cap. Here comes your father; tell him so yourself,

And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter CAPULET and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew;³ But for the sunset of my brother's son, It rains downright.—

How now, a conduit, girl? what, still in tears?

Ever more showering? In one little body

Thou counterfeit'st a bark, a sea, a wind:

For still thy eyes, which I may call the sea,

Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,

Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs,

Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,—

Without a sudden calm, will overset

Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife?

Have you deliver'd to her our decree?

La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you thanks.

I would, the fool were married to her grave!

Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you,

wife.

How! will she none? doth she not give us thanks?

Is she not proud? doth she not count her blessing?

Unworthy as she is, that we have wrought

So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?

Jul. Not proud, you have; but thankful, that you have;

Proud can I never be of what I hate;

But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.

Cap. How now? how now, chop-logic! What is this?

Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not;—

And yet not proud;—Mistress minion, you,

Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,

But settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,

Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.

Out, you green-sickness carrion! out, you baggage!

You tallow-face!

La. Cap. Fie, fie! what are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,

Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!

I tell thee what,—get thee to church o' Thursday,

Or never after look me in the face:

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me:

My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us blest'd,

That God had sent us but this only child;

But now I see this one is one too much, passage sufficiently explains how the earth, in the quotation from The Rape of Lucrece, may be said to weep. That Shakespeare thought it was the air, and not the earth, that drizzled dew, is evident from many passages in his works. So in King John:—

'Before the dew of evening fall.'

6 The same image, which was in frequent use with Shakespeare's contemporaries, occurs in the poem of Romeo and Juliet more than once:—

'His sighs are wept, and stopped is the conduit of his tears.'

7 Capulet, as Stevens observes, uses this as a nickname. The hyphen is wanting in the old copy. 'Chop-logic' is he that when his master rebuketh his servants for his defiance, he will give him xx wordes for one, or elles he will bydde the devylles paternoster in sylcencie.—The xxxiii Orders of Knaves, bk. 1.

8 Such was the indelicacy of the age of Shakespeare, that authors were not contented only to employ these terms of abuse in their own original performances, but even felt no reluctance to introduce them in their versions of the most chaste and elegant of the Greek or Roman poets. Stanyhurst, the translator of Virgil, in 1589, makes Dido call Æneas hedge-brat, cullion, and tar-breech, in the course of one speech. Nay, in the Interlude of The Repentance of Mary Magdalene, 1567, she says to one of her attendants:—

'Horson, I beahrewe your heart, are you here?'

And that we have a curse in having her:
Out on her, hilding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!—
You are to blame, my lord, to rate her so.

Cap. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,

Good prudence; smatter with your gossips, go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O, God ye good den!

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mumbling fool!

Utter your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,

For here we need it not.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad; Day, night, late, early,

At home, abroad, alone, in company,
Waking, or sleeping, still my care hath been
To have her match'd: and having now provided
A gentleman of princely parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly train'd,
Stuff'd, (as they say,) with honourable parts,
Proportion'd as one's heart could wish a man,—
And then to have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortune's tender,
To answer—I'll not wed,—I cannot love,<¹

I am too young—I pray you, pardon me;—

But, an you will not wed, I'll pardon you:

Graze where you will, you shall not house with me;

Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise;

An you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;

An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die i' the streets,

For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,

Nor what is mine shall never do thee good:

Trust to't, bethink you, I'll not be forsworn. [Exit.]

Jul. Is there no pity sitting in the clouds,

That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!

Delay this marriage for a month, a week;

Or, if you do not, make my bridal bed

In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word;

Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. [Exit.]

Jul. O, God!—O, nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send it me from heaven
By leaving earth?—comfort me, counsel me.—
Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself?—

What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse. 'Faith, here 'tis: Romeo
Is banish'd; and all the world to nothing,

That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;

Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.

Then, since the case so stands as now it doth,

I think it best you married with the county.

O, he's a lovely gentleman!²

Romeo's a dishclout to him; an eagle, madam,

Hath not so green,³ so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,

I think you happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead: or 'twere as good he were,
As living here, and you no use of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nurse. From my soul too;

Or else beshrew them both.

Jul. Amen!

Nurse. To what?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.

Go in; and tell my lady I am gone,

Having displeas'd my father, to Laurence's cell,

To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done. [Exit.]

Jul. Ancient damnation! O, most wicked hand!

It is more sin—to wish me thus forsworn,

Or to dispraise my lord with that same tongue

Which she hath prais'd him with above compare

So many thousand times?—Go, counsellor;

Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.—

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;

If all else fail, myself have power to die. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR LAURENCE AND PARIS.

Fri. On Thursday, sir? the time is very short.

Par. My father Capulet will have it so;

And I am nothing slow, to slack his haste.⁴

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady's mind;

Uneven is the course, I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,

And therefore have I little talk'd of love;

For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous,

That she doth give her sorrow so much sway;

And, in his wisdom, hastens our marriage,

To stop the inundation of her tears;

Which, too much minded by herself alone,

May be put from her by society:

Now do you know the reason of this haste.

Fri. I would, I knew not why it should be slow'd.⁵

[Aside.]

Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter JULIET.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife!

Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this father?

Jul. To answer that, were to confess to you.

Par. Do not deny to him, that you love me.

Jul. I will confess to you, that I love him.

Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.

Jul. If I do, it will be of more price,

Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with tears.

² There is a passage in the old play of Wily Beguiled, pointed out by Malone, so nearly resembling this, that one poet must have copied from the other. Wily Beguiled was on the stage before 1596, being mentioned by Nashe in his Have with You to Saffron Walden, printed in that year.

³ The character of the Nurse exhibits a just picture of those whose actions have no principles for their foundation. She has been unfaithful to the trust reposed in her by Capulet, and is ready to embrace any expedient that offers, to avert the consequences of her first infidelity. The picture is not, however, an original, the nurse in the poem exhibits the same readiness to accommodate herself to the present conjuncture. Sir John Vanbrugh, in The Relapse, has copied, in this respect, the character of his nurse from Shakespeare.

⁴ Perhaps Chaucer has given to Emestius, in The Knight's Tale, eyes of the same colour:—

'His nose was high, his eyen bright citryn.'

⁵ A. of the hue of an unripe lemon or citron. Again, in The Two Noble Kinsmen, by Fletcher and Shakspeare:—

'— oh vouchsafe

With that thy rare green eye,' &c.

⁶ The meaning of Paris is clear, he does not wish to restrain Capulet, or to delay his own marriage; there is nothing of slowness in me, to induce me to slacken or abate his haste: but the words the poet has given him import the reverse, and seem rather to mean I am not backward in restraining his haste. I endeavour to retard him as much as I can. The poet has hastily fallen into similar inadvertencies elsewhere. In the first edition the line ran:—

'And I am nothing slack to slow his haste.'

⁷ To slow and to forsew were anciently in common use as verbs:—

'— will you o'erflow

The fields, thereby my march to slow.'

Jul. The tears have got small victory by that ;
For it was bad enough before their spite.

Par. Those wrong'st it, more than tears, with that report.

Jul. That is no slander, sir, that is a truth ;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.

Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.

Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.—

Are you at leisure, holy father, now ;

Or shall I come to you at evening mass ?

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now :
My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield, I should disturb devotion :—

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you :

Till then, adieu ! and keep this holy kiss.

[Exit PARIS.]

Jul. O, shut the door ! and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me ; Past hope, past cure, past help !

Fri. Ah, Juliet, I already know thy grief ;
It strains me past the compass of my wits :
I hear thou must, and nothing must prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this county.

Jul. Tell me not, Friar, that thou hear'st of this,

Unless thou tell me how I may prevent it :

If in thy wisdom, thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution wise,

And with this knife I'll help it presently.

God join d my heart and Romeo's, thou our hands ;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,

Shall be the label to another deed,¹

Or my true heart with treacherous revolt

Turn to another, this shall slay them both :

Therefore, out of thy long-experienc'd time,

Give me some present counsel ; or, behold

'Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife

Shall play the umpire,² arbitrating that

Which the commission³ of thy years and art

Could to no issue of true honour bring.

Be not so long to speak ; I long to die,

If what thou speak'st speak not of remedy.

Fri. Hold, daughter ; I do spy a kind of hope,

Which craves as desperate an execution

As that is desperate which we would prevent.

If, rather than to marry county Paris,

Thou hadst the strength of will to slay thyself ;

Then is it likely, thou wilt undertake

A thing like death to chide away this shame,

That cop'st with death himself to scape from it ;

And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O, bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,

From off the battlements of yonder tower ;

Or walk in thievish ways ; or bid me lurk

Where serpents are ; chain me with roaring bears ;

Or shut me nightly⁴ in a charnel-house,

1 Juliet means vespers, there is no such thing as evening mass. Masses, (as Fynes Moryson observes) are only sung in the morning, and when the priests are fasting.

2 The seals of deeds formerly were appended on distinct slips or labels affixed to the deed. Hence in King Richard II. the Duke of York discovers a covenant which his son the Duke of Aumerle had entered into by the depending seal.

3 I. e. shall decide the struggle between me and my distress.

4 Commission may be here used for authority : but it is more probable that commission is the word intended.

5 The quarto 1597 reads—

'Or chain me to some steepy mountain's top,
Where roaring bears and savage lions roam.'

In the text the 4to. of 1599 is followed, except that it has
'or hide me nightly.'

6 The 4to 1599 and the folio : the 4to. 1597 reads,
I think, with more spirit :—

'To keep myself a faithful unstain'd wife
To my dear lord, my dearest Romeo.' Boswell.

7 Instead of the remainder of this scene the 4to 1597 has only these four lines :—

'And when thou art laid in thy kindred's vault,
I'll send in haste to Mantua to thy lord ;
And he shall come and take thee from thy grave.
Jul. Friar, I go ; be sure thou send for my dear
Romeo.'

O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks, and yellow chapless skulls,
Or bid me go into a new made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud ;
Things that, to hear them told, have made me
tremble ;

And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love.⁸

Fri. Hold, then ; go home, be merry, give consent

To marry Paris : Wednesday is to-morrow ;

To-morrow night look that thou lie alone,

Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber :

Take thou this phial, being then in bed,

And this distilled liquor drink thou off ;

When presently, through all thy veins shall run

A cold and drowsy humour, which shall seize

Each vital spirit ; for no pulse shall keep

His natural progress, but surcease to beat :

No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou liv'st ;

The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade

To paly ashes ; thy eyes' windows fall,

Like death, when he shuts up the day of life ;

Each part depriv'd of supple government,

Shall, stiff, and stark, and cold, appear like death .

And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death

Thou shalt remain full two and forty hours,

And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now when the bridegroom in the morning comes

To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead :

Then (as the manner of our country is)

In thy best robes uncover'd on the bier,⁹

Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,

Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.

In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,

Shall Romeo by my letters know our drift ;

And hither shall he come ; and he and I

Will watch thy waking, and that very night

Shall Romeo bear thee hence to Mantua.

And this shall free thee from this present shame ;

If no unconstant toy,¹⁰ nor womanish fear,

Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me ! O, tell me not of fear.

Fri. Hold ; get you gone, be strong and prosperous in this resolve : I'll send a friar with speed

To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength ! and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Capulet's House. Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, Nurse, and Servant.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ—

[Exit Servant.]

Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.¹¹

2 Serv. You shall have none ill, sir ; for I'll try

if they can lick their fingers.¹²

3 The Italian custom here alluded to, of carrying the dead body to the grave richly dressed, and with the face uncovered (which is not mentioned by Painter,) Shakespeare found particularly described in The Tragical History of Romeo and Juliet :—

'Another use there is, that whosoever dies,

Borne to the church, with open face upon the bier he lies,

In wond'ring weed attir'd, not wrapt in winding sheet.'

Thus also Ophelia's Song, in Hamlet :—

'They bore him bare-faced on the bier.'

9 If no fickle freak, no light caprice, no change of fancy, hinder the performance. The expressions are from the poem.

10 Capulet has in a former scene said :—

'We'll keep no great ado :—

we'll have some half a dozen friends.'

The poet has made him alter his mind strangely, or had forgotten what he had made him say before. (See Act iii. Sc. iv.) Malone observes that the former scene was of the poet's own invention, and that he has recollected

the poem :—

— he myndes to make for him a costly feast.'

11 This adage is found in Puttenham's Arte of English

Poesie, 1599 :—

'As the olde cocks crowes so doeth the chicke :

A bad Cooke that cannot his owne fingers lick.'

Cap. How canst thou try them so?

2 Serv. Marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore he, that cannot lick his fingers, goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.— [Exit Servant.]
We shall be much unfurnish'd for this time.—

What is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?

Nurse. Ay, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her:

A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

Enter JULIET.

Nurse. See, where she comes from shrift! with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong? where have you been gadding?

Jul. Where I have learn'd me to repent the sin Of disobedient opposition

To you, and your behests; and am enjoin'd

By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here,

And beg your pardon:—Pardon, I beseech you!

Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you.

Cap. Send for the county: go tell him of this;

I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;

And gave him what became¹ love I might,

Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad on't; this is well,—stand up:

This is as't should be.—Let me see the county;

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.—

Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,

All our whole city is much bound to him.²

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,

To help me sort such needful ornaments

As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

La. Cap. No, not till Thursday; there is time enough.

Cap. Go, nurse, go with her:—we'll to church to-morrow. [Exeunt JULIET and Nurse.]

La. Cap. We shall be short in our provision;
'Tis now near night.

Cap.

Tush! I will stir about,

And all things shall be well, I warrant thee, wife:

Go thou to Juliet, help to deck up her;

I'll not to bed to-night:—let me alone;

I'll play the housewife for this once.—What, ho!

They are all forth: Well, I will walk myself

To county Paris, to prepare him up

Against to-morrow: my heart is wondrous light,

Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Juliet's Chamber. Enter JULIET and Nurse.

Jul. Ay, those attitudes are best:—But, gentle nurse,

I pray thee, leave me to myself to-night;

For I have need of many orisons

To move the heavens to smile upon my state,

Which, well thou know'st, is cross and full of sin.

Enter LADY CAPULET.

La. Cap. What are you busy? do you need my help?

1 i. e. confession.

2 Becomed for becoming; one particle for another, a frequent practice with Shakespeare.

3 Thus the folio and the quartos 1599 and 1609: 'The oldest quarto reads, perhaps more grammatically:—
'All our whole city is much bound unto.'

4 This speech received considerable additions after the first copy was published.

5 This stage direction has been supplied by the modern editors. The quarto of 1597 reads:—'Knife, lie thou there.'

6 Daggers, or, as they were more commonly called, knives, (says Mr. Gifford,) were worn at all times by every woman in England; whether they were so worn in Italy, Shakespeare, I believe, never inquired, and I cannot tell.—Works of Ben Jonson, vol. v. p. 231.

7 This idea was probably suggested to the poet by his native place. The charnel at Stratford-upon-Avon is a very large one, and perhaps contains a greater number

Jul. No, madam; we have cull'd such necessaries

As are behoveful for our state to-morrow;

So please you, let me now be left alone,

And let the nurse this night sit up with you;

For, I am sure, you have your hands full all,

In this so sudden business.

La. Cap.

Good night!

Get thee to bed, and rest; for thou hast need.

[Exeunt LADY CAPULET and Nurse.]

Jul. Farewell!—God knows, when we shall meet again.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,

That almost freezes up the heat of life:

I'll call them back again to comfort me:—

Nurse!—What should she do here?

My dismal scene I needs must act alone.—

Come, phial.—

What if this mixture do not work at all?

Must I of force be married to the county?—

No, no;—this shall forbid it:—lie thou there.—

[Laying down a Dagger.]

What if it be a poison, which the friar

Subtly hath minister'd to have me dead;

Leest in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,

Because he married me before to Romeo?

I fear, it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,

For he hath still been tried a holy man:

I will not entertain so bad a thought.—

How if, when I am laid into the tomb,

I wake before the time that Romeo

Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point!

Shall I not then be stifled in the vault,

To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in,

And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?

Or, if I live, is it not very like,

The horrible conceit of death and night,

Together with the terror of the place,—

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,

Where, for these many hundred years, the bones

Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd:¹

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,

Lies fest'ring² in his shroud; where, as they say,

At some hours in the night spirits resort;—

Alack, alack! is it not like, that I,

So early waking,—what with loathsome smells,

And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,

That living mortals, hearing them, run mad;³—

O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,⁴

Environed with all these hideous fears?

And madly play with my forefathers' joints?

And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?

And, in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,

As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?

O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost

Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body

Upon a rapier's point:—Stay, Tybalt, stay!

Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the Bed.]

SCENE IV. Capulet's Hall. Enter LADY CAPULET and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.

of bones than are to be found in any other repository of the same kind in England.

7 To fester is to corrupt. So in King Edward III. 1599:—

'Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.'

This line also occurs in the ninety-fourth Sonnet of Shakespeare. The play of Edward III. has been ascribed to him.

8 The mandrake, (says Thomas Newton in his Herbal) has been idly represented as 'a creature having life, and engendered under the earth of the seed of some dead person that hath been convicted and put to death for some felonie or murder, and that they had the same in such dampish and funereal places where the said convicted persons were buried,' &c. So in Webster's Duchess of Malfi, 1623:—

'I have this night digg'd up a mandrake,

And am growmad with it.'

9 i. e. distracted.

Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.¹ [Exit Nurse.]

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock:—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:
Spare not for cost.

La. Cap. Go, go, you cot-quean, go,
Get you to bed; 'faith, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching.²

Cap. No, not a whit; What! I have watch'd ere
now
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.

La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt³ in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching now.

[Exit LADY CAPULET.]

Cap. A jealous-hood, a jealous-hood!—Now, fellow,
What's there?

Enter Servants, with Spits, Logs, and Baskets.

Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not what.

Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.]
—Sirrah, fetch drier logs;
Call Peter, he will show thee where they are.

2 Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit.]

Cap. 'Mass, and well said; A merry whorson!
ha,
Thou shalt be logger-head.—Good faith, 'tis day:
The county will be here with music straight.

[Music within.]

For so he said he would. I hear him near:—
Nurse!—Wife!—what ho;—what, nurse, I say!

Enter Nurse.

Go, waken Juliet, go, and trim her up;
I'll go and chat with Paris:—Hie, make haste,
Make haste! the bridegroom he is come already:
Make haste, I say! [Exit.]

SCENE V. Juliet's Chamber; JULIET on the Bed. Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistress!—Juliet!— fast, I warrant her, she:—
Why, lamb! why, lady;—he, you slug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam! sweet-heart!—why, bride!

What, not a word?—you take your pennyworths
now;

Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
The county Paris hath set up his rest.⁴
That you shall rest but little.—God forgive me, (Marry and amen!) how sound is she asleep!
I needs must wake her:—Madam, madam, madam!
Ay, let the county take you in your bed;
He'll fright you up, in faith.—Will it not be?
What, drest! and in your clothes! and down again!

1 The room were the pastry was made.

2 This speech, which in the old copies is attributed to the Nurse, should surely be given to Lady Capulet.—The Nurse would hardly call her lordly master a cot-quean, or reply to a speech addressed to her mistress. Beside that, she had been sent for spices, and is shortly after made to re-enter. I have therefore made the necessary change.

3 The animal called the mouse-hunt is the martin, which, being of the weasel tribe, prowls about in the night for its prey. 'Cat after kind, good mouse-hunt,' is one of Heywood's proverbs.

4 Nashe, in his Terrors of the Night, quibbles in the same manner on this expression:—'You that are married and have wives of your own, and yet hold too near friendship with your neighbours, set up your rests, that the night will be an ill neighbour to your rest, and that you shall have as little peace of minde as the rest.'

5 Shakespeare has here followed the old poem closely, without recollecting that he had made Capulet in this scene clamorous in his grief. In the poem Juliet's mother makes a long speech, but the old man utters not a word.

I must needs wake you: Lady! lady! lady!
Alas! alas!—Help! help! my lady's dead.—
O, well-a-day, that ever I was born!—
Some aqua-vite, ho!—my lord! my lady!

Enter LADY CAPULET.

La. Cap. What noise is here?

Nurse. O, lamentable day!

La. Cap. What is the matter?

Nurse. Look, look! O, heavy day!

La. Cap. O, me, O, me!—my child, my only life,
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee!—
Help, help!—call help.

Enter CAPULET.

Cap. For shame, bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd, she's dead; alack
the day!

La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her:—Out, alas! she's cold;

Her blood is settled; and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated:
Death lies on her, like an untimely frost
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.
Accursed time! unfortunate old man.

Nurse. O, lamentable day!

La. Cap. O, woful time!

Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.⁵

Enter FRIAR LAURENCE and PARIS, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return:
O, son, the night before thy wedding-day
Hath death lain with thy bride:—See, there she lies,

Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir;
My daughter he hath wedded! I will die,
And leave him all; life leaving, all is death's.

Par. Have I thought long to see this morning's face?

And doth it give me such a sight as this?

La. Cap. Accurs'd, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!

Most miserable hour, that e'er time saw
In lasting labour of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Nurse. O, wo! O, woful, woful day!

Most lamentable day! most woful day,

That ever, ever, I did yet behold!

O, day! O, day! O, day! O, hateful day!

Never was seen so black a day as this:

O, woful day, O, woful day!

Par. Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spited, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,

⁵ But more than all the rest the father's heart was so smit with the heavy news, and so shut up with sudden wo,

That he ne had the power his daughter to beweepe,
Ne yet to speak, but long is forc'd his tears and plaints to keep.

6 Decker, in his Satiro-mastix, has the same thought more coarsely expressed:—

'Dead: she's death's bride; he hath her maidenhead.' He has the same thought in his Wonderful Year:—
'Death rudely lay with her, and spoiled her of her maidenhead in spite of her husband.'

7 The quarto of 1607 continues the speech of Paris thus:—

'And doth it now present such prodigies?
Accurs, unhappy, miserable man,
Forlorn, forsaken, destitute I am,
Born to the world to be a slave in it:
Distract, remediless, unfortunate.
Oh, heavens! Oh, nature! wherefore did you make me
To live so vile, so wretched as I shall?

In the text the edition of 1599 is here followed. The Nurse's exclamatory speech is not in the first quarto.

By cruel cruel thee quite overthrow! —
O, love! O, life! —not life, but love in death!
Cap. Despis'd, distressed, hated, martyr'd, kill'd!
Uncomfortable time! why cam'st thou now
To murder murder our solemnity? —
O, child! O, child! —my soul, and not my child!
Dead art thou, dead! —alack! my child is dead;
And, with my child, my joys are buried!

Fri. Peace, ho, for shame! confusion's cure lives not

In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.
The most you sought was—her promotion;
For 'twas your heaven, she should be advanc'd:
And weep ye now, seeing she is advanc'd,
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?
O, in this love, you love your child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well:
She's not well married, that lives married long;
But she's best married, that dies married young.
Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corpse; and, as the custom is,
In all her best array bear her to church:
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,¹
Turn from their office to black funeral;
Our instruments, to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer, to a sad burial feast;²
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried case,
And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, go you in,—and, madam, go with him;
And go, sir Paris:—every one prepare
To follow this fair corpse unto her grave:
The heavens do lour upon you, for some ill;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.
[Exeunt CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, PARIS,
and Friar.

1 Mus. 'Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone.

Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah, put up; put up;
For, well you know, this is a pitiful case.

[Exit Nurse.

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

*Enter PETER.*³

Pet. Musicians, O, musicians, Heart's ease, heart's ease;
O, an you will have me live, play—heart's ease.

1 Mus. Why heart's ease?

Pet. O, musicians, because my heart itself plays

1 Instead of this and the following speeches the first quarto has only a couplet:—

'Let it be so; come, woful sorrow-mates,
Let us together taste this bluer fate.'

The enlarged text is formed upon the poem.

2 See Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

3 From the quarto of 1599 it appears that the part of Peter was originally performed by William Kempe.

4 This is the burden of the first stanza of A Pleasant New Ballad of Two Lovers:—

'Hey hoe! my heart is full of woe.'

5 A dump was formerly the received term for a grave or melancholy strain in music, vocal or instrumental. It also signified a kind of poetical elegy. A merry dump is no doubt a purposed absurdity put into the mouth of Master Peter. That it was a sad or dismal strain, perhaps sometimes for the sake of contrast and effect mixed up with livelier airs, appears from Oven-dish's Musical Visions, p. 17:—

'What is now left to help me in this case?

Nothing at all but dump in the dances,

Among dead men to tryppe on the trace.'

6 A pun is here intended. A gleekman, or glegman, is a minstrel. To give the gleek meant also to pass a jest upon a person, to make him appear ridiculous; a gleek being a jest or scorn.

7 'Dr. Percy thinks that the questions of Peter are designed as a ridicule on the forced and unnatural explanations given by us painful editors of ancient authors'—Stereens.

—*My heart is full of woe.*⁴ O, play me some merry dump,⁵ to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we; 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not then?

Mus. No.

Pet. I will then give it you soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us?

Pet. No money, on my faith; but the gleek:⁶ I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotchets: I'll re you, I'll fa you; Do you note me?

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. 'Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit; I will dry-beat you with an iron wit, and put up my iron dagger:—Answer me like men!

When gripping grief the heart doth wound,

And doleful dumps the mind oppress,

*Then music with her silver sound*⁷—

Why, silver sound? why, music with her silver sound? What say you, Simon Catling?

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

Pet. Pretty! What say you, Hugh Rebeck?

2 Mus. I say—silver sound, because musicians sound for silver.

Pet. Pretty too!—What say you, James Soundpost?

3 Mus. 'Faith, I know not what to say.

Pet. O, I cry you mercy! you are the singer: I will say for you. It is—music with her silver sound, because such fellows as you have seldom gold for sounding:—

Then music with her silver sound,

With speedy help doth lend redress.

[Exit, singing.

1 Mus. What a pestilent knave is this same!

2 Mus. Hang him, Jack! Come, we'll in here; tarry for the mourners, and stay dinner. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Mantua. A Street. Enter ROMEO.

Rom. If I may trust the flattering eye of sleep,¹⁰
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand:
My bosom's lord sits lightly in his throne;
And, all this day, an unaccustom'd spirit
Lifts me above the ground with cheerful thoughts.¹¹
I dreamt, my lady came and found me dead
(Strange dream! that gives a dead man leave to think);

8 This is part of a song by Richard Edwards, to be found in the Paradise of Dainty Devices, fol. 31, b. Another copy of this song is to be found in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry.

9 This worthy takes his name from a small lutestring made of catgut. His companion the fiddler from an instrument of the same name mentioned by many of our old writers, and recorded by Milton as an instrument of mirth:—

'When the merry bells ring round,
And the joyful rebekes sound.'

10 Thus the first quarto. The folio reads:—

'If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep.'

The sense appears to be, If I may repose any confidence in the flattering visions of the night. Otway reads:—

'If I may trust the flattery of sleep,

My dreams presage some joyful news at hand.'

11 These three last lines are very gay and pleasing. But why does Shakespeare give Romeo this involuntary cheerfulness just before the extremity of unhappiness? Perhaps to show the vanity of trusting to those uncertain and casual exaltations or depressions, which many consider as certain foretokens of good and evil.—Johnson.

The poet has explained this passage a little further on:—

'How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death.'

And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,¹
That I reviv'd, and was an emperor.
Ah, me! how sweet is love itself possess'd,
When but love's shadows are so rich in joy!

Enter BALTHASAR.

News from Verona!—How now, Balthasar?
Dost thou not bring me letters from the friar?
How doth my lady? Is my father well?
How fares my Juliet? That I ask again;
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Bal. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill:
Her body sleeps in Capels' monument,²
And her immortal part with angels lives;
I saw her laid low in her kindred's vault,
And presently took post to tell it you;
O, pardon me for bringing these ill news,
Since you did leave it for my office, sir.

Rom. Is it even so? then I defy you, stars!—
Thou know'st of my lodging: get me ink and paper,
And hire post-horses; I will hence to-night.

Bal. Pardon me, sir, I will not leave you thus:
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import
Some misadventure.

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiv'd;
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee do:
Hast thou no letters to me from the friar?

Bal. No, my good lord.

Rom. No matter: get thee gone,
And hire those horses; I'll be with thee straight.

[Exit BALTHASAR.]

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means:—O, mischief! thou art swift
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men!
I do remember an apothecary,—
And hereabouts he dwells,—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones:³
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
And if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a catiff wretch would sell it him.
O, this same thought did but forerun my need;
And this same needy man must sell it me.

¹ Shakespeare seems to have remembered Marlowe's Hero and Leander, a poem that he has quoted in As You Like It:—

'By this said Hero—

Viewing Leander's face, fell down and fainted;
He kiss'd her, and breath'd life into her lips,' &c.

² Shakespeare found Capel and Capulet used indiscriminately in the poem which was the groundwork of this tragedy.

³ See Sackville's description of misery in the Induction to the Mirror of Magistrates:—

'His face was leane and some deal plnde away,
And eke his hands consumed to the bones.'

⁴ We learn from Stuebel's Have with You to Saffron Walden, 1596, that a stuffed alligator then made part of the furniture of an apothecary's shop:—'He made an anatomic of a rat, and after hanged her over his head, instead of an apothecary's crocodile or dried alligator.' Steevens was informed that formerly when an apothecary first engaged with his druggist, he was gratuitously furnished by him with these articles of show, which were then imported for that use only; and had met with the alligator, tortoise, &c. hanging up in the shop of an ancient apothecary at Limehouse, as well as in places more remote from the metropolis. See Hogarth's Marriage à la Mode, plate iii. It seems that the apothecaries dismissed their alligators, &c. sometime before the physicians parted with their amber-headed canes and solemn periwigs.

⁵ The quarto of 1607 reads:—

'Upon thy back hangs ragged misery,
And starv'd famine dwelleth in thy cheeks.'

The quartos of 1609 and 1609:—

'Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes'

As I remember, this should be the house;
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut,—
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art poor;

Hold, there is forty ducats; let me have
A dram of poison; such soon-speeding gear
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead;
And that the trunk may be discharged of breath
As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death, to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,⁵
Upon thy back hangs ragged misery,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take thine.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.⁶

Rom. There is thy gold, worse poison to men's souls,

Doing more murders in this loathsome world,
Than these poor compounds that thou may'st not sell:
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh.
Come, cordial, and not poison; go with me
To Juliet's grave, for there I must use thee.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. Friar Laurence's Cell. Enter FRIAR JOHN.

John. Holy Franciscan friar! brother, ho!

Enter FRIAR LAURENCE.

Law. This same should be the voice of Friar John.—

Welcome from Mantua; What says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a barefoot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,⁷
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And finding him the searchers of the towns,
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,

⁶ Steevens thinks that Shakespeare may have remembered the following passage in the Pardoner's Tale of Chaucer, v. 12794:

'The Potecary answered, thou shalt have
A thing, as wisely God my soule save,
In all this world thir n'is no creature,
That ete or dronke hath of this confectione,
Not but the mounce of a corne of wheate,
That he ne shall his lif anon forelete;
Ye, sterve he shall, and that in leese while
Than thou wilt gon a pas not but a mile:
This poison is so strong and violent.'

⁷ Each friar had always a companion assigned him by the superior, when he asked leave to go out. In the Visitatione Notabili de Selesborne, a curious record printed in White's Natural History of Selborne, Wykeham enjoins the canons not to go abroad without leave from the prior, who is ordered on such occasions to assign the brother a companion, 'ne suspicio sinistra vel scandalum oriatu.' There is a similar regulation in the statutes of Trinity College, Cambridge. So in The Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet, 1632:—

'Apace our friar John to Mantua him hies,
And, for because in Italy it is a wonted guise
That friars in the town should seldom walk alone,
But of their convent ay should be accompanied with one
Of his profession, straight a house he findeth out,
In mind to take some friar with him to walk the towns
about.'

Shakespeare, having occasion for Friar John, has departed from the poem, and supposed the pestilence to rage at Verona instead of Mantua.

Seal'd up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay'd.

Law. Who bare my letter, then, to Romeo?

John. I could not send it,—here it is again,—
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

Law. Unhappy fortune! by my brotherhood,
The letter was not nice,¹ but full of charge,
Of dear import; and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Friar John, go hence;
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight
Unto my cell.

John. Brother, I'll go and bring it thee. [Exit.]

Law. Now must I to the monument alone;
Within this three hours will fair Juliet wake;²
She will beshrew me much, that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents:
But I will write again to Mantua,
And keep her at my cell till Romeo come:
Poor living corse, clos'd in a dead man's tomb!

[Exit.]

SCENE III. A Church Yard: in it a Monument belonging to the Capulets. Enter PARIS, and his Page, bearing Flowers and a Torch.

Par. Give me my torch, boy: Hence, and stand aloof;—

Yet put it out, for I would not be seen.
Under yew-trees lay thee all along,
Holding thine ear close to the hollow ground;
So shall no foot upon the churchyard tread,
(Being loose, unfirm, with digging up of graves,)
But thou shalt hear it: whistle then to me,
As signal that thou hear'st something approach.
Give me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the churchyard; yet I will adventure.

[Retires.]

Par. Sweet flower, with flowers I strew thy bridal bed:

Sweet tomb, that in thy circuit dost contain
The perfect model of eternity;
Fair Juliet, that with angels dost remain,³
Accept this latest favour at my hands;
That living honour'd thee, and, being dead,
With funeral praises do adorn thy tomb!

[The Boy whistles.]

The boy gives warning, something doth approach.
What cursed foot wanders this way to-night,
To cross my obsequies, and true-love's rites?
What, with a torch!—muffle me, night, a while.⁴

[Retires.]

Enter ROMEO and BALTHASAR, with a Torch, Mattock, &c.

Rom. Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron.

Hold, take this letter; early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my lord and father.
Give me the light: Upon thy life I charge thee,
Whate'er thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloof,
And do not interrupt me in my course.

¹ I. e. was not wantonly written on a trivial or idle matter, but on a subject of importance.

² Instead of this line, and the concluding part of the speech, the first quarto reads only:—

'Lest that the lady should before I come
Be wak'd from sleepe, I will hye
To free her from that tomb of miserie.'

³ The folio has these lines:—

'Sweet flow'r, with flow'rs thy bridal bed I strew;
O wo! thy canopy is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water I will nightly dew;
Or, wanting that, with tears disill'd by moans;
The obsequies that I for thee will keep Nightly shall be, to strew thy grave and weep.'

In the text the seven lines are printed as they appear in the quarto of 1697.

⁴ Thus in Drayton's Polyolbion:—

'But suddenly the clouds which on the winds do fly
Do muffle him again.'

The word was not deemed unpoetical by Milton; the Elder Brother in Comus uses it:—

'Unmuffle, ye faint stars,' &c.

A muffle was a part of female dress

Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is, partly, to behold my lady's face:
But, chiefly, to take thence from her dead finger
A precious ring; a ring that I must use
In dear⁵ employment: therefore hence, be gone:—
But if thou, jealous, dost return to pry
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heaven, I will tear thee joint by joint,
And strew this hungry churchyard with thy limbs:
The time and my intents are savage-wild;
More fierce, and more inexorable far,
Than empty tigers, or the roaring sea.

Bal. I will be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Rom. So shalt thou show me friendship.—Take thou that:

Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.

Bal. For all this same, I'll hide me hereabout;
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt. [Retires.]

Rom. Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I enforce thy rotten jaws to open,

[Breaking open the Door of the Monument.]

And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

Par. This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin;—with which grief,
It is supposed the fair creature died,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him:—

[Advances.]

Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague;
Can vengeance be pursu'd further than death?
Condemn'd villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

Rom. I must, indeed; and therefore came I hither.—

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence and leave me;—think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee.—I beseech thee, youth,
Heap not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury:—O, be gone!

By heaven, I love thee better than myself:
For I come hither arm'd against myself:
Stay not, begone;—live, and hereafter say—
A madman's mercy bade thee run away.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,⁶
And do attach thee as a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee,
boy. [They fight.]

Page. O, lord! they fight: I will go call the watch. [Exit Page.]

Par. O, I am slain! [Falls.]—If thou be merciful, Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.]

Rom. In faith I will:—Let me peruse this face;
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris:
What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave—
A grave? O, no; a lantern, slaughter'd youth,

⁵ That is, in action of importance. The sense of the word dear has been explained. So Ben Jonson, in his Cadlike, Act I.:—

'Put your known talents on so dear a business.'

⁶ I refuse to do as thou conjurest me to do, i. e. depart. So Constance, in King John, says:—

'No, I defy all counsel, all redress.'

⁷ A lantern may not, in this instance, signify an enclosure for a lighted candle, but a louvre, or what in ancient records is styled lanternium, i. e. a spacious round or octagonal turret, full of windows, by means of which cathedrals and sometimes halls are illuminated. See the beautiful lantern at Ely Minster.

A presence is a public room, which is at times the presence-chamber of a sovereign. This thought, extravagant as it is, is borrowed by Middleton in his Blurt Master Constable:—

'The darkest dungeon which spite can devise
To throw this carcass in, her glorious eyes
Can make as lightesome as the fairest chamber
In Paris Louvre.'

For here lies Juliet, and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man interr'd.

[Laying PARIS in the Monument.]

How oft when men are at the point of death
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O, how may I
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:¹
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—
Tybalt, hast thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favour can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,
To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah, dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? Shall I believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous?²
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour?
For fear of that, I will still stay with thee;
And never from this palace of dim night
Depart again; here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids; O, here
Will I set up my everlasting rest;³
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your last!

Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O, you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!—
Come, bitter conduct,⁴ come, unsavoury guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark!
Here's to my love! [Drinks.]—O, true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies.]

Enter, at the other end of the Churchyard, FRIAR LAWRENCE, with a Lantern, Cross, and Spade.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night Have my old feet stumbled at graves?—Who's there?

Who is it that consorts, so late, the dead?

Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.

Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond' that vainly lends his light
To grubs and eyeless skulls? as I discern,
It burneth in the Capels' monument.

Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master
One that you love.

Fri. Who is it?

Bal. Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he been there?

Bal. Full half an hour.

Fri. Go with me to the vault.

Bal. I dare not, sir:

My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.

Fri. Stay, then, I'll go alone:—Fear comes upon
me:

O, much I fear some ill unlucky thing.

Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,⁵
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo? [Advances.]

Alack, alack, what blood is this, which stains

The stony entrance of this sepulchre?

What mean these masterless and gory swords

To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?

[Enters the Monument.]

Romeo! O, pale!—Who else? what, Paris too?

And steep'd in blood! Ah, what an unkind hour

Is guilty of this lamentable chance!

The lady stirs.⁶ [JULIET wakes and stirs.]

Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?

I do remember well where I should be,

And there I am:—Where is my Romeo?

[Noise within.]

Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep;

A greater Power than we can contradict

Hath thwarted our intents; come, come away;

Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;

And Paris too; come, I'll dispose of thee

Among a sisterhood of holy nuns:

Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;

Come, go, good Juliet!—[Noise again.] I dare stay no longer.

[Exit.]

Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away,—

What's here? a cup, clo'd in my true love's

hand?

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end:—

O, churl! drink all; and leave no friendly drop,

To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;

Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,

To make me die with a restorative. [Kisses him.]

Thy lips are warm!⁷

is under the manifest influence of fear, will seem to him, when he is recovered from it, like a dream. Homer (book viii.) represents Rhesus dying, fast asleep, and, as it were, beholding his enemy in a dream, plunging a sword into his bosom. Eustathius and Dacier both applaud this image as very natural; for a man in such a condition, says Mr. Pope, awakes no further than to see confusedly what environs him, and to think it not a reality, but a vision.

9 In the alteration of this play, now exhibited on the stage, Garrick appears to have been indebted to Otway, who, perhaps, without any knowledge of the story as told by Da Porto and Bandello, does not permit his hero to die before his wife awakes.

10 Shakspeare has been arraigned for making Romeo die before Juliet awakes from her trance, and thus losing a happy opportunity of introducing an affecting scene between these unfortunate lovers. He had undoubtedly never read the Italian novel, or any literal translation of it; and has in this particular followed the old poem, or an older drama on the subject. Be this as it may—Augustus Schlegel remarks, that 'the poet seems to have hit upon what was best. There is a measure of agitation, beyond which all that is super added becomes torture, or glides off ineffectually from the already saturated mind. In case of the cruel reunion of the lovers for an instant, Romeo's remorse for his overhasty self-murder, Juliet's despair over her deceitful hope, at first cherishe'd, then annihilated, that she was at the goal of her wishes, must have deviated into caricatures. Nobody surely doubts that Shakspeare was able to represent these with suitable force; but here every thing soothing was welcome, in order that we may not be frightened out of the melancholy, to which we willingly resign ourselves, by too painful discords. Why

1 The first quarto reads, 'But how,' &c. This idea very frequently occurs in our old dramas. So in the Second Part of The Downfall of Robert Earl of Huntington, 1601:—

'I thought it was a lightning before death,
Too sudden to be certain.'

2 So in Sidney's Arcadia, b. iii.:—'Death being able to divide the soules, but not the beauty from her body.' And in Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond, 1594:—

'Decayed roses of discoloured cheeks
Do yet retain some notes of former grace,
And ugly death sits fair within her face.'

3 Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1632, p. 463, speaking of the power of beauty, tells us:—'But of all the tales in this kinde, that is most memorable of Death himselfe, when he should have stricken a sweet young virgin with his dart, he fell in love with the object.'

4 In The Second Maiden's Tragedy, recently printed from a MS. in the Lansdown collection, monuments are styled the 'palaces of death.'

5 See note 4, p. 160.

6 Conduct for conductor. So in a former scene:—
'And fire-eyed fury be my conduct now.'

7 This accident was reckoned ominous. So in King Henry VI. Part III.:—

'For many men that stumbe at the threshold

Are well foretold that danger lurks within.'

And in King Richard III. Hastings, going to execution, says:—

'Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumbe.'

8 This was one of the touches of nature that would have escaped the hand of any painter less attentive to it than Shakspeare. What happens to a person while he have escaped the hand of any painter less attentive to it than Shakspeare. What happens to a person while he is not be frightened out of the melancholy, to which we willingly resign ourselves, by too painful discords. Why

1 Watch. [Within.] Lead, boy :—Which way?

Jul. Yea, noise ?—then I'll be brief.—O, happy dagger ! [Snatching Romeo's Dagger.]
This is thy sheath [Stabs herself :] there rust, and let me die.

[Falls on Romeo's Body, and dies.]

Enter Watch, with the Page of PARIS.

Page. This is the place ; there, where the torch doth burn.

1 Watch. The ground is bloody ; Search about the churchyard :
Go, some of you, whoe'er you find, attach.

[Exeunt some.]

Pitiful sight ! here lies the county slain ;
And Juliet bleeding ; warm, and newly dead,
Who here hath lain these two days buried.—
Go, tell the prince,—run to the Capulets,— Raise up the Montagues,—some others search ;—

[Exeunt other Watchmen.]

We see the ground whereon these woes do lie ;
But the true ground of all these piteous woes,
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter some of the Watch, with BALTHASAR.

2 Watch. Here's Romeo's man, we found him in the churchyard.

1 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the prince come hither.

Enter another Watchman, with FRIAR LAURENCE.

3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps :

We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this churchyard side.

1 Watch. A great suspicion ; Stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our morning's rest ?

Enter CAPULET, LADY CAPULET, and others.

Cap. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad ?

La. Cap. The people in the street cry—Romeo,
Some—Juliet, and some—Paris ; and all run,
With open outcry toward our monument.

Prince. What fear is this, which startles in our ears ?

1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris slain ;

And Romeo dead ; and Juliet, dead before,
Warm and new kill'd.

Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder comes.

1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's man ;

With instruments upon them, fit to open
These dead men's tombs.

Cap. O, Heavens !—O, wife ! look how our daughter bleeds !

This dagger hath mista'en,—for lo ! his house
Is empty on the back of Montague,—
And is misseathed in my daughter's bosom.*

should we heap still more upon accident, that is already so guiky ? Wherefore shall not the tortured Romeo quietly

“ Shake the yoke of insuspicious stars
From his world-wearied flesh ?”

He holds his beloved in his arms, and, dying, cheers himself with a vision of everlasting marriage. She also seeks death, in a kiss, upon his lips. These last moments must belong unparticipated to tenderness, that we may hold fast to the thought, that love lives, although the lovers perish.

1 Thus the quarto of 1599. That of 1597 reads :

“ Ay, noise ? then must I be resolute,
Oh, happy dagger ! thou shalt end my fear,
Rest in my bosom ; thus I come to thee.”

2 The words, “ for lo ! his house is empty on the back of Montague,” are to be considered parenthetical. It appears that the dagger was anciently worn behind the back. So in Humor's Ordinarie :

“ See you yon huge bum dagger at his back ?”
And in The Longer Thou Livest the More Fool Thou Art, 1570 :—

La. Cap. O, me ! this sight of death is as a bell,
That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter MONTAGUE and others.

Prince. Come, Montague ; for thou art early up,
To see thy son and her more early down.

Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night ;
Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath ;
What further we conspire against mine age ?

Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.

Mon. O, thou untiaught ! what manners is in this,
To press before thy father to a grave ?

Prince. Seal up the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can clear these ambiguities,

And know their spring, their head, their true descent ;
And then will I be general of your woes,
And lead you even to death : Mean time forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience.—
Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to do least,
Yet most suspected, as the time and place
Doth make against me, of this direful murder ;
And here I stand, both to impeach and purge
Myself condemned and myself excus'd.

Prince. Then say at once what thou dost know in this.

Fri. I will be brief ; for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.

Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet ;
And she, there dead, that Romeo's faithful wife :
I married them ; and their stol'n marriage-day
Was Tybalt's doomsday, whose untimely death
Banish'd the new made bridegroom from this city ;
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin'd.

You—to remove that siege of grief from her,—
Betroth'd, and would have married her perforce,
To county Paris :—Then comes she to me ;
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage,

Or, in my cell there would she kill herself.

Then gave I her, so tutor'd by my art,
A sleeping potion ; which so took effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her

The form of death : meantime I write to Romeo,
That he should hither come at this dire night,
To help to take her from her borrow'd grave,
Being the time the potion's force should cease.

But he which bore my letter, Friar John,
Was staid by accident ; and yesternight
Return'd my letter back : Then all alone,

At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vault ;
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,

Till I conveniently could send to Romeo :

But, when I came (some minute ere the time
Of her awakening,) here untimely lay

The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.

She wakes ; and I entreated her come forth,
And bear this work of heaven with patience :

But then a noise did scare me from the tomb ;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But (as it seems) did violence on herself.

All this I know : and to the marriage
Her nurse is privy : And, if aught in this “ Thou must wear thy sword by thy side,

And thy dagger handsomely at thy back.”

3 After this line the quarto of 1597 adds :—

“ And young Benvolio is deceased too.”

4 So in the Tragedy of Darius, 1603 :—

“ Ah me ! malicious fates have done me wrong :
Who came first to the world, should first depart.

It not becomes the old r' o'er-live the young ;
This dealing is preposterous and over-thwart.”

5 “ It is to be lamented that the poet did not conclude the dialogue with the action, and avoid a narrative of events which the audience already knew.”—Johnson.
Shakespeare was led into this uninteresting narrative by following too closely The Tragical History of Romeus and Juliet. In this poem, (which is printed in the Variorum Editions of Shakespeare) the bodies of the dead are removed to a public scaffold ; and from that elevation is the Friar's narrative delivered. The same circumstance is introduced in Hamlet near the conclusion.

Miscarried by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrific'd, some hour before his time,
Unto the rigour of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man.
Where's Romeo's man? what can he say in this?

Bal. I brought my master news of Juliet's death;
And then in post he came from Mantua,
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father;
And threaten'd me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.

Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it.—
Where is the county's page, that rais'd the watch?
Birrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady's grave;

And bid me stand aloof, and so I did:
Anon, comes one with light to ope the tomb;
And, by and by, my master drew on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar's words.

Their course of love, the tidings of her death:
And here he writes—that he did buy a poison
Of a poor 'pothecary, and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.—
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!—
See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love!
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen!—all are punish'd.

Cap. O, brother Montague, give me thy hand:
This is my daughter's jointure, for no more
Can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more:
For I will raise her statue in pure gold;
That, while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of true and faithful Juliet.

1 Mercutio and Paris. Mercutio is expressly called the Prince's kinsman in Act iii. Sc. 4; and that Paris was also the Prince's kinsman, may be inferred from the following passages. Capulet, speaking of the count in the fourth act, describes him as 'a gentleman of princely parentage;' and after he is killed, Romeo says:—

—Let me peruse this face;
Mercutio's kinsman, noble county Paris.'

2 The quarto of 1597 reads, 'A gloomy peace.' To gloom, is an ancient verb, used by Spenser and other old writers.

3 This line has reference to the poem from which the fable is taken; in which the Nurse is banished for concealing the marriage; Romeo's servant set at liberty, because he had only acted in obedience to his master's orders; the Apothecary is hanged; while Friar Laurence was permitted to retire to a hermitage near Verona, where he ended his life in penitence and tranquillity.

4 Shakespeare, in his revision of this play, has not effected the alteration by introducing any new incidents, but merely by adding to the length of the scenes. The piece appears to have been always a very popular one. Marston, in his Satires, 1598, says:—

'Lusue, what's play'd to-day? faith, now I know;
I set thy lips abroach, from whence doth flow
Nought but pure Juliet and Romeo.'

The concluding lines may have been formed on the last couplet of the old poem:—

—among the monuments that in Verona been,
There is no monument more worthy of the sight
Than is the tombe of Juliet and Romeus her knight.'

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity!

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it brings;

The sun for sorrow will not show his head:

Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;

Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished:²

For never was a story of more woe,

Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.⁴ [Exeunt.]

THIS play is one of the most pleasing of our author's performances. The scenes are busy and various, the incidents numerous and important, the catastrophe irresistibly affecting, and the process of the action carried on with such probability, at least with such congruity to popular opinions, as tragedy requires.

Here is one of the few attempts of Shakespeare to exhibit the conversation of gentlemen, to represent the airy sprightliness of juvenile elegance. Dryden mentions a tradition, which might easily reach his time, of a declaration made by Shakespeare, that he was obliged to kill Mercutio in the third Act, lest he should have been killed by him. Yet he thinks him no such formidable person, but that he might have lived through the play and died in his bed, without danger to the poet. Dryden well knew, had he been in quest of truth, in a pointed sentence, that more regard is commonly had to the words than the thought, and that it is very seldom to be rigorously understood. Mercutio's wit, gaiety, and courage, will always procure him friends that wish him a longer life; but his death is not precipitated, he has lived out the time allotted him in the construction of the play; nor do I doubt the ability of Shakespeare to have continued his existence, though some of his sallies are perhaps out of the reach of Dryden; whose genius was not very fertile of merriment, nor ductile to humour, but acute, argumentative, comprehensive, and sublime.

The Nurse is one of the characters in which the author delighted: he has with great subtlety of distinction, drawn her at once loquacious and secret, obsequious and insolent, trusty and dishonest.

His comic scenes are happily wrought, but his pathetic strains are always polluted with some unexpected deprivations.* His persons, however distressed, have a conceit left them in their misery, a miserable conceit.†

JOHNSON.

* A. W. Schlegel has answered this remark at length, and, as I think, satisfactorily, in a detailed criticism upon this tragedy, published in the Horae, a Journal conducted by Schiller in 1794—1796, and made accessible to the English reader in Ollier's Literary Miscellany, Part I. In his Lectures on Dramatic Literature (vol. ii. p. 185, Eng. translation,) will be found some further sensible remarks upon the 'conceits' here stigmatized. It should be remembered that playing on words was a very favourite species of wit combat with our ancestors: 'With children, as well as nations of the most simple manners, a great inclination to playing on words is often displayed; [they cannot therefore be both puerile and unnatural: If the first charge is founded, the second cannot be so.] In Homer we find several examples; the Books of Moses, the oldest written memorial of the primitive world, are, it is well known, full of them. On the other hand, poets of a very cultivated taste, or orators like Cicero, have delighted in them. Whoever, in Richard the Second, is disgusted with the affecting play of words of the dying John of Gaunt, on his own name, let him remember that the same thing occurs in the Ajax of Sophocles.' S. W. S.

† This quotation is also found in the Preface to Dryden's Fables.—Just John Littlewit, in Bartholomew Fair, who had a conceit (as he tells you) left him in his misery; a miserable conceit.—Steevens

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE original story on which this play is built may be found in Saxo Grammaticus, the Danish historian. From thence Belleforest adopted it in his collection of novels, in seven volumes, which he began in 1564, and continued to publish through succeeding years. It was from Belleforest that the old black letter prose 'Hystorie of Hamblet' was translated; the earliest edition of which, known to the commentators, was dated in 1605; but it is supposed that there were earlier impressions.

The following passage is found in an Epistle, by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Greene's Arcadia, which was published in 1599:—'I will turn back to my first text of studies of delight, and talk a little in friendship with a few of our rival translators. It is a common practice now-a-days, among a sort of shifting companions, that runne through every art and thrive by none, to leave the trade of Noverint, [i. e. the law] whereunto they were born, and busie themselves with the endeavours of art, that could scarcely ladinize their neck-verse, if they should have needs; yet English Seneca, read by candle-light, yields many good sentences, as Bloud is a beggar, and so forth: and if you entreat him faire in a frosty morning, he will afford you whole Hamlets, I should say, Handfuls of tragical speeches. But O, grief! Tempus edax rerum—what is it that will last always? The sea exhaled by drops, will in continuance be drie; and Seneca, set bloud free by line, and page by page, at length must needs die to our stage.'

It is manifest from this passage that some play on the story of Hamlet had been exhibited before the year 1599. Malone thinks that it was not Shakespeare's drama, but an elder performance, on which, with the aid of the old prose History of Hamblet, his tragedy was formed.

In a tract, entitled 'Wits Miserie, or the World's Madnesse, discovering the Incarnate Devils of the Age,' published by Thomas Lodge in 1596, one of the devils is said to be 'a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the vizard of the ghost, who cried so miserably at the theatre Hamlet, revenge.' But it is supposed that this also may refer to an elder performance.

Dr. Percy possessed a copy of Speght's edition of Chaucer, which had been Gabriel Harvey's, who had written his name and the date, 1598, both at the beginning and end of the volume, and many remarks in the intermediate leaves; among which are these words:—'The younger sort take much delight in Shakespeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmarke, have it in them to please the wiser sort.' Malone doubts whether this was written in 1598, because translated Tusso is named in another note; but it is not necessary that the allusion should be to Fairfax's translation, which was not printed till 1600: it may refer to the version of the first five books of the Jerusalem, published by R. C. [arw] in 1594.

We may therefore safely place the date of the first composition of Hamlet, at least as early as 1597; and, for reasons adduced by Mr. George Chalmers, we may presume that it was revised, and the additions made to it in the year 1600.

The first entry on the Stationers' books is by James Roberts, July 26, 1602; and a copy of the play in its first state, printed for N. L. and John Trundell, in 1603, has recently been discovered. As in the case of the earliest impressions of Romeo and Juliet, and the Merry Wives of Windsor, this edition of Hamlet appears to have been either printed from an imperfect manuscript of the prompt books, or the playhouse copy, or stolen from the author's papers. It is next to impossible that it can have been taken down during the representation, as some have supposed was the case with the other two plays.

The variations of this early copy from the play of Hamlet, in its improved state, are too numerous and striking to admit a doubt of the play having been subsequently revised, amplified, and altered by the poet. There are even some variations in the plot; the principal of which are, that Horatio announces to the Queen Hamlet's unexpected return from his voyage to England; and that the Queen is expressly declared to be innocent of any participation in the murder of Hamlet's father, and privy to his intention of revenging his death. There are also some few lines and passages, which do not appear in the revised copy. The principal variations are noticed in the course of the notes.*

It again issued from the press in 1604, in its corrected and amended state, and in the title-page is stated to be 'newly imprinted, and enlarged to almost as much again as it was, according to the true and perfect copy.' From these words Malone had drawn the natural conclusion that a former less perfect copy had issued from the press; but his star was not propitious; he never saw it. Though it is said to have formed part of the collection of sir Thomas Hamner, it only came to light at the commencement of the present year, [1825;] too late, alas! even to gratify the enthusiasm of his zealous friend, that worthy man, James Boswell; upon whom devolved the office of giving to the world the accumulated labours of Malone's latter years, devoted to the illustration of Shakespeare.

The character of Hamlet has been frequently discussed, and with a variety of contradictory opinions. Johnson and Stevens have made severe animadversions upon some parts of his conduct. A celebrated writer of Germany, has very skilfully pointed out the cause of the defects in Hamlet's character, which unfit him for the dreadful office to which he is called. 'It is clear to me (says Goëthe) that Shakespeare's intention was to exhibit the effects of a great action, imposed as a duty upon a mind too feeble for its accomplishment. In this sense I find the character consistent throughout. Here is an oak planted in a china vase, proper to receive only the most delicate flowers. The roots strike out, and the vessel flies to pieces. A pure, noble, highly moral disposition, but without that energy of soul which constitutes the hero, sinks under a load which it can neither support nor resolve to abandon altogether. All his obligations are sacred to him; but this alone is above his powers! An impossibility is required at his hands; not an impossibility in itself, but that which is so to him. Observe how he shifts, turns, hesitates, advances and recedes; how he is continually reminded and reminding himself of his great commission, which he, nevertheless, in the end seems almost entirely to lose sight of, and this without ever recovering his former tranquillity.'

Dr. Akenside suggested that the madness of Hamlet is not altogether feigned; and the notion has of late been revived. Dr. Forriar, in his Essay towards a Theory of Apparitions, has termed the state of mind which Shakespeare exhibits to us in Hamlet,—as the consequence of conflicting passions and events operating on a frame of acute sensibility,—latent lunacy.

'It has often occurred to me (says Dr. F.) that Shakespeare's character of Hamlet can only be understood on this principle:—He feigns madness for political purposes, while the poet means to represent his understanding as really (and unconsciously to himself) unbinged by the cruel circumstances in which he is placed. The horror of the communication made by his father's spectre, the necessity of belying his attachment to an innocent and deserving object, the certainty of his mother's guilt, and the supernatural impulse by which he is goaded to an act of assassination abhorrent to his nature, are causes sufficient to overwhelm and distract a mind previously disposed to "weakness and to melancholy," and originally full of tenderness and natural affection. By referring to the play, it will be seen that his real insanity is only developed after the mock play. Then, in place of a systematic conduct, conducive to his purposes, he becomes irresolute, inconsequent; and the plot appears to stand unaccountably still. Instead of striking at his object, he resigns himself to the current of events, and sinks at length ignobly under the stream.'

* There are some singular variations in the names of the Dramatis Personæ. Corambis and Montano are the names given to the Polonius and Reynaldo of the revised play; for Rosencrantz and GUILDENSTERN we have Rosencraft and Gilderstone; and Oerick is merely designated a Braggart Gentleman.

† William Meister's Apprenticeship, b. iv. ch. 13.
‡ Essay on the Theory of Apparitions, p. 111-115.

A comedian of considerable talents has entered at large into the question of Hamlet's madness, and has endeavoured to show that the poet meant to represent him as insane.* Mr. Boswell, on the contrary, in a very judicious and ingenious review of Hamlet's character, combats the supposition, and thinks it entirely without foundation. He argues that 'the sentiments which fall from Hamlet in his soliloquies, or in confidential communication with Horatio, evince not only a sound but an acute and vigorous understanding. His misfortunes, indeed, and a sense of shame, from the hasty and incestuous marriage of his mother, have sunk him into a state of weakness and melancholy; but though his mind is enfeebled, it is by no means deranged. It would have been little in the manner of . . . appears to introduce two persons in the same play whose intellects were disordered; but he has rather, in this instance, as in King Lear, a second time effected what, as far as I can recollect, no other writer has ever ventured to attempt—the exhibition on the same scene of real and fictitious madness in contrast with each other. In carrying his design into execution, Hamlet feels no difficulty in imposing upon the King, whom he detests; or upon Polonius, and his school fellows, whom he despises: but the case is very different indeed in his interviews with Ophelia; aware of the submissive mildness of her character, which leads her to be subject to the influence of her father and her brother, he cannot venture to entrust her with his secret. In her presence, therefore, he has not only to assume a disguise, but to restrain himself from those expressions of affection, which a lover must find it most difficult to repress in the presence of his mistress. In this tumult of conflicting feelings, he is led to overact his part, from a fear of falling below it; and thus gives an appearance of rudeness and harshness to that which is, in fact, a painful struggle to conceal his tenderness.†

Mr. Richardson, in his Essay on the Character of Hamlet, has well observed that 'the spirit of that remarkable scene with Ophelia, where he tells her, "get thee to a nunnery," is frequently misunderstood; and especially by the players. At least it does not appear to have been the poet's intention that the air and manner of Hamlet in this scene should be perfectly grave and serious; nor is there any thing in the dialogue to justify the grave and tragic tone with which it is frequently spoken. Let Hamlet be represented as delivering himself in a light and airy, unconcerned and thoughtless manner, and the rudeness so much complained of will disappear.‡ His conduct to Ophelia is intended to confirm and publish the notion he would convey of his pretended insanity, which could not be marked by any circumstance so strongly as that of treating her with harshness or indifference. The sincerity and ardour of his passion for her had undergone no change: he could not explain himself to her; and, in the difficult and trying circumstances in which he was placed, had therefore no alternative.

The poet indeed has marked with a master hand the amiable and polished character of Hamlet. Ophelia designates him as having been '—the glass of fashion, and the mould of form;' and though circumstances have unsettled him, and thrown over his natural disposition the clouds of melancholy, the kindness of his disposition and his natural hilarity break through on every occasion which arises to call them forth.

Mr. Boswell has remarked, that 'the scene with the grave-diggers shows, in a striking point of view, his good natured affability. The reflections which follow afford new proofs of his amiable character. The place where he stands, the frame of his own thoughts, and the objects which surround him, suggest the vanity of all human pursuits; but there is nothing harsh or caustic in his satire; his observations are dictated rather by feelings of sorrow than of anger; and the sprightliness of his wit, which misfortune has repressed, but cannot altogether extinguish, has thrown over the whole a truly pathetic cast of humorous sadness.—Those gleams of sunshine, which serve only to show us the scattered fragments of a brilliant imagination, crushed and broken by calamity, are much more affecting than a long unintermitted train of monotonous woe.'

Ophelia is a character almost too exquisitely touching to be dwelt upon. Oh, rose of May; oh, flower too soon faded! Her love, her madness, her death, are described with the truest touches of tenderness and pathos. It is a character which nobody but Shakspeare could have drawn in the way that he has done; and to the conception of which there is not the smallest approach, except in some of the old romantic ballads.†

ACT I.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A Platform before the Castle.
FRANCISCO on his Post. Enter to him BERNARDO.

Bernardo.

Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me;† stand, and unfold Yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.

Ber. 'Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief, much thanks: 'tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart.

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,

The rivals* of my watch, bid them make haste.

1. i. e. me who am already on the watch, and have a right to demand the watchword; which appears to have been, 'Long live the king.'

2 Shakspeare uses rivals for associates, partners; and competitor has the same sense throughout these plays. It is the original sense of rivalis. The etymology was pointed out by Acro Grammaticus, in his Scholia on Horace: 'A rivo dico rivalis qui in agrum rivum habent communem, et propter enim ampe discrepant.' Hamner applied this explanation:—'Rivalis, in Latin, being originally applied to proprietors of neighbouring lands parted only by a brook, which be-

Fran. I think, I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier: Who hath relief'd you?

Fran. Bernardo hath my place.

Give you good night. [Exit FRANCISCO.]

Mar. Holla! Bernardo!

Ber. Say.

What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus.

Hor. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says, 'tis but our fantasy; And will not let belief take hold of him, Touching this dreadful sight, twice seen of us; Therefore I have entreated him along With us to watch the minutes of this night; That, if again this apparition come, He may approve¹ our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Tush! tush! 'twill not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile: And let us once again assail your ears, That are so fortified against our story, What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down, And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all, When yon same star, that's westward from the pole, Had made his course to illume that part of heaven Where now it burns, Marcellus, and myself, The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace, break those off; look, where it comes again!

Enter Ghost.

Ber. In the same figure like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar, speak to it, Horatio.²

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it, Horatio.

Hor. Most like:—it harrows³ me with fear, and wonder.

Ber. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Speak to it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,

Together with that fair and warlike form

In which the majesty of buried Denmark

Did sometimes march? by Heaven I charge thee, speak.

Mar. It is offended.

longed equally to both, and so signified partners: this partnership led to contests; and hence the word came to signify persons contending for the same object.

1 To approve or confirm. 'Ratum habere aliquid.'—Baret.

2 It was a vulgar notion that a supernatural being could only be spoken to with effect by persons of learning; exorcisms being usually practised by the clergy in Latin. Toby, in The Night Walker of Beaumont and Fletcher, says:—

'Let's call the buxler up, for he speaks Latin, And that will daunt the devil.'

3 The first quarto reads, 'it harrows me.' To harrow is to distress, to vex, to disturb. To harry and to harass have the same origin, from the Gothic haer, an armed force. Milton has the word in Comus:—

'Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.'

4 Parley, the same as parley, a conference between enemies.

5 I. e. the sledged Polander; Polaque, Fr. The old copy reads Polax. Malone therefore thinks that Shakespeare wrote Polacks, not considering that it was in a parody, and that a general slaughter was hardly likely to ensue. Mr. Boswell suggests that it is just possible the old reading may be right, pole-ax being put for the person who carried the pole-axe, a mark of rank among the Muscovites, as he has shown from Milton's Brief History of Muscovy.

6 Jump. So the quarto of 1608, and that of 1604. The folio reads just. Jump and just were synonymous

Ber. See! it stalks away.

Hor. Stay; speak: speak, I charge thee, speak. [Exit Ghost.]

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Ber. How now, Horatio? you tremble, and look pale:

Is not this something more than fantasy?

What think you of it?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe, Without the sensible and true avouch Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As thou art to thyself:

Such was the very armour he had on, When he the ambitious Norway combated; So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle,⁴ He smote the sledged Polack⁵ on the ice.

'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus, twice before, and jump⁶ at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not;

But, in the gross and scope of mine opinion, This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,

Why this same strict and most observant watch

So nightly toils the subject of the land!

And why such daily cast of brazen cannon,

And foreign mart for implements of war;

Why such impress⁷ of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week:

What might be toward, that this sweaty haste

Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day;

Who is't, that can inform me?

Hor.

That can I;

At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,

Whose image even but now appear'd to us,

Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,

Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,

Dar'd to the combat; in which our valiant Hamlet,

(For so this side of our known world esteem'd him),

Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd compact,

Well ratified by law and heraldry,

Did forfeit with his life, all those his lands,

Which he stood seiz'd of, to the conqueror.

Against the which, a moiety competent

Was gaged by our king; which had return'd

To the inheritance of Fortinbras,

Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same compact,⁸

And carriage of the article design'd,⁹

His fell to Hamlet: Now, sir, young Fortinbras,

Of unimproved mettle hot and full,¹⁰

In the time of Shakespeare. So in Chapman's May Day, 1611:—

'Your appointment was jumpe at three with me.'

'Thou bendest neither one way nor tother, but art even jumpe stark naught.'—Baret, B. 456.

7 That is, 'what particular train of thought to follow, I know not,' &c. The first quarto reads:—

'In what particular to work I know not.'

8 To impress signifies only to retain shipwrights by giving them press money for holding themselves in readiness to be employed. Thus in Chapman's second book of Homer's Odyssey:—

'I from the people straight will preste for you,

Free volunteers.'

See King Lear, Act iv. Sc. 2; and Blount's Glossography, in v. press.

9 Co-mart is the reading of the quarto of 1604; the folio reads, covenant. Co-mart, it is presumed, means a joint bargain. No other instance of the word is known.

10 I. e. and import of that article marked out, assigned or appointed for that purpose. Designed is here used in the sense designatus, Lat.

11 The first quarto reads, 'Of unapproved: Of unimproved mettle hot and full; i. e. of unimpeached or unquestioned courage. To improve anciently signified to impeach, to impugn. Thus Florio: 'Improbare, to improve, to impugn.' The French have still improver, with the same meaning; from improbare, Lat. Numerous instances of improve in this sense may be found in the writings of Shakespeare's time. And yet

Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd¹ up a list of landless resolute,
For food and diet, to some enterprise
That hath a stomach² in't: which is no other,
(As it doth well appear unto our state,)
But to recover of us, by strong hand,
And terms compulsory, those f³oresaid lands
So by his father lost: And this, I take it,
Is the main motive of our preparations;
The source of this our watch; and the chief head
Of this post-haste and romage⁴ in the land.

⁴ [Ber. I think, it be no other, but even so:
Well may it sort,⁵ that this portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch; so like the king
That was, and is, the question⁶ of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is, to trouble the mind's eye.
In the most high and palmy⁷ state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

As, stars with trains of fire and dews of blood,
Disasters in the sun; and the moist star,⁸
Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.
And even the like precurse of fierce events,—
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen⁹ coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated

But, soft; behold! lo, where it comes again!
I'll cross it, though it blast me.¹¹—Stay, illusion!
If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
Speak to me:

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me:

If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
Which, happily, foreknowing, may avoid,
O, speak!

Or, if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in death, [Cock crows.

Speak of it!—stay, and speak.—Stop it, Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. ¹² 'Tis here!

Johnson explains it, 'full of spirit, not regulated or guided by knowledge or experience,' and has been hitherto uncontradicted.

1 I. e. snapped up or taken up hastily. 'Scroccare is properly to do any thing at another man's cost, to shark or shift for any thing. Scrocolone, a cunning shifter or sharker for any thing in time of need, namely for victuals; a tall treacher-man, shifting up and down for belly cheer.' The same word also signifies to snep. This word has not yet lost its force in vulgar conversation.

2 Stomach is used for determined purpose.

3 Romage, now spelt rummage, and in common use as a verb, though not as a substantive, for making a thorough ransack or search, a busy and tumultuous movement.

4 All the lines within crochets in this play are omitted in the folio of 1623. The title-pages of the quartos of 1604 and 1608 declare this play to be 'enlarged to almost as much againe as it was, according to the true and perfect copie.'

5 I. e. fall in with the idea of, suit, accord.

6 I. e. theme, or subject.

7 I. e. victorious; the palm being the emblem of victory.
Chapman, in his Middle Temple Masque, has high-palm'd hearts.

8 A line or more is here supposed to be lost.

9 I. e. the moon.

dicted event*.

Mar. 'Tis gone!

[Exit Ghost.

We do it wrong, being so majestic,
To offer it the show of violence;
For it is, as the air, invulnerable;¹³
And our vain blows malicious mockery.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew,

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing

Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,

The cock, that is the trumpet of the morn,¹⁴

Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat

Awake the god of day; and at his warning,

Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,

The extravagant and erring¹⁵ spirit hies

To his confine: and of the truth herein

This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.¹⁶

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes

Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,

This bird of dawning singeth all night long;

And then they say no spirit dares stir abroad;

The nights are wholesome: then no planets strike,

No fairy takes,¹⁷ nor witch hath power to charm,

So hallow'd and so gracious¹⁸ is the time.

Hor. So I have heard, and do in part believe it.

But look, the morn,¹⁹ in russet mantle clad,

Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill:

Break we our watch up; and, by my advice,

Let us impart what we have seen to-night

Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life,

This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him:

Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,

As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morning know

Where we shall find him most convenient. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the same. Enter the King, Queen, HAMLET, POLO-NIUS, LAERTES, VOLTIMAND, CORNELIUS, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green; and that it us besitteth

To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom

To be contracted in one brow of woe;

Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature,

That we with wisest sorrow think on him,

Together with remembrance of ourselves.

Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen, have been occasioned by witchcraft, is the following:

—On Friday there appeared a tall man, who twice crossed him swiftly; and when the earl came to the place where he saw this man he fell sick.—Lodge's Illustrations of English History, vol. III. p. 43.

Johnson remarks that the speech of Horatio to the spectre is very elegant and noble, and congruous to the common traditions of the causes of apparitions.

12 Thus in Macbeth:—

'As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air

With thy keen sword impress.'

And in King John:—

'Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven.'

13 'And now the cocke, the morning's trumpeter,

Play'd hunte-up for the day-star to appear.'

Drayton.

14 'The extravagant and erring spirit'—Ecce venans, wandering about, going beyond bounds.' Thus in Othello:—'I to an extravagant and wheeling stranger'

—Erring is erraticus, straying or roving up and down.

15 This is a very ancient superstition. Philostratus, giving an account of the apparition of Achilles' shade to Apollonius of Tyanna, says, 'that it vanished with a little gleam as soon as the cock crowed.' There is a Hymn of Prudentius, and another of St. Ambrose, in which it is mentioned; and there are some lines in the later very much resembling Horatio's speech. Mr.
Douce has given them in his Illustrations of Shakspeare.

16 I. e. no fairy blasts, or strikes. Thus in the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. Sc. 4:—

'And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle'

See note on that passage.

17 It has already been observed that gracious is sometimes used by Shakespeare for graced, favoured. Vote note on As You Like It, Act I. Sc. 2.

18 First quarto, 'sun'

The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
 Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,—
 With one auspicious, and one dropping eye;¹
 With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
 In equal scale weighing delight and dole;²
 Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd
 Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
 With this affair along:—For all our thanks.

Now fellows, that you know, young Fortinbras,—
 Holding a weak supposal of our worth;
 Or thinking by our late dear brother's death,
 Our state to be disjoint and out of frame,
 Colleague'd³ with this dream of his advantage,
 He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
 Importing the surrender of those lands
 Lost by his father, with all bands⁴ of law,
 To our most valiant brother.—So much for him.
 Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting.
 Thus much the business is: We have here writ
 To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
 Who, impotent and bed-ridden, scarcely hears
 Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress
 His further gait⁵ herein; in that the levies,
 The lists, and full proportions, are all made
 Out of his subject:—and we here dispatch
 You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
 For bearers of this greeting to old Norway;
 Giving to you no further personal power
 To business with the king, more than the scope
 Of these related articles allow.⁶
 Farewell; and let your haste commend your duty.

Cor. Vol. In that, and all things, will we show our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing; heartily farewell.

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
 You told us of some suit; What is't, Laertes?
 You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
 And lose your voice: What would'st thou beg,
 Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
 The head is not more native to the heart;
 The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
 Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.⁷
 What would'st thou have, Laertes?

Laer. My dread lord,
 Your leave and favour to return to France;

1 Thus the folio. The quarto reads:

'With an auspicious and a dropping eye.'

The same thought occurs in The Winter's Tale:—
 'She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.' There is an old proverbial phrase, 'To laugh with one eye, and cry with the other.'

2 I. e. grief.

3 I. e. united to this strange fancy of, &c.

4 The folio reads, bonds; but bonds and bonds signified the same thing in the poet's time.

5 Gait here signifies course, progress. Gait for road, way, path, is still in use in the north. We have this word again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act
 v. Sc. 3:—

'Every fairy takes his gait.'

6 The folio reads, 'More than the scope of these dilated articles allow.' I have not scrupled to read related, upon the authority of the first quarto, as more intelligible. Malone says, 'the poet should have written allows;' but the grammar and practice of Shakespeare's age was not strict in the concordance of plural and singular in noun and verb: and numerous examples might be adduced from his contemporaries to prove this. The question is, Are the writers of that time to be tried by modern rules of grammar, with which they were not acquainted? Stevens, with a sweeping assertion, which no one conversant with MSS. of the time will allow, would attribute all such inaccuracies to illiterate transcribers or printers. We have Malone's assertion, that such errors are to be met with in almost every page of the first folio. The first quarto reads:—

'—no further personal power

To business with the king

Than those related articles do shew.'

7 The various parts of the body enumerated are not more allied, more necessary to each other, than the throne of Denmark (I. e. the king) is bound to your father to do him service.

From whence though willingly I came to Denmark,
 To show my duty in your coronation;
 Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,
 My thoughts and wishes bend again toward France,
 And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says
 Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, [wrung from me my slow
 leave,

By labourous petition; and, at last,
 Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent:]
 I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine,
 And thy best graces spend it at thy will.⁸—
 But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. A little more than kin, and less than kind.⁹

[Aside.]

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord, I am too much 't the sun.¹⁰

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
 And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

Do not, for ever, with thy veiled lids!¹¹

Seek for thy noble father in the dust:

Thou know'st, 'tis common; all, that live, must die,

Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,
 Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seem, madam! nay, it is; I know not seems.

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
 Nor customary suits of solemn black,
 Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
 No, nor the fruitful raviour in the eye,
 Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,
 Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
 That can denote me truly: These, indeed, seem,
 For they are actions that a man might play;
 But I have that within, which passeth show;
 These but the trappings and the suits of woe.¹²

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:
 But you must know your father lost a father;
 That father lost, lost his;¹³ and the survivor bound
 In filial obligation, for some term.

8 In the first quarto this passage stands thus:—

'King. With all our heart, Laertes, fare thee well.

Laer. I in all love and duty take my leave. [Exit.']

The king's speech may be thus explained:—'Take an auspicious hour, Laertes; be your time your own, and thy best virtues guide thee in spending of it at thy will.'
 Johnson thought that we should read, 'And my best graces.' The editors had rendered this passage doubly obscure by erroneously placing a colon at graces.

9 'A little more than kin, and less than kind.' This passage has baffled the commentators, who are at issue about its meaning; but have none of them rightly explained it. A contemporary of the poet will lead us to its true meaning. A little more than kin has been rightly said to allude to the double relationship of the king to Hamlet, as uncle and step-father, his kindred by blood and kindred by marriage. By less than kind Hamlet means degenerate and base. 'Going out of kinde, (says Baret), which goeth out of kinde, which doth or worketh dishonour to his kindred. Degener; forignant.'—Alceste, K. 98. 'Fortiger, (says Cot-grave), to degenerate, to grow out of kind, to differ in conditions with his ancestors.' That less than kind and out of kind have the same meaning, who can doubt?

10 It is probable that a quibble is intended between sun and son. The old spelling is sonne.

11 I. e. with eyes cast down.

— Fall your regard

Upon a wrong'd, I'd fain have said a maid.'

Measure for Measure, vol. i.

12 'My grief lies all within,
 And these external manners of lament
 Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
 That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul

King Richard II.

13 I. e. your father lost a father, (your grandfather), which lost grandfather also lost his father. The first quarto reads, 'That father dead, lost his'

To do obsequious sorrow.¹ But to persevere
In obstinate condolement,² is a course
Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief:
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven;³
A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
An understanding simple and unschool'd:
For what, we know, must be, and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we, in our poorish opposition,
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason most absurd: whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first corse, till he that died to-day,
This must be so. We pray you, throw to earth
This unprevailing⁴ woe; and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our throne;
And with no less nobility of love,⁵
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart⁶ toward you. For your intent
In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And, we beseech you, bend⁷ you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.
Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers,
Hamlet;

I pray thee, stay with us, go not to Wittenberg.
Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.
King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply;
Be as ourself in Denmark.—Madam, come;
This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof
No jocund health, that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell;
And the king's rouse⁸ the heavens shall bruit again,
Respeaking earthly thunder. Come away.
[Exeunt King, Queen, Lords, &c. POLONIUS, and LAERTES.]

Ham. O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve⁹ itself into a dew!

¹ Obsequious sorrow is dutiful, observant sorrow. Shakespeare seems to have used this word generally with an allusion to obsequies, or funeral rites.

² Condolement for grief.

³ 'It shows a will most undisciplined towards heaven.'

⁴ Unprevailing was used in the sense of unavailing as late as Dryden's time, 'He may often prevail himself of the same advantages in English.'—Essay on Dramatic Poetry, 1st ed.

⁵ And dyvers noble victories, as the history doth express.

That he stichy'd to the honour of the town,
Could not him prepaye when Fortune lyst to frown.

Metrical Visions by G. Cavendish, p. 81.

⁶ This was a common form of figurative expression. The Ghost, describing his affection for the Queen, says:—

'To me, whose love was of that dignity.'

⁷ I.e. dispende, bestow. Thus Dryden:—

'High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart.'

⁸ To bend is to incline. 'The monte parte bende to, &c.: In hoc consilium maxime inclinant,' &c.—Barlet.

⁹ The quarto of 1603 reads to. 'The rouse the king shall drink unto the prince.'

A rouse appears to have been a deep draught to the health of any one, in which it was customary to empty the glass or vessel. Its etymology is uncertain; but I suspect it to be only an abridgment of carouse, which is used in the same sense. See Peachment's Complete Gentleman, 1697, p. 194.

Carouse, seems to have come to us from the French, who again appear to have derived it from the German gar-ause, to drink all out: at least so we may judge from the following passages in Rabelais, B. iii. Prologue:—'Enfance, beuver a plain gous. Si ban ne vous semble, laissez la. Je n'ai plus de cas importuns hiflores, qui par force, par outrage, et violence contraingent les gentils compagnons triquer, boire carouse, et aliauz.'

The reader may consult Mr. Gifford's Mansinger, vol. i. p. 240.

⁹ To resolve had anciently the same meaning as to dissolve 'To thaw or resolve that which is frozen;

Or that the Everlasting had not fir'd
His canon¹⁰ 'gainst self-laughter! O, God, O, God!

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on't! O, fie! 'tis an unweeded garden
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,

Possess it merely.¹¹ That it should come to this!
But two months dead!—nay, not so much, not two.
So excellent a king; that was, to this,
Hyperion¹² to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
That he might not bottom¹³ the winds of heaven
Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,
As if increase of appetite had grown
By what it fed on: And yet, within a month,—
Let me not think on't!—Fradity, thy name is woman!

A little month; or ere these shoes were old,
With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she,—
O, heaven! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,¹⁴
Would have mourn'd longer,—married with my uncle,

My father's brother; but no more like my father,
Than I to Hercules: Within a month;
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married:—O, most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to, good;
But break, my heart: for I must hold my tongue!

[Enter HORATIO, BERNARDO, and MARCELLUS.]

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well;

Horatio,—or I do forget myself.

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you.

regelo.—The snow is recolled and melted. To till the ground, and resolve it into dust.—Cooper. This is another word in a Latin sense; but it is not peculiar to Shakespeare.

¹⁰ The old copy reads, canon; but this was the old spelling of canon, a law or decree.

¹¹ I.e. absolutely, solely, wholly. Mere, Lat.

¹² Hyperion, or Apollo, always represented as a model of beauty.

¹³ I.e. deign to allow. This word being of uncommon occurrence, it was changed to permitted by Rowe; and to let even by Theobald. Stevens had the merit of pointing out the passage in Golding's Ovid, which settles its meaning:—

'Yet could he not bottom

The shape of any other bird than eagle for to assume'

— aula tamen alite verti

Dignatur, nisi quæ possit una fulmine ferre.

Rowe has an elegant imitation of this passage:—

'I thought the gentlest breeze that wakes the spring
Too rough to breathe upon her.'

The word occurs again in A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. 2.

¹⁴ 'Oh heaven! a beast that wants discourse of reason.' Mr. Gifford, in a note on Mansinger, vol. i. p. 146, is of opinion that we should read, 'discourse and reason.' It has, however, been shown by several quotations that 'discourse of reason' was the phraseology of Shakespeare's time; and, indeed, the poet again uses the same language in Truities and Cressida, Act ii. Sc. 2:

'— is your blood

So madly hot, that no discourse of reason—can qualify the same.

In the language of the schools, 'Discourse is that rational act of the mind by which we deduce or infer one thing from another.' Discover of reasons therefore may mean revelation. Brues have not this reasoning facility, though they have what has been called instinct and memory. Hamlet opposes the discursive power of the intellect of men to the instinct of brutes in Act iv. Sc. 4, which may tend to elucidate his present meaning; if the reader has any doubts. The first quarto reads, 'a beast devoid of reason.' We have discourse of thought, for the discursive range of thought, in Othello, Act iv. Sc. 2.

And what make you^h from Wittenberg, Horatio?— Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord,—

Ham. I am very glad to see you; good even, sir.
But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not hear your enemy say so:
Nor shall you do mine ear that violence,
To make it truster of your own report
Against yourself: I know you are no truant.
But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow student;

I think, it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bakh'd meats^a

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

'Would, I had met my dearest^b foe in heaven,
Or^c ever I had seen that day, Horatio!

My father,—Methinks, I see my father.

Hor. Where,

My lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye,^b Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw! who?

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent ear: till I may deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead waste and middle of the night,^d
Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your father,
Armed to point, exactly, cap-a-pé,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd,
By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,
Within his truncheon's length; whilst they, distill'd^e
Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did;
And I with them, the third night kept the watch;
Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and good,
The apparition comes; I knew your father;
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

1 i. e. what do you. Vide note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 3.

2 It was anciently the custom to give an entertainment at a funeral. The usage was derived from the Roman cena funeralis; and is not yet disused in the North, where it is called an arrel supper.

3 See note on Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.

4 This is the reading of the quarto of 1604. The first quarto and the folio read, 'Ere I had ever.'

5 ——— himself behind

Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind.

Rape of Lucrece.

Chaucer has the expression in his Man of Lawe's Tale:—

'But it were with thilke eyes of his mind,

Which men mowen see when they ben blinde.'

And Ben Jonson, in his Masque of Love's Triumphs:—

'As only by the mind's eye may be seen.'

And Richard Rolle, in his Speculum Vitæ, MS. speaking of Jacob's Dream:—

'That Jacob sawe with goodly eyes.'

i. e. the eye of the mind or spirit.

6 The first quarto, 1603, has:—

'In the dead waste and middle of the night.'

Follows the following note to stand as I had written it previous to the discovery of that copy.

We have 'that wast of night' in The Tempest, Act i. Sc. 2. Shakespeare has been unjustly accused of in-

Hor. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did:

But answer made it none; yet once, methought,
It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak;
But, even then, the morning cock crew loud;^a
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,
And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;
And we did think it writ down in our duty,
To let you know of it.

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sir, but this troubles me.
Hold you the watch to-night?

All. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you? Arm'd, my lord.

All. From top to toe?

All. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. Then saw you not

His face.

Hor. O, yes, my lord; he wore his beaver^b up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more

In sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fir'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would, I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amas'd you.

Ham. Very like,

Very like: Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Br. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw it.

Ham. His beard was grizzled? no?

Hor. It was as I have seen it in his life,
A sable silver'd.¹⁰

Ham. I will watch to-night;

Perchance, 'twill walk again.

Hor. I warrant you, it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be tenable¹¹ in your silence still;
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue;
I will requite your loves: So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: Farewell.

[Exeunt HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BERNARDO]

tending a quibble here between waist and waste. There appears to be nothing incongruous in the expression; on the contrary, by the dead waste and middle of the night,¹ I think, we have a forcible image of the void stillness of midnight.

7 The folio reads, bestill'd.

8 'It is a most inimitable circumstance in Shakespeare so to have managed this popular idea, as to make the Ghost, which has been so long obstinately silent, and of course must be dismissed by the morning, begin or rather prepare to speak, and to be interrupted at the very critical time by the crowing of a cock. Another poet, according to custom, would have suffered his ghost tamely to vanish, without contriving this start, which is like a start of guilt: to say nothing of the aggravation of the future suspense occasioned by this preparation to speak, and to impart some mysterious secret. Less would have been expected if nothing had been promised.—T. Warburton.

9 That part of the helmet which may be lifted up, Mr. Douce has given representations of the beaver, and other parts of a helmet, and fully explained them in his Illustrations, vol. i. p. 443.

10 'And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white.'

Shakespeare's Twelfth Sonnet.

11 The quarto of 1603 reads tenible. The other quarto, tenable. The folio of 1623 treble

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play: 'would, the night were come!
Till then sit still, my soul: Foul deeds will rise,
Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. A Room in Polonius' House. Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd; farewell:
And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;
A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute;
No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
In thews,¹ and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps, he loves you now;
And now no soil, nor cautel² doth besmirch⁴
The virtue of his will: but, you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth:
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and health of the whole state;³
And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
Unto the voice and yielding of that body,
Whereof he is the head: Then if he says he loves
you,

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further,
Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list⁵ his songs;
Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd⁶ importunity.
Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest⁷ maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes:

1 This is the reading of the quarto copy. The folio has—

'—sweet, not lasting,
The suppliance of a minute.'

It is plain that perfume is necessary to exemplify the idea of sweet not lasting. 'The suppliance of a minute' should seem to mean supplying or enduring only that short space of time, as transitory and evanescent. The simile is eminently beautiful: it is to be regretted that it should be obscured by an unusual word.

2 i. e. sinews and muscular strength. Vide note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act III. Sc. 2.

3 Cautel is cautious circumspection, subtlety, or deceit. Minshew explains it, 'a crafty way to deceive.' Thus, in a Lover's Complaint:—

'In him a plenteitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives.'

And in Coriolanus:—

'—be caught by cautels baits and practice.'

4 The virtue of his will, means his virtuous intentions.

5 Besmirch is besmear, or sully.

6 'The safety and health of the whole state.' Thus the quarto of 1604. In the folio it is altered to 'The sanctity,' &c., supposing the metre defective. But safety is used as a tri-syllable by Spenser and others. Thus Hall, in his first Booke, b. iii.:—

'Nor fish can dive so deep in yielding sea,
Though These self should swear her safety.'

7 'If with too credulous ear you listen to his songs.'

8 Licentious.

9 i. e. the most cautious, the most discreet. In Green's Never too Late, 1616:—'Love requires not chastity, but that her soldiers be chary.' And again:—'She lives chaste enough that lives charyl.' We have chariness in The Merry Wives of Windsor; and unchary in Twelfth Night, Act III. Sc. 4.

The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons be discol'd;
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary, then: best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep,
As watchman to my heart; But, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, like a puff'd and rockless⁹ libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own read.¹⁰

Laer. O, fear me not.
I stay too long;—But here my father comes.

Enter POLONIUS.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for shame;

The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are staid for: There,—my blessing with you;

[Laying his Hand on LAERTES' Head.]

And these few precepts in thy memory
Look thou character.¹¹ Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;¹²
But do not dull thy palm¹³ with entertainment
Of each new hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrel: but, being in,
Bear it that the opposer may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure,¹⁴ but reserve thy judgment.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy:
For the apparel oft proclaims the man:
And they in France, of the best rank and station,
Are most select and generous, chief¹⁵ in that.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be:
For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.¹⁶
This above all,—To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,

9 Reckless, or negligent; Omissus animus.—Barret.

10 i. e. regards not his own lesson. In The Two Angry Women of Abington, 1699, we have:—'Take heed is a good reed.' And in Sternhold, Psalm i.:—

'Blest is the man that hath not lent
To wicked reeds his ear.'

11 i. e. mark, imprint, strongly infix. In Shakespeare's 122d Sonnet:—

'—thy tables are within my brain
Full character'd with lasting memory.'

12 The old copies read, 'with hoops of steel.'

13 'But do not dull thy palm.' This figurative expression means, 'do not blunt thy feeling by taking every new acquaintance by the hand, or by admitting him to the intimacy of a friend.'

14 i. e. judgment, opinion; censure, Lat. Thus in King Henry VI. Part II.:—

'The king is old enough to give his censure.'

15 The quarto of 1608, reads:—
'Are of a most select and generall chief in this.

The folio:—

'Are of a most select and generous chief, in that.

The other quartos give the line:—

'As of a most select and generous, chiefs in that.'

16 Or of a most select and generous, chiefs in that. Malone has tried to torture the passage into a meaning, by supposing an allusion to the chief or upper part of a shield in heraldry. But the redundancy of the line, and discrepancy of the copies, evidently show it to be corrupt. The simple emendation by omitting of a, and the proper punctuation of the line, make all clear. 'The nobility of France are most select and high-minded (generous) chiefs in that; chief being an adjective used adverbially. We have generous for high minded, noble, in Othello, and in Measure for Measure, 16 i. e. thrift, economical prudence

Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell; my blessing season¹ this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.²

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia; and remember well

What I have said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lock'd,
And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. (Exit LAERTES.)

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late

Given private time to you; and you yourself

Have of your audience been most free and bounteous:

If it be so, (as so 'tis put on me,) I must tell you,

You do not understand yourself so clearly,

As it behoves my daughter, and your honour:

What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late, made many tenders

Of his affection to me.

Pol. Affection? puh! you speak like a green girl,

Unsifted³ in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself a baby;

That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,

Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more

dearly;

Or, (not to crack the wind of the poor phrase, Wrangling it thus,) you'll tender me a fool.⁴

Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love,

In honourable fashion.⁵

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call it; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech,

my lord,

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks.⁶ I do know,

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul

Lends the tongue vows:⁷ these blazes, daughter,

Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,

Even in their promise, as it is a making,—

You must not take for fire. From this time,

Be somewhat scancer of your maiden presence;

Set your entreatments⁸ at a higher rate,

Than a command to parley. For lord Hamlet,

Believe so much in him, that he is young;

And with a larger tether⁹ may he walk,

Than may be given you: In few, Ophelia,

Do not believe his vows: for they are brokers,¹⁰

Not of that die which their investments show,

But mere implorators of unholy suits,

Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,

The better to beguile. This is for all,—

I would not, in plain terms, from this time forth,

Have you so slander any moment's leisure,

As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.

Look to't, I charge you; come your ways.

Oph. I shall obey, my lord. (Exit.)

SCENE IV. The Platform. Enter HAMLET,

HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager¹¹ air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not; it then draws near the season,

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A Flourish of Trumpets, and Ordnance shot off within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse.

Keeps wassel,¹² and the swaggering up-spring¹³

reels;

And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,

The kettledrum and trumpet thus bray out

The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here,

And to the manner born,—it is a custom

More honour'd in the breach, than the observance.

This heavy-headed revel, east and west,¹⁴

Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations:

They clepe¹⁵ us, drunkards, and with swinish phrase

11 Eager was used in the sense of the French aigre, sharp.

12 The origin of the word wassel is thus related by

Geoffrey of Monmouth:—'On Vortigern's first interview with Rowena, she kneeled before him, and presenting a cup of wine, said to him, Lord king, was heil,

i. e. be health, or health be to you! Vortigern, unacquainted with the Saxon language, inquired the meaning of these words, and being told that he should answer them by saying Drinc heil, he did so, and commanded Rowena to drink; then taking the cup from her hand, he kissed the damsel and pledged her. From that time the custom remained in Britain that whoever drank to another at a feast said Was heil, and he that immediately after received the cup answered Drinc

heil.' The story is also told in the Metrical Chronicle of Robert of Brunne. To keep wassel, was to devote the time to festivity. Vide Love's Labour's Lost, Act v.

Sc. 2. To wake, signified to revel at night. Vide Florio in voce Veggia.

13 I take upspring here to mean nothing more than up start. Steevens, from a passage in Chapman's Alphonsus, thought that it might mean a dance.

14 This and the following twenty-one lines are omitted in the folio. They had probably been omitted in representation, lest they should give offence to Anne of

Denmark.

15 Clepe, call, clypian, Sax. The Danes were indeed proverbial as drunkards, and well they might be, according to the accounts of the time. 'A lively French traveller, being asked what he had seen in Denmark, replied, "Rien de singulier sinon qu'on y chante tous les jours le Roi doit," alluding to the French mode of celebrating Twelfth Day.' See De Brieux Origines de quelques Coutumes, p. 66. 'Heywood, in his Philoco-thonista, or The Drunkard Opened,' &c. 1635, 4to. speaking of what he calls the vinosity of nations, says of the Danes, that they have made a profession thereof from antiquity, and are the first upon record that brought their wassel bowls and elbowe deepe healthes into this

'and.'—Douce. Roger Ascham, in one of his Letters,

1 'To season, for to infuse,' says Warburton. 'It is more than to infuse, it is to infuse in such a manner that it may never wear out,' says Johnson. But hear one of the poet's contemporaries:—'To season, to temper wisely, to make more pleasant and acceptable.'—Baret. 'This is the sense required, and is a better commentary than the conjectures of the learned critics, Warburton and Johnson, could supply. Thus in Act II. Sc. 1, Polonius says to Reynaldo, 'You may season it in the charge.' And in a former scene Horatio says—

'Season your admiration for a while.'

2 Wait.

3 i. e. untried, inexperienced.

4 Shakespeare makes Polonius play on the equivocal use of the word tender, which was anciently used in the sense of regard or respect, as well as in that of offer. The folio reads, 'roaming it thus;' and the quarto, 'wrong it thus.'

5 Ophelia uses fashion for manner; and Polonius equivocates upon the word, taking it in its usual acceptation, for a transient practice.

6 This was a proverbial phrase. There is a collection of epigrams under that title: the woodcock being accounted a witless bird, from a vulgar notion that it had no brains. 'Springes to catch woodcocks' means 'arts to entrap simplicity.'

7 'How prodigal the tongue lends the heart vows,' &c. 1603.

8 i. e. 'be more difficult of access, and let the suitor to you for that purpose be of higher respect, than a command to parley.' How Johnson could conceive entreatments to signify company, conversation, I am at a loss to imagine.

9 i. e. with a longer line; a horse fastened by a string to a stake, is lathered: figuratively, with more licence.

10 i. e. panders. Brokage and to broke was anciently to deal in business of an amatory nature by procurement. Thus in A Lover's Complaint:—

'Know vows are ever brokers to defiling.'

Soil our addition;¹ and indeed it takes
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,
The pith and marrow of our attribute.
So, oft it chances in particular men,
That, for some vicious mole² of nature in them,
As, in their birth, (wherein they are not guilty,
Since nature cannot choose his origin,³
By the o'ergrowth of some complexion,⁴
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason;
Or by some habit, that too much o'erleavens
The form of plausive manners;—that these men,
Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect;
Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,⁵—
Their virtues else, (be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may underge,)
Shall in the general censure take corruption
From that particular fault: The dram of bale
Doth all the noble substance often doubt⁶
To his own scandal.

Enter Ghost.

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!
Ham. Angels and ministers of grace, defend us!⁷
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,⁸
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable⁹ shape,
That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee, Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me:
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their caskets: why the sepulchre,
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,¹⁰
Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again! What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel¹¹
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,¹²
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?
Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

says, 'The Emperor of Germany, who had his head in the glass five times as long as any of us, never drank less than a good quart at once of Rhenish wine.' See also Howell's Letters, 8vo. 1736, p. 286. Muffet's Health's Improvement, 4to. 1635, p. 254. Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ, 8vo. 1594, vol. i. p. 246.

1 i. e. characterize us by a swinish epithet.

2 i. e. spot, blemish.

3 Complexion for humour. By complexion our ancestors understood the constitutions or affections of the body.

4 i. e. the influence of the planet supposed to govern our birth, &c.

5 i. e. judgment, opinion.

6 The last paragraph of this speech stands in the quarto editions thus:—

— the dram of cads

Doth all the noble substance of a doubt

To his own scandal.

Stevens reads:—

— The dram of base

Doth all the noble substance often doubt [i. e. do out.]

To his own scandal.

Malone proposed:—

— The dram of base

Doth all the noble substance of worth doubt

To his own scandal.

I see no reason why doubt should be substituted for doubt. The editors have unwarrantably made the same substitution in King Henry V. Act iv. Sc. 2, and then cite it as a precedent. Mr. Boswell has justly observed, that to doubt may mean to bring into doubt or suspicion; many words similarly formed are used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries. Thus to fear is to create fear; to pale is to make pale; to cease is to cause to cease, &c. I have followed the emendation in other respects, though I have ventured to read bale (i. e. evil) instead of base, as nearer to the reading of the first edition.

7 Hamlet's speech to the apparition of his father seems to consist of three parts. When he first sees the spectre, he fortifies himself with an invocation:—
'Angels and ministers of grace, defend us.'
As the spectre approaches, he deliberates with himself,

Mar. Look, with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee;¹³
And, for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself;
It waves me forth again;—I'll follow it. [Lord,

Hor. What, if it tempt you toward the flood, my
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,
That beetles¹⁴ o'er his base into the sea?
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,¹⁵
And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys¹⁶ of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still:

Go on, I'll follow thee.

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.—

[Ghost beckons.
Still am I call'd;—unhand me, gentlemen;—
[Breaking from them.

By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets¹⁷ me:
I say, away;—Go on, I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Have after.—To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hor. Heaven will direct it.¹⁸

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.
[Exeunt.

and determines that, whatever it be, he will venture to address it:—

'Be thou a spirit of health,' &c.

This he says while his father's spirit is advancing; he then, as he had determined, speaks to him, and calls him:

— Hamlet,

King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me?¹⁹

Johnson.

8 'Art thou a god, a man, or else a ghost?
Com'st thou from heaven, where bliss and solace dwell?

Or from the air cold-engendering coast?

Or from the darksome dungeon-hold of hell?

Acolastus, or After Wit, 1694.

9 Questionable must not be understood in its present acceptation of doubtful, but as conceivable, inviting question or conversation; this was the most prevalent meaning of the word in Shakespeare's time.

10 Quarto 1603—interr'd.

11 It appears from Olaus Wormius, cap. vii. that it was the custom to bury the Danish kings in their armour.

12 Frame of mind.

13 'I do not estimate my life at the value of a pin.'

14 i. e. overhangs his base. Thus in Sidney's Arcadia,
b. i.—'Hills lift up their beetle brows, as if they would overlook the pleasantness of their under prospect.'
The verb to beetle is apparently of Shakespeare's creation.

15 'To deprive your sovereignty of reason,' signifies to take from you or disposes you of the command of reason. We have similar instances of raising the idea of virtues or qualities by giving them rank, in Banquo's
'royalty of nature'; and even in this play we have
'nobility of love,' and 'dignity of love.'

16 i. e. whims.

17 'Villains, set down the corse, or by St. Paul
Put make a corse of him that disobeys.'

King Richard III. Act i. Sc. 1.

To let in old language is to hinder, to stay, to obstruct;
and still a current term in leases and other legal instruments.

18 Marcellus answers Horatio's question, 'To what issue will this come?' and Horatio also answers it himself with pious resignation, 'Heaven will direct it.'

SCENE V. A more remote Part of the Platform. Re-enter Ghost and HAMLET.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? speak, I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come, When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night;
And, for the day, confin'd to fast in fires,¹
Till the foul crimes, done in my days of nature,
Are burn'd and purg'd away.² But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison house,
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young blood;
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres;³

Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine;⁴
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.—List, list, O, list!—
If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O, heavens!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.⁵

Ham. Murder?

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know it; that I, with wings as swift

As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And duller should'st at thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf,⁶

1 The first quarto reads:—

'Confin'd in flaming fire.'

The spirit being supposed to feel the same desires and appetites as when clothed in the flesh, the pains and punishments promised by the ancient moral teachers are often of a sensual nature. Chaucer in the Parsones Tale says, 'The misere of hell shal be in defaute of mete and drinke.'

'Thou shalt lye in frost and fire,

With sickness and hunger,' &c.

The Wyll of the Devyll, bk. l.

2 Gawin Douglas really changes the Platonic hell into 'the punction of the soules in purgatory.' Dr. Farmer thus compressed his account:—'It is a nedeful thyng to suffer painis and torment;—sum in the wyndis, sum under the water, and in the fire uthar sum: thus he many vices,

Contrakkit in the corpe be done away

And purgit.'

3 'How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted

In the distraction of this madding fever.'

Sh. Son. 106.

4 Vide note on The Comedy of Errors, Act iii. Sc. 2. It is perpetuine in the old editions in every instance. Perpetuine is the reading of the folio; the quartos read fearful. The irascible nature of the animal is noted in a curious passage of the Speculum Vitæ, by Richard Rolle, MS. i.—

'That beest is felle and sone is wrath,
And when he is grieved he wol do eacche;
For when he tence [angers] he launches out felly
The scharpe pinnes in his body.'

5 There is an allusion to the ghost in this play, or in an older one of the same name, by Lodge, in his Wit's Miserie and the World's Madness, 1596. He describes one of his Devils, by name Hate Virtue, as 'a fowle Would'st thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet, hear:

'Tis given out, that sleeping in mine orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark

Is by a forged process of my death
Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life,
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O, my prophetic soul! my uncle!

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,
(O, wicked wit, and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!) won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming virtuous queen—

O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!
From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline

Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven;
So lust, though to a radiant angel lik'd,
Will satiate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

But soft! methinks I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be:—Sleeping within mine orchard,
My custom always of the afternoon,

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon⁷ in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The lecherous distilment: whose effect

Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;

And with a sudden vigour, it doth posset
And curd, like eager⁸ droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine,

And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once despatch'd;⁹
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

lubber, who looks as pale as the wizard of the Ghost, which cried so miserably at the theatre, Hamlet, revenge!

6 The folio reads—rote itself, &c. In the Humorous Lieutenant, by Beaumont and Fletcher, we have:—

'This dull root pluck'd from Leather's flood.'

Uway has a similar thought:—

'—like the coarse and useless dunghill weed
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow.'

7 Quarto 1608—heart.

8 This is also a Latinism, securus, quiet, or unguarded.

9 Hebenon may probably be derived from hebenane, the oil of which, according to Pliny, dropped into the ears, disturbs the brain: and there is sufficient evidence that it was held poisonous by our ancestors. In Anton's Satire, 1606, we have:—

'The poison'd hebenane, whose cold juice doth kill.'

And Drayton, in his Baron's Wars, p. 51:—

'The poisoning hebenane and the mandrake dread.'
The French name comes near in sound, hebenane. It is, however, possible that poisonous qualities may have been ascribed to ebony; called ebene, and ebeno, by old English writers. Marlowe, in his Jew of Malta, speaking of noxious things, says:—

'—The blood of Hydra, Lerne's bane,
The juice of hebon, and coyus¹⁰ breath.'

The French word hebenon, which would be applied to any thing made from ebony, comes indeed very close to the hebenon of Shakespeare. In confirmation of my conjecture, I find the newly discovered quarto, 1604 reads—hebona.

10 In Sc. iv. we have eager air for sharp biting air
'Eger,' (says Barot,) sower, sharp, acidus, algre.

11 Quarto, 1608, deprived. I have elsewhere remarked that despatch and rid were synonymous in Shakespeare's time.

Unhousel'd,¹ disappointed,² unanell'd;³
 No reckoning made, but sent to my account
 With all my imperfections on my head;
 O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!
 If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
 Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
 A couch for luxury and damned incest.
 But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,
 Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
 Against thy mother aught; leave her to heaven,
 And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
 To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
 The glowworm shows the matin to be near,
 And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire.⁴
 Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me. [Exit.]

Ham. O, all you host of heaven! O, earth! What else?
 And shall I couple hell?—O, fie!—Hold, hold, my heart;

And you, my snows, grow not instant old,
 But bear me stiffly up!—Remember thee?
 Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
 In this distracted globe.⁵ Remember thee?
 Yea, from the tables of my memory
 I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
 All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
 That youth and observation copied there;
 And thy commandment all alone shall live
 Within the book and volume of my brain,
 Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, by heaven!
 O most pernicious woman!
 O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!
 My tables,—meet it is, I set it down,
 That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;
 At least, I am sure, it may be so in Denmark:

[Writing.]
 So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word:⁶
 It is, Adieu, adieu! remember me.
 I have sworn't.

Hor. [Within.] My lord, my lord,—

Mar. [Within.] Lord Hamlet,—

Hor. [Within.] Heaven secure him!

Ham. So be it!

Mar. [Within.] Ill, he, ho, my lord!

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come.⁷

Enter HORATIO AND MARCELLUS.

Mar. How is't, my noble lord?

Hor. What news, my lord?

Ham. O wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No;

You will reveal it.

¹ Unhousel'd is without having received the sacrament. Thus in Hormanni Vulgaris, 1519:—'He is departed without chrysis and housyll.' And in Speculum Vite, MS. it is a sin—

'To receive nat once in the years
Housel and schrifte with conscience clere.'

² Disappointed is the same as unappointed, and may be explained unprepared. A man well furnished for an enterprise is said to be well appointed. In Measure for Measure, Isabella addresses her brother, who is condemned to die, thus:—

'Therefore your best appointment make with speed.'

³ Unanell'd is without extreme unction. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, edit. 1824, p. 234:—'Then we began to put him in mind of Christ's passion; and sent for the abbot of the place to anell him.' The fifth sacrament is anointing of sick men, the which oyle is halowed of the byshop, and mynystred by prestes that ben of lawfull age, in grete peryll of dethe: in lyghtnes and abatyng of theyr sikenes, yf God wyll that they lyve; and in forgyveynge of their venyal synnes and releasyng of theyr payme, yf they shal dye.—The Festyval, fol. 171.

⁴ Uneffectual, i. e. shewing without heat. The use of to pale as a verb is rather unusual, but not peculiar to Shakespeare. It is to be found in Chaucer and our elder writers.

⁵ I. e. in this head confused with thought.

⁶ Thus in the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act iv. Sc. 1:—

And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
 And keep no tell-tale in his memory.'

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you, then; would heart of man once think it?

But you'll be secret,—

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's no'er a villain, dwelling in all Denmark,

But he's an arrant knave.

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave,

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right; you are in the right;
 And so, without more circumstance at all,
 I hold it fit, that we shake hands, and part:
 You, as your business, and desire, shall point you;—
 For every man hath business, and desire,
 Such as it is,—and, for my own poor part,
 Look you, I will go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words, my
 lord.

Ham. I am sorry they offend you, heartily; yes,
 Faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yea, by Saint Patrick,⁸ but there is, Ho ratio,

And much offence too. Touching this vision here,
 It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you:

For your desire to know what is between us,

O'ermaster it as you may. And now, good friends,

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,

Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord?

We will.
 Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-night.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Ha, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, true-penny?

Come on,—you hear this fellow in the cellarage,— Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,
 Swear by my sword.⁹

⁸ Tables or books, or registers for memorie of things, were then used by all ranks, and contained prepared leaves from which what was written with a silver style could easily be effaced.

⁹ The quarto 1603 has 'Now to the words.' By 'Now to my word,' Hamlet means now to my motto, my word of remembrance; or as it is expressed by King Richard III. word of courage. Steevens asserted that the allusion is to the military watchword. A word, motto, or motto, was any short sentence, such as is inscribed on a token, or under a device or coat of arms. It was a common phrase. See Ben Jonson's Works, by Mr. Gifford, vol. ii. p. 102.

¹⁰ This is the call which falconers use to their hawk in the air when they would have him come down to them. Thus in Tyro's Roaring Megge, 1598:—

'Yet ere I journie, Ile go to see the kye,
Come, come, bird, come: pox on you, you can mute.'

¹¹ Warburton has ingeniously defended Shakespeare for making the Danish prince swear by St. Patrick, by observing that the whole northern world had their learning from Ireland. It is, however, more probable that the poet seized the first popular imprecation that came to his mind, without regarding whether it suited the country or character of the person to whom he gave it.

¹² The custom of swearing by the sword, or rather by the cross at the upper end of it, is very ancient. In the Soliloquy of Roland, addressed to his sword, the cross which the guard and handle form is not forgotten:—'Capulo eburneo candidissimo, cruce aurea splendidi-ssime,' &c.—Turpinus de Gestis Carol. Mag. cap. 22.—The name of Jesus was not unfrequently inscribed on the handle. The allusions to this custom are very

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Hie et ubique! then we'll shift our ground:—
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword:
Swear by my sword,
Never to speak of this that you have heard.

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear by his word.

Ham. Well said, odd mole! canst work i' the earth so fast?

A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O, day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come;—

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy!

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on,—

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As, Well, well, we know;—or, We could, as if we would;—or, If we list to speak;—or, There be, as if they might;—

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me:—This not to do, swear;¹

So grace and mercy at your most need help you!

Ghost. [Beneath.] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit!² So, gentlemen, men,

With all my love I do commend me to you:

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do, to express his love and friending to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint;—O, cursed spite!

That ever I was born to set it right!

Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Room in Polonius' House. Enter POLONIUS and REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money, and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry
Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

Pol. Marry, well said: very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Danskers³ are in Paris;

And how, and who, what means, and where they keep, numerous in our old writers, and Warburton has noticed it in Bertholinus De Causis Contempt. Mortuorum Danos. Simon Maloli, in his very curious book Dierum Canicularium, mentions that the ancient Germans swore by the sword and death. Leonato, in The Winter's Tale, Act II. Sc. 3, says:—

‘Swear by this sword,
Thou wilt perform my bidding.’

1 The quarto 1604 reads: ‘this do swear.’ The construction of this passage is rather embarrassed, but the sense is sufficiently obvious without explanation.

2 ‘Shakespeare has riveted our attention to the ghost by a succession of forcible circumstances: by the previous report of the terrified sentinels,—by the solemnity of the hour at which the phantom walks,—by its martial stride and discriminating armour, visible only per incertam lunam, by the glimpses of the moon,—by its long taciturnity, by its preparation to speak, when interrupted by the morning cock,—by its mysterious reserve throughout its first scene with Hamlet,—by his resolute departure with it, and the subsequent anxiety of his attendants,—by its conducting him to a solitary angle of the platform, by its voice from beneath the earth,—and by its unexpected burst on us in the closet.

What company, at what expense; and finding, By this encompassment and drift of question, That they do know my son, come you more nearer Than your particular demands will touch it:

Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of him;

As thus,—I know his father, and his friends, And, in part, him;—Do you mark this, Reynaldo?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. And, in part, him;—but, you may say, not well:

But, if't be he I mean, he's very wild;

Addicted so and so;—and there put on him

What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank

As may dishonour him; take heed of that;

But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips,

As are companions noted and most known

To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing,⁴ swearing, quarrelling,

Drabbing:—You may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. 'Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him,

That he is open to incontinency;

That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so quaintly,

That they may seem the taints of liberty;

The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind;

A savageness⁵ in unreclaimed blood,

Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

Rey. Ay, my lord,

I would know that.

Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift;

And, I believe, it is a fetch of warrant:

You laying these slight sullies on my son,

As 'twere a thing a little soild⁶ i' the working,

Mark you,

Your party in converse, him you would sound,

Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breathe of, guilty, be assur'd,

He closes with you in this consequence;

Good sir, or so;⁴ or friend, or gentleman,—

According to the phrase, or the addition,

Of man, and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this,—He does—

What was I about to say?—By the mass, I was about to say something:—Where did I leave?

Rey. At, closes in the consequence.

Pol. At, closes in the consequence,—Ay marry;

He closes with you thus:—I know the gentleman;

I saw him yesterday, or t'other day,

Or then, or then; with such, or such; and, as you say,

There was he gaming; there o'ertook in his rouse;

There falling out at tennis: or, perchance,

I saw him enter such a house of sale,

(Vindicta, a brothel,) or so forth.

See you now;

Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth:

And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,

With windlasses, and with assays of bias,¹

By indirections find directions out;

So, by my former lecture and advice,

Shall you my son: You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you; fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord,—

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.²

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Rey. Well, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter OPHELIA.

Pol. Farewell!—How now, Ophelia? what's the matter?

Opk. O, my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. With what, in the name of heaven?

Opk. My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,

Lord Hamlet,—with his doublet all unbrac'd;

No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd;

Ungarter'd and down-gyved³ to his ankle;

Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;

And with a look so piteous in purport,

As if he had been loosed out of hell,

To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Opk. My lord, I do not know;

But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Opk. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arm;

And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,

He falls to such perusal of my face,

As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;

At last,—a little shaking of mine arm,

And thrice his head thus waving up and down,—

He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,

As it did seem to shatter all his bulk;⁴

And end his being: That done, he lets me go:

And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,

He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;

For out o' doors he went without their help,

And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me; I will go seek the king.

This is the very ecstasy of love;

Whose violent property foredoes⁵ itself,

And leads the will to desperate undertakings,

As oft as any passion under heaven,

That does afflict our natures. I am sorry,—

What, have you given him any hard words of late?

1 I. e. by tortuous devices and side essays. 'To assay, or rather essay, of the French word essayer, tentare,' says Barst.

2 I. e. in your own person, personally add your own observations of his conduct to these inquiries respecting him.

3 Hanging down like the loose cincture which confines the fessors or gyves round the ankles.

4 I. e. his breast. 'The bulks or breast of a man, therefore, is pocrine.'—Barst. Thus in King Richard III. Act I. Sc. 4, Clarence says:—

—but still the envious flood

Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth,—

But smother'd it within my panting bulk.⁷

Malone cites this, and the following passage, and yet explains it all his body:—

—her heart

Beating her bulk, that his head strikes withal.⁸

Rape of Lucrece.

5 To foredo and to undo were synonymous. Thus in Othello:—

'That either makes me or foredoes me quake.'

6 To quote, is to note, to mark. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece:—

'Yea, the illiterate

Will quote my loathed trespass in my looks.'

This word in the quarto is written coted, which was the old orthography of quoted.

Opk. No, my good lord; but, as you did command,

I did repel his letters, and denied

His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.

I am sorry, that with better heed and judgment, I had not quoted⁹ him: I fear'd, he did but trifle,

And meant to wreck thee; but, besetw my jealousy! It seems, it is as proper to our age

To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,

As it is common for the younger sort

To lack discretion.¹⁰ Come, go we to the king:

This must be known; which, being kept close, might

More grief to hide, than hate to utter love.¹¹

Come.¹² [Exit.]

SCENE II. A Room in the Castle. Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you, The need, we have to use you, did provoke

Our hasty sending. Something have you heard

Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,

Since not¹³ the exterior nor the inward man

Resembles that it was: What it should be,

More than his father's death, that thus hath put him

So much from the understanding of himself,

I cannot dream¹⁴ of: I entreat you both,

That,—being of so young days brought up with him:

And, since, so neighbour'd to his youth and ha-

mour,¹⁵

That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court

Some little time: so by your companies

To draw him on to pleasures; and to gather,

So much as from occasion you may glean,

Whether aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus,¹⁶

That, open'd, lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of a

you;

And, sure I am, two men there are not living,

To whom he more adheres. If it will please you

To show us so much gentleness,¹⁷ and good will,

As to expend your time with us awhile,

For the supply and profit of our hope,¹⁸

Your visitation shall receive such thanks

As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties

Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,¹⁹

Put your dread pleasures more into command

Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey

And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,²⁰

To lay our service freely at your feet,

To be commanded.

7 This is not the remark of a weak man. It is always the fault of a little mind made artful by long commerce with the world. The quartos read, 'By heaven, it is as proper,' &c.

8 This must be made known to the king, for (being kept secret,) the hiding Hamlet's love might occasion more mischief to us from him and the queen, than the uttering or revealing it will occasion hate and resentment from Hamlet. Johnson, whose explanation this is, attributes the obscurity to the poet's 'affectation of concluding the scene with a couplet.' There would surely have been more affection in deviating from the universally established custom.

9 Folio omits come.

10 Quarto—with nor.

11 Folio—doem.

12 Quarto—haviour.

13 This line is omitted in the folio.

14 Gentry for gentle courtesy. 'Gentlemanliness or gentry, kindness, or natural goodness. Generosity.'—Barst.

15 Supply and profit is aid and advantage.

16 I. e. over us.

17 There is no ground for the assertion that this metaphorical expression is derived from bending a bow. See Much Ado About Nothing, Act II. Sc. 2. Hamlet is a future scene says:—

'They fool me to the very top of my bent.'

I. e. to the utmost of my inclination or disposition.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz, and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern, and gentle Rosencrantz;

And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed son.—Go, some of you,
And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guilt. Heavens make our presence, and our practices,

Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Ay, Amen!

[Exeunt ROS. GUILT. and some Attendants.]

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord,
Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my soul;
Both to my God, and to my gracious king;
And I do think (or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail¹ of policy so sure
As it hath² us'd to do) that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit³ to that great feast.

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them
in. [Exit POLONIUS.]

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt, it is no other but the main;
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

King. Well, we shall sift him.—Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?
Pol. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies; which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack;
But, better look'd into, he truly found

It was against your highness: Whereat griev'd—
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand,⁴ sends out arrests

On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys;
Receives rebuke from Norway; and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle, never more

To give the assay⁵ of arms against your majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;⁶

And his commission, to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:

With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Gives a Paper.]

1 i. e. the trace or track. Vestigium. It is that vestige, whether of footmarks or scent, which enables the hunter to follow the game.

2 Follo—as I have.

3 Follo—news. By fruit dessert is meant.

4 i. e. deluded, imposed on, deceived by false appearances. It is used several times by Shakespeare; Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 1; Much Ado about Nothing, Act iv. Sc. 1; Cymbeline, Sc. ult.

5 Malone refers to the custom of taking the assay of wine, &c. before it was drunk by princes and other great persons, to ascertain that it was not poisoned. But the expression in the text has nothing to do with that custom. To give the assay of arms, is 'to attempt or essay anything in arms, or by force. Assaying arms.' I have to request the reader's patience for this superfluous note, but it is really sometimes impossible to resist exposing such mistakes.

6 That is, the king gave his nephew a feud or fee in land of that annual value. The quatros read three score thousand.

7 i. e. to inquire. 'Polonius is a man bred in courts, exercised in business, stored with observation, confident in his knowledge, proud of his eloquence, and declining into dotage. His mode of oratory is designed to ridicule the practice of those times, of prefaces that made no introduction, and of method that embarrassed rather than explained. This part of his character is accidental, it might please you to give quiet pass Through your dominions for this enterprise;

On such regards of safety, and allowance,
As therein are set down.

King.

It likes us well:

And, at our more consider'd time, we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.

Mean time, we thank you for your well-took labour:
Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home!

[Exeunt VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.]

Pol.

This business is well ended.

My liege, and madam, to expostulate¹

What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night, night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.

Therefore,—since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,²

I will be brief: Your noble son is mad:

Mad call I it: for, to define true madness,

What is't, but to be nothing else but mad:

But let that go.

Queen.

More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.

That he is mad, 'tis true: 'tis true, 'tis pity;

And pity 'tis, 'tis true: a foolish figure;

But farewell it, for I will use no art.

Mad let us grant him, then: and now remains,

That we find out the cause of this effect;

Or, rather say, the cause of this defect;

For this effect, defective, comes by cause:

Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.

Perpend.

I have a daughter; have, while she is mine;

Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,

Hath given me this: Now gather and surmise.

—To the celestial, and my soul's idol, the most beautified³ Ophelia,—

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified is a vile phrase; but you shall hear.—Thus:

In her excellent white bosom, these, &c.⁴

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.—

Doubt thou, the stars are fire; [Reads.]

Doubt, that the sun doth move:

Doubt truth to be a liar;

But never doubt I love.

O, dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best,

O, most best, believe it. Adieu.

Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet

This, in obedience, hath my daughter shown me:

And more above, hath his solicitings,

As they fell out by time, by means, and place,

All given to mine ear.

tal, the rest natural. Such a man is positive and confident, because he knows that his mind was once strong, and knows not that it is become weak. Such a man excels in general principles, but fails in particular application. He is knowing in retrospect, and ignorant in foresight. While he depends upon his memory, and can draw from his depositaries of knowledge, he utters weighty sentences, and gives useful counsel: but as the mind in its enfeebled state cannot be kept long busy and intent, the old man is subject to the dereliction of his faculties, he loses the order of his ideas, and entangles himself in his own thoughts, till he recover the leading principle, and fall into his former train. The idea of dotage encroaching upon wisdom, will solve all the phenomena of the character of Polonius.—Johnson.

8 Vile as Polonius esteems the phrase, from its equivocal meaning, Shakespeare has used it again in The Two Gentlemen of Verona :—

—Being you are beautified

With goodly shape, &c.

Nash, in his dedication of Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1694 :—'To the most beautified Lady Elizabeth Cary.' It is not uncommon in dedications and encomiastic verses of the poet's age.

9 See note on The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1. Formerly the word these was usually added at the end of the superscription of letters. The folio reads :—'These in her excellent white bosom these.

King. But how hath she Received his love?
Pol. What do you think of me?
King. As of a man faithful and honourable.
Pol. I fain would prove so. But what might you think,
 When I had seen this hot love on the wing,
 (As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
 Before my daughter told me,) what might you,
 Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
 If I had play'd the desk or table-book;
 Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb;
 Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
 What might you think? no, I went round to work,
 And my young mistress thus did I bespeak;
Lord Hamlet is a prince out of thy star;
This must not be: and then I precepts gave her,
 That she should lock herself from his resort,
 Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
 Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
 And he, repulsed, (a short tale to make,)
 Fell into a sadness; then into a fast;
 Thence to a watch; thence into a weakness;
 Thence to a lightness; and, by this declaration,
 Into the madness wherein now he raves,
 And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think 'tis this?
Queen. It may be, very likely.
Pol. Hath there been such a time, (I'd fain know that,)
 That I have positively said, 'Tis so,
 When it prov'd otherwise?
King. Not that I know.
Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise:
 [Pointing to his Head and Shoulder.
 If circumstances lead me, I will find
 Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
 Within the centre.
King. How may we try it further?
Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together,
 Here in the lobby.
Queen. So he does, indeed.
Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter to him:
 Be you and I behind an arras then;
 Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
 And be not from his reason fall'n thereon,

1 'N I had play'd the desk, or table-book;
 Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb.'
 That is 'If I had acted the part of depositary of their secret loves, or given my heart a hint to be mute about their passion.' The quartos read—'given my heart a winking,' and the modern editors follow this reading:
 I prefer the reading of the folio. 'Conscientia, a winking at; a sufferance: a feigning not to see or know.'
 The pleonasm, mute and dumb, is found in the Rape of Lucrece:—

2 And in my hearing be you mute and dumb.
 3 Plainly, roundly, without reserve. Polonius, in the third act, says, 'be round with him.'

3 This was changed to sphere in the 4to. 1633, and that reading is followed by the modern editions. 'Out of thy star,' is placed above thee by destiny. We have fortune's star in a former scene. Aumarie in King Richard III. says:—

'Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars.'
 4 'The ridicule of this character is here admirably sustained. He would not only be thought to have discovered this intrigue by his own sagacity, but to have remarked all the stages of Hamlet's disorder, from his sadness to his raving, as regularly as his physician could have done; when all the while the madness was only feigned. The humour of this is exquisite from a man who tells us, with a confidence peculiar to small politicians, that he could find—'

'Where truth was hid, though it were hid indeed
 Within the centre.'
Warburton.

5 I. e. accost, address him. See Twelfth Night, Act
 I. Sc. 2.

6 The old copies read—'being a good kissing carrion.' The emendation is Warburton's, who has accompanied it with a long comment, in which he endeavours to prove that Shakespeare intended the passage as a vindication of the ways of Providence in permitting evil to abound in the world. He observes that Shakespeare 'had an art not only of acquainting the audience with

Let me be no assistant for a state,
 But keep a farm, and carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter HAMLET, reading.
Queen. But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading.

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away;
 I'll board him presently:—O, give me leave.—
 [Exit KING, QUEEN, and Attendants.]

How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellently well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Howest, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes,

is to be one man poked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord.

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god, kissing carrion,—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i' the sun: conception is a blessing; but as your daughter may conceive,— friend, look to't.

Pol. How say you by that? [Aside.] Still harping on my daughter:—yet he knew me not at first;
 he said, I was a fishmonger: He is far gone, far gone: and, truly, in my youth I suffered much extremity for love: very near this. I'll speak to him again.—What do you read, my lord?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean the matter that you read, my lord.

Ham. Shanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have gray beards: that their faces are wrinkled; their eyes purging thick amber, and plum-tree gum; and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: All of which, sir, though I most powerfully and passionately believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for yourself, sir, should be as old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madness, yet there's method in it. [Aside.] Will you walk out of the air, my
 lord?

what his actors say, but what they think.' This emendation, and the moral comment on it, delighted Dr. Johnson, who says, 'that it almost sets the critic on a level with the author.' There was certainly much ingenuity in the emendation (which is unquestionably right) as well as in the argument, but the latter appears totally irrelevant and strained, and certainly was rather intended to show the skill and ingenuity of the critic than to raise the character of the poet, or display his true meaning. Warburton pointed out the same kind of expression in Cymbeline:—'Common-kissing Titan.' And Malone has adduced the following passage from the play of King Edward III. 1506, which Shakespeare had certainly seen:—

'The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint
 The loathed carrion that it seems to kiss.'

7 The folio reads—'Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceive.' Steevens thinks that there is a play upon words here, as in the first scene of King Lear:—

'Kent. I cannot conceive you, sir.
 'Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could.'

But the simple meaning may be, 'though conception in general be a blessing, yet as your daughter may chance to conceive that it may be a calamity, every thing being so corrupt or sinful in the world; he therefore counsels Polonius not to let his daughter 'walk
 i' the sun,' i. e. be too much exposed to the corrupting influence of the world. The abrupt transitions and obscurities of Hamlet's language are intended to give Polonius a notion of his insanity.

8 By 'the satirical rogue' Warburton will have it that Shakespeare means Juvenal, and refers to a passage on old age in his tenth satire. Dr. Farmer states that there was a translation of that satire by Sir John Beaumont, but is uncertain whether it was printed in Shakespeare's time. The defects of age were, however, a common topic of moral reflection.

Ham. Into my grave?

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air.—How proph-mant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him and my daughter.—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.¹

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal; except my life, except my life, except my life.

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools!

Enter ROSENCRANZE and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek the Lord Hamlet; there he is.

Ros. God save you, sir!

[To POLONIUS.
Exit POLONIUS.]

Guil. My honour'd lord!—

Ros. My most dear lord!—

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both?

Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

Guil. Happy, in that we are not overhappy;
On fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

Guil. Faith, her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet. What news?

Ros. None, my lord; but that the world is grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near: But your news is not true.² [Let me question more in particular:
What have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

Guil. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

Ros. Then is the world one.

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many counfines, wards, and dungeons; Denmark being one of the worst.

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then 'tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then your ambition makes it one;
'tis too narrow for your mind.

Ham. O God! I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space; were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.³

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of no airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow.

Ham. Then are our beggars' bodies; and our monarchs, and outstretch'd heroes, the beggars' shadows:⁴ Shall we to the court? For, by my fay,⁵

I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended.] But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore?⁶

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks;
but I thank you; and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear, a halfpenny. Were you not sent for?
Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation?
Come, come; deal justly with me: come, come;
nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Any thing—but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know, the good king and queen have sent for you.

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me con-jure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the concomitancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. What say you? [To GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. Nay, then I have an eye of you; [Aside.
—if you love me, hold not off.

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen smelt no feather. I have of late, (but wherefore, I know not,) lost all my mirth, forgone all custom of exercises: and, indeed, it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me to be a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave overhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted with golden fire,⁷ why, it appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is a man!
How noble in reason! how infinite in faculties! in form, and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, no nor woman neither; though, by your smiling, you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there is no such stuff in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, then, when I said,
Man delights not me?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten⁸ entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted⁹ them on the way;
and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king, shall be welcome;
his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil, and target: the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace: [the clown shall make those laugh, whose lungs are tickled o' the sere;¹⁰] and

7 To have an eye of any one is to have an inkling of his purpose, or to be aware of what he is about. It is still a common phrase. The first quarto has:—'Nay, then I see how the wind sets.'

8 'Look how the floor of heaven

Is thick infold with pains of bright gold.'

Merchant of Venice.

9 See Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 5.

10 To cote is to pass alongside, to pass by:—

'Marry, presently coted and outstript them.'

Return from Parnassus

'With that Hippomenes coted her.'

Golding's Old, Metam. II.

It was a familiar hunting term, and its origin from a cote, French, is obvious.

11 The first quarto reads:—'The clown shall make them laugh that are tickled in the lungs.' The words as they now stand are in the folio. The meaning appears to be, the clown shall make even those laugh whose lungs are tickled with a dry cough, or harkness,

1 This speech is abridged thus in the quartos:—

'I will leave him and my daughter. My lord,
I will take my leave of you.'

2 All within crochets is wanting in the quarto copies.

3 Shakespeare has accidentally inverted the expression of Pindar, that the state of humanity is the dream of a shadow. Thus also Sir John Davies:—

Man's life is but a dream, nay, less than so,

A shadow of a dream.

4 'If ambition is such an unsubstantial thing, then are our beggars (who at least can dream of greatness)
the only things of substance, and monarchs and heroes, though appearing to fill such mighty space with their ambition, but the shadows of the beggars' dreams.'
Johnson thought that Shakespeare designed 'a ridicule of those declamations against wealth and greatness, that seem to make happiness consist in poverty.'

5 See note on the Induction to Taming of a Shrew,

6 See note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act IV. Sc. 3.

the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for't.—What players are they?

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it, they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

Ros. I think, their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? Are they so followed?

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? Do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: But there is, sir, an airy² of children, little eyes,³ that cry out of the top of the question,⁴ and are most tyrannically clapped for't: these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages (so they call them,) that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are they children? who maintains them? how are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality,⁵ no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players (as it is most like, if their means are no better,) their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

Ros. Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin, to tarre⁶ them on to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is it possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his land too.⁸

Ham. It is not very strange: for my uncle is by his merriment shall convert even their coughing into laughter. The same expression occurs in Howard's Defensive against the Poyson of supposed Prophecies, 1620, folio:—'Discovering the moods and humours of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the seare.'

¹ In the first quarto copy this passage stands thus:—

'Ham. How comes it that they travel? do they grow rusty?'

'Guil. No, my lord, their reputation holds as it was wont.'

'Ham. How then?'

'Guil. Faith, my lord, novelty carries it away, for the principal publicke audience that came to them, are turned to private plays, and to the humour of children.'

By this we may understand what Hamlet means in saying 'their inhibition comes of the late innovation,' i. e. their prevention or hindrance comes from the late innovation of companies of juvenile performers, as the children of the revels, the children of St. Pauls, &c.—They have not relaxed in their endeavours to please, but this (brood) airy of little children are now the fashion, and have so abused the common stages as to deter many from frequenting them. Thus in Jack Drum's Entertainment, or Haquill and Catherine, 1601:

'I sawe the children of Powles last night,

And troth they pleased me prettie prettie well,

The apes in time will do it handseemly.

'Pia. I'faith,

I like the audience that frequenteth there

With much applause: a man shall not be chekt

With the stench of garlic, nor be peasted

To the barmy jacket of a beer-brewer.

'Bra. 'Tis a good gentle audience, and I hope

The boys will come one day in great request.'

² I. e. a brood.

³ I. e. young nestlings; properly young unsledged hawks.

⁴ Question is speech, conversation. The meaning may therefore be, they cry out on the top of their voice.

⁵ I. e. paid.

⁶ I. e. profession. Mr. Gifford has remarked that 'this word seems more peculiarly appropriated to the profession of a player by our old writers.' But in Measure for Measure, Angelo, when the Bawd and Tupster are brought before him inquires what quality they are of. In the Two Gentlemen of Verona, the King of Denmark, and those, that would make mouths⁷ at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, a hundred ducats a-piece, for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

[Flourish of Trumpets within.]

Guil. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come, then: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply¹⁰ with you in this garb; lest my extent to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than poore. You are welcome: but my uncle-father, and aunt-mother, are deceived.

Guil. In what, my dear lord?

Ham. I am but mad north-north west; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw.¹¹

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern;—and you too, —at each ear a hearer: that great baby, you see there, is not yet out of his swaddling-cloths.

Ros. Happily, he's the second time come to them; for, they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy, he comes to tell me of the players; mark it.—You say right, sir: 'o' Monday morning; 'twas then, indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you; Whom Roscius was an actor in Rome, —

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord

Ham. Buz, buz!¹²

Pol. Upon my honour, —

Ham. Then came each actor on his ass, —

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral [tragic-historical, tragic-comical-historical-pastoral,¹³] scene indivisible, or poem unlimited:—Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Outlaws speak of men of our quality. And Sir Thomas Eliot, in his Platonic Dialogue, 1534:—'According to the profession or qualitie, wherein men have opinion that wisdom doth rest, so ought to be the form of livinge, countenance, and gesture.' He is speaking of philosophers.

'No longer than they can sing,' i. e. no longer than they keep the voices of boys, and sing in the choir.

⁷ I. e. set them on, a phrase borrowed from the setting on a dog. Thus in King John:—

'Like a dog that is compelled to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.'

⁸ I. e. carry all the world before them: there is perhaps an allusion to the Globe theatre, the sign of which is said to have been Hercules carrying the globe.

⁹ First copy, 'mops and moes.' Folio, 'movers.'

¹⁰ 'Let me comply with you in this garb.' Hamlet, with his usual temerity, changed comply to compliment, and Steevens has contented himself with saying that he means 'to compliment with,' here and in a passage in the fifth act, 'He did comply with his dug before he sucked it,' where that sense would be even more absurd. He evidently never looked at the context. Hamlet has received his old schoolfellows with somewhat of the coldness of suspicion hitherto, but he now remembers that this is not courteous: He therefore rouses himself to give them a proper reception, 'Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands. Come then, the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me embrace you in this fashion: lest I should seem to give you a less courteous reception than I give the players, to whom I must behave with at least exterior politeness.' That to comply with was to embrace, will appear from the following passages in Herrick:—

—witty Ovid, by Whom Corinna sits, and doth comply,
With iv'ry wrists, his laureat head, and steep
His eye in dew of kisses, while he sleeps.

¹¹ The original form of this proverb was undoubtedly 'To know a hawk from a herneshaw,' that is, to know a hawk from the heron which it pursues. The corruption is said to be as old as the time of Shakespeare.

¹² Surely the commentators need not have expended their ingenuity on this common interjection.

¹³ The words within crochets are not in the quartos.

Plautus too light for the law of writ¹ and the liberty: these are the only men.

Ham. O Jephthah, Judge of Israel,—what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What a treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why—*One fair daughter, and no more, The which he loved passing well.*²

Pol. Still on my daughter.

[Aside.]

Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter, that I love passing well.

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows then, my lord?

Ham. Why, As by lot, God wot, and then, you know, It came to pass, As most like it was,—The first row of the pious chanson³ will show you more; for look, my abridgment⁴ comes.

Enter Four or Five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all:—I am glad to see thee well:—welcome, good friends.—O, old friend! Why, thy face is valenced⁵ since I saw thee last; Com'st thou to beard me in Denmark?—What! my young lady and mistress! By—lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven, than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine.⁶ Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.⁷—Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: We'll have a speech straight: Come, give us a taste of your quality; come, a passionate speech.

1 Play. What speech, my lord?

Ham. I heard three speak me a speech once,—but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once: for the play, I remember, pleased not the million.⁸ 'twas caviare to the general;⁹ but it was, (as I received it, and others, whose judgments, in such matters, cried in the top of mine), an excellent play; well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said, there were no sallets in the lines,¹⁰ to make the matter savoury: nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the author of affection;¹¹ but called it, an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 'twas Æneas' tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: If it live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see;—

The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,—
'tis not so; it begins with Pyrrhus.

The rugged Pyrrhus,—he, whose sable arms, Black as his purpose, did the night resemble, When he lay couched in the ominous horse, Hath now his dread and black complexion smeared With heraldry more dismal; head to foot Now he is total gules; horribly trick'd¹² With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons; Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous and a damned light To their lord's murder: Roasted in wrath, and fire, And thus o'er-sized with coagulate gore, With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old grandsire Priam seeks; So proceed you.

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken; with good accent, and good discretion.

1 Play. Anon he finds him

Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls, Repugnant to command: Unequal match'd, Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage, strikes wide; But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword The unnerv'd father falls. Then senseless Ilion, Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base; and with a hideous crash Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, lo! his sword Which was declining on the milky head Of reverend Priam, seem'd¹³ the air to stick: So as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood; And, like a neutral to his will and matter, Did nothing.

But, as we often see, against some storm, A silence in the heavens, the rack¹⁴ stand still

1 Writ for writing, a common abbreviation, which is not yet obsolete: we still say holy writ, for the sacred writings. I should not have noticed this, but that there have been editors who thought that we should read, 'the law of writ.' The quarto of 1603 reads, 'for the law hath writ.' The modern editions have pointed this passage in the following manner:—'Scene Indivisible, or poem unlimited; Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ, and the liberty, these are the only men.' I have adhered to the pointing of the quarto, because it appears to me that the law and the liberty of writing relates to Seneca and Plautus, and not to the players.

2 An imperfect copy of this ballad, of 'Jephthah, Judge of Israel,' was given to Dr. Percy by Steevens. See Reliques, ed. 1794, vol. i. p. 189. There is a more correct copy in Mr. Evan's Old Ballads, vol. i. p. 7, ed. 1810.

3 Pons chanson is the reading of the first folio; three of the quartos read pious; and the newly discovered quarto of 1603, 'the godly ballad'; which puts an end to controversy upon the subject. The first row is the first column. Every one is acquainted with the form of these old carols and ballads.

4 The folio reads, 'abridgements come.' My abridgment, i. e. who come to abridge my talk.

5 I. e. fringed with a beard.

6 A chopine, a kind of high shoe, or rather clog, worn by the Spanish and Italian ladies, and adopted at one time as a fashion by the English. Corlaie describes those worn by the Venetians as some of them 'half a yard high.' Bulwer, in his Artificial Changeling, complains of this fashion, as a monstrous affectation, 'wherein our ladies imitate the Venetian and Persian ladies.' That the fashion was originally of oriental origin seems very probable: there is a figure of a Turkish lady with chopines in Sandy's Travels; and another of a Venetian courtesan in the Habiti Andchi, &c. di Cesare Vecellio.

Chapin is the Spanish name; and Cobarruvias countenances honest Tom Corlaie's account of the preposterous height to which some ladies carried them. He tells an old tale of their being invented to prevent women's gadding, being first made of wood, and very heavy; and that the ingenuity of the women overcame this inconvenience by substituting cork. Though they are mentioned under the name of cioppini by those who saw them in use in Venice, the dictionaries record them under the title of zoccoli. Cobarruvias asserts that they were made of sapino (deal) in Italy, and not of cork; and hence their name. But the Spanish doctors differ about the etymology. Perhaps Hamlet may have some allusion to the boy having grown so as to fill the place of a tragedy heroine, and so assumed the colthurnus; which Puttenham described as 'high corked shoes, or pantofles, which they now call in Spaine and Italy shoppini.'

7 The old gold coin was thin and liable to crack. There was a ring or circle on it, within which the sovereign's head, &c. was placed; if the crack extended beyond this ring, it was rendered uncurrent: it was therefore a simile applied to any other debased or injured object. There is some humour in applying it to a cracked voice.

8 The quarto of 1603 vulgar.

9 'Twas caviare to the general.' Caviare is said to be the pickled roes of certain fish of the sturgeon kind, called in Italy caviare, and much used there and in other Catholic countries. Great quantities were prepared on the river Volga formerly. As a dish of high seasoning and peculiar flavour it was not relished by the many, i. e. the general. A fantastic fellow, described in Jonson's Cynthia's Revels, is said to be learning to eat macaroni, periwinkles, French beans, and caviare, and pretending to like them.

10 'There were no sallets in the lines.' The force of this phrase will appear from the following passage, cited by Steevens, from A Banquet of Jests, 1665:—'For junkete, joll, and for sallets, sales.' 'Sal, Sallet, a pleasant and merry word, that maketh folke to laugh, and sometimes pricketh.'—Baret.

11 I. e. impeach the author with affectation in his style. In Love's Labour's Lost, Nathaniel tells the Poet that his reasons have been 'witty without affectation.'

12 Gules, i. e. red, in the language of heraldry; to trick is to colour.

'With man's blood paint the ground gules, gules.'

Trimon of Athens.

13 The rack is the clouds, formed by vaporous exha-

*The bold winos speechless,¹ and the orb below
As hush as death : anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region : So, after Pyrrhus' pause,
A roused vengeance sets him new a work ;
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars's armour, Jarg'd for proof of arms,
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.—
Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune ! All you gods,
In general synd, take away your power :
Break all the spokes and felloes from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends !*

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your board.—

'Pr'ythee, say on :—He's for a jig,² or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps :—say on : come to Hecuba.

1 Play. But who, oh wo ! had seen the mobled³ queen—

Ham. The mobled queen ?

Pol. That's good ; mobled queen is good.

1 Play. Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames

*With bison's rheum ; a clout upon that head,
Where late the diadem stood ; and, for a robe,
About her lank and all o'er-tumed limbs,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up ;
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst fortune's state would treason have pro-nounc'd :*

*But if the gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs :*

The instant burst of clamour that she made,⁴

*(Unless things mortal move them not at all,
Would have made milch⁵ the burning eye of heaven,
And passion in the gods.*

Pol. Look, whether he has not turn'd his colour, and has tears in's eyes.⁶—'Pr'ythee, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well ; I'll have these speak out the rest of this soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestow'd ? Do you hear, let them be well used ; for they are the abstract, and brief chronicles of the time : After your death you were better have a bad epitaph, than their ill report while you live.

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

lation. Johnson has chosen this passage, and one in Dryden of the same import, to exemplify the word which he explains, 'the clouds as they are driven by the winds.'

1 'Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth.'

Venus and Adonis.

2 'He's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry.' Gigo, in Italian, was a fiddle, or crowd ; gigoro, a fiddler, or minstrel. Hence a jig, (first written gigge, though pronounced with a g soft, after the Italian), was a ballad, or ditty, sung to the fiddle. 'Frotola, a countrie gigge, or round, or country song or wanton verse.' As these itinerant minstrels proceeded, they made it a kind of farcical dialogue ; and at length it came to signify a short merry interlude :—'Farce, the jigg at the end of an entree, wherein some pretty knaverie is acted.' There are several of the old ballads and dialogues called Jigs in the Harleian Collection. Thus also, in the Fatal Contract, by Hemmings :—

'—we'll hear your jigs,

How is your ballad titled ?

3 The folio reads mobled, an evident error of the press, for mobled, which means muffled. The queen is represented with 'a clout upon her head, and a blanket wrapt round her, caught up in the alarm of fear.' We have the word in Ogilby's Fables :—

'Mobled nine days in my considering cap.'

And in Shirley's Gentleman of Venice :—

'The moon doth mobble up herself.'

4 Bison is blind. Bison rheum therefore is blinding tears.

5 'Would have made milch the burning eye of heaven.' By a hardy poetical license, this expression means, 'Would have filled with tears the burning eye of heaven.' To have 'made passion in the gods' would have been to move them to sympathy or compassion.

6 'The plays of Shakespeare, by their own power, must have given a different turn to acting, and almost

Ham. Odd's bodikin, man, much better : Use every man after his desert, and who shall 'scape whipping ? Use them after your own honour and dignity : The less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs.

(Exit POLONIUS, with some of the Players.)

Ham. Follow him, friends : we'll hear a play to-morrow.—Dost thou hear me, old friend ; can you play the murder of Gonzago ?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll have it to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down, and insert in't ? could you not ?

1 Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Very well.—Follow that lord ; and look you mock him not. [Exit Player.] My good friend [To Ros. and GUIL.] I'll leave you till night : you are welcome to Elsinore.

Ros. Good my lord !

(Exit ROSECRANKE and GUILDENSTERN.)

Ham. Ay, so, good bye to you :—Now I am alone.

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I !

Is it not monstrous, that this player here, But in a fiction, in a dream of passion, Could force his soul so to his own conceit, That from her working, all his visage wann'd ; Tears in his eyes, distraction in't aspect, A broken voice, and his whole function suiting With forms to his conceit ? And all for nothing ? For Hecuba !

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,

That he should weep for her ? What would he do, Had he the motive and the cue² for passion, That I have ? He would drown the stage with tears,

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech ; Make mad the guilty, and appeal the free,

Confound the ignorant, and amaze, indeed, The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal peak, Like John a-dreams,³ unprovoked of my cause, And can say nothing ; no, not for a king, Upon whose property, and most dear life, new-created the performers of his age. Mysteries, moralities, and interludes, afforded no materials for art to work on, no discriminations of character, or varieties of appropriated language. From tragedies like Cambyses, Tamburlaine, and Jeronymo, nature was wholly banished ; and the comedies of Gammer Gurton, Common Condysons, and The Old Wives' Tale, might have had justice done to them by the lowest order of human beings.

4 Sanctus his animal, mentisque capaxis alim, was wanting when the dramas of Shakespeare made their first appearance ; and to these we were certainly indebted for the excellent actors who could never have improved so long as their sensibilities were unawakened, their memories burthened only by pedantic or puritanical declamation, and their manners vulgarized by pleasantries of as low an origin.—Stevens.

7 The folio reads warw'd, which reading Stevens contended for : he was probably moved by a spirit of opposition ; for surely no one can doubt, who considers the context, that warw'd is the poet's word. Indeed, I question whether his visage warw'd, for his face suf'ficed, would have entered into the mind of a writer or the comprehension of a reader or auditor in Shakspeare's time.

8 I.e. the hint or prompt word, a technical phrase among players ; it is the word or sign given by the prompter for a player to enter on his part, to begin to speak or act. 'A prompter (says Florio,) one who keeps the books for the players, and teacheth them, or schollers their cue,' i.e. their part ; and this will explain why it is used in other places, as in Othello, for part :—

'Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it

Without a prompter.'

9 John a-dreams or John a-dragones, was a common term for any dreaming or drowsing simplicity. There is a story told of one John a-dragones, a Suffolk simpleton, who played the Devil in a stage play, in the Hundred Merry Tales. And there is another foolish character of that name in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra. Un- pregnant is not quickened or properly impressed with.

A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i' the threat,

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
Ha!

Why, I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal: Bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

Why, what an ass am I? This is most brave;
That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,
Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a cursing like a very drab,
A scullion!

Fie upon't! foh! About my brains! Humph! I have heard,

That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak
With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father,
Before mine uncle; I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent him⁵ to the quick; if he do blench,
I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen,
May be a devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
Out of my weakness, and my melancholy,
(As he is very potent with such spirits,)
Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative⁶ than this: The play's the thing,
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Room in the Castle. Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you, by no drift of conference⁷
Get from him why he puts on this confusion;
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess, he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

1 Defeat here signifies destruction. It was frequently used in the sense of undo or take away by our old writers. Thus Chapman in his Revenge for Honour—

'That he might meantime make a sure defeat
On our good aged father's life.'

2 Kindness is unnatural.

3 The first folio reads thus—

'Oh vengeance!

Who? What an ass am I? I sure this is most brave,
That I the sonne of the Deere murdered.'

The quarto of 1604 omits 'Oh vengeance,' and reads,
'a deere murdered.' The quarto of 1602, 'that I the son of my dear father.'

4 It seems extraordinary that Mason and Steevens could ever conceive that there was any allusion here to the nautical phrase, about ship. 'About my brains' is nothing more than 'to work my brains.' The common phrase, to go about a thing, is not yet obsolete. Fal-staff humours the equivocal use of the word in The Merry Wives of Windsor—'No quips now, Pistol, indeed I am in the waist two yards about; but I am now about no waste; I am about thrif.' Steevens's quotation from Heywood's Iron Age should have taught him better:—

'My brain about again! for thou hast found
New projects now to work on.'

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question; but, of our demands,
Most free in his reply.¹⁰

Queen.

Did you assay him

To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players
We o'er-raught¹¹ on the way: of these we told him;
And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it: They are about the court;
And, as I think, they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol.

'Tis most true:

And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties,
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.

Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANZ and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too:

For we have closely sent for Hamlet hither;

That he, as 'twere by accident, may here

Affront¹² Ophelia:

Her father, and myself (lawful espials,¹³)

Will so bestow ourselves, that, seeing, unseen,

We may of their encounter frankly judge;

And gather by him, as he is behav'd,

If't be the affliction of his love, or no,

That thus he suffers for.

Queen.

I shall obey you:

And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish,

That your good beauties be the happy cause

Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope, your virtues

Will bring him to his wonted way again,

To both your honours.

Oph.

Madam, I wish it may.

[Exit Queen.

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here:—Gracious, so
please you,

We will bestow¹⁴ ourselves:—Read on this book;

[To OPHELIA,

That show of such an exercise may colour

Your loneliness.¹⁵—We are off to blame in this,—

'Tis too much prov'd,—that with devotion's visage,

And pious action, we do sugar o'er

The devil himself.

King.

O, 'tis too true! how smart

A lash that speech doth give my conscience!

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plastering art,

Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,

Than is my deed to my most painted word:

O, heavy burden!

[Aside.

Pol. I hear him coming; let's withdraw, my lord.

[Exeunt King and POLONIUS.

5 A number of instances of the kind are collected by Thomas Heywood in his Apology for Actors.

6 To test was to probe, to search a wound.

7 To blench is to shrink or start. Vide Winter's Tale, Act I. Sc. 2.

8 I. e. more near, more immediately connected. The first quarto reads, 'I will have sounder proofs.'

9 Folio—circumstance.

10 'Blow to begin conversation, but free enough in answering our demands.'

11 I. e. reached, overtook.

12 I. e. meet her, encounter her; affrontare, Ital. See Winter's Tale, Act v. Sc. 1.

13 'Lawful espials;' that is lawful spies. 'An espial in warres, a scoutwaite, a beholder, a viewer.'—Baret.
See King Henry VI. Part I. Act I. Sc. 4. An *esp*y was also in use for a spy. The two words are only found in the folio.

14 'Bestow ourselves' is here used for hide or place ourselves. We have the word in the same sense in a subsequent scene:—

'Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,

We cannot get from him.'

We now use stow. One of our old dictionaries makes a discrimination between the acceptations of this word, thus:—'To bestow, or lay out; to bestow, or give; to bestow, or place.'

15 Quarto—loneliness.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:—Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer The stings and arrows of outrageous fortune; Or to take arms against a sea of troubles, And, by opposing, end them?—To die,—to sleep,—No more;—and, by a sleep, to say we end The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;—To sleep! perchance to dream;—ay, there's the rub; For in that sleep of death what dreams may come, When we have shuffled off this mortal coil, Must give us pause: There's the respect,¹ That makes calamity of so long life: For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,² The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,³ The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay, The insolence of office, and the spurs That patient merit of the unworthy takes, When he himself might his quietus make With a bare bodkin⁴—who would fardels⁵ bear, To grunt⁶ and sweat under a weary life; But that the dread of something after death,—The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn⁷ No traveller returns,—puzzles the will; And makes us rather bear those ills we have, Than fly to others that we know not of? Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;⁸ And thus the native hue of resolution Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought; And enterprizes of great pitch⁹ and moment, With this regard, their currents turn awry,¹⁰ And lose the name of action.—Soft you, now! The fair Ophelia:—Nymph, in thy orisons¹¹ Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thank you; well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I;
I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well, you did.

And, with them, words of so sweet breath compos'd
As made the things more rich: their perfume lost,
Take these again; for to the noble mind,
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

1 'This mortal coil'; that is, 'the tumult and bustle of this life.' It is remarkable that under garbustio, which has the same meaning in Italian as our coil, Florio has 'a pecke of troubles'; of which Shakespeare's 'sea of troubles' is only an aggrandized idea.

2 i.e. the consideration. This is Shakespeare's most usual sense of the word.

3 Time, for the time, is a very usual expression with our old writers. Thus in Ben Jonson's Every Man Out of his Humour:

'Oh, how I hate the monstruousness of time.'

4 Folio—'the poor man's contumely.'

5 The allusion is to the term quietus est, used in settling accounts at exchequer audits. Thus Webster in his Dutchesse of Malfy:

'You had the trick in audit time to be sick,

'Till I had sign'd your quietus.'

And, more appositely, in Sir Thomas Overbury's character of a Franklin:—'Lastly to end him, he cares not when his end comes; he needs not feare his audit, for his quietus is in heaven.'

6 'Bodkin was the ancient term for a small dagger.'

7 Packs, burdens.

8 Though to grunt has been degraded in modern language, it appears to have conveyed no vulgar or low image to the ear of our ancestors, as many quotations from the old translations of the classics would show. 'Loke that the places about thee be so in silence that thy corage and mynde gronte nor groudge nat.' Paynel's Translation of Erasmus de Contempt. Mundi. The fact seems to be, that to groan and to grunt were convertible terms. 'Swyne wode for love groyneth.'—Horman's Vulgaria. And Chaucer in The Monk's Tale:—
'But never gront he at no stroke but on.'

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?

Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?

Oph. What means your lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.¹⁴

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a passion, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it: I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery; Why would'st thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better, my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck, than I have thoughts to put them in;¹⁵ imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in; What should such fellows as I do crawling between earth and heaven! We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us: Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father.

Oph. At home, my lord.

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him; that he may play the fool no where!¹⁶ but in his own house. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry; Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny. Get thee to a nunnery; farewell!¹⁷ Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. Heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings¹⁸ too, well enough; God hath given you one face, and you make yourselves another: you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nickname God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance;¹⁹ Go to; I'll no more of it: it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exit HAMLET.]

9 Mr. Douce points out the following passages in Cranmer's Bible, which may have been in Shakespeare's mind:—'Afore I goe thither, from whence I shall not turne againe, even to the lande of darkness, and shadowe of death; yea into that darke cloudie lande and deadly shadow whereas is no order, but terrible feare as in the darkness.'—Job, c. x. 'The way that I went goe is at hande, but whence I shall not turne againe.'—Job, c. xvi.

'Weep not for Mortimer,

That scorns the world, and as a traveller

Goes to discover countries yet unknown.'

Marlowe's King Edward II.

10 'I'll not meddle with it,—it makes a man a coward'

—King Richard III Act i. Sc. 4. And again:—

'O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me.'

Id. Act. v. Sc. 2.

11 Quartos—pitck.

12 Folio—owsey.

13 'This is a touch of nature. Hamlet, at the sight of Ophelia, does not immediately recollect that he is to personate madness, but makes an address grave and solemn, such as the foregoing meditation excited in his thoughts.'—Johnson.

14 i.e. 'your honesty should not admit your beauty to any discourse with her.' The first quarto reads:—'Your beauty should admit no discourse to your honesty.' That of 1604:—'You should admit no discourse to your beauty.'

15 'Than I have thoughts to put them in.' To put 'a thing into thought' is 'to think on it.'

16 Folio—way.

17 Folio—Go, farewell.

18 The folio, for paintings, has prattlings; and for face has pace.

19 'You mistake by wanton affectation, and pretend to mistake by ignorance.'

Opt. O, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue,
sword:

The expectancy and rose of the fair state,
The glass of fashion and the mould of form,²⁰
The observ'd of all observers! quite, quite down!
And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune! and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy:²¹ O, wo is me!
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter King and POLONIUS.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend;
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. There's something in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood;
And, I do doubt, the hatch, and the disclose,²²
Will be some danger: Which for to prevent,
I have, in quick determination,
Thus set it down; He shall with speed to England,
For the demand of our neglected tribute:
Haply, the seas, and countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something-settled matter in his heart;
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well: But yet, I do believe,
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My Lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his grief; let her be round²³ with him;
And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference: If she find him not,
To England send him; or confine him, where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so:
Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Hall in the same. Enter HAMLET, and certain Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lief the town crier spoke my lines.²⁴ Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and (as I may say) whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance, that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings:²⁵ who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb shows, and noise: I would have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant;²⁶ it out-herods Herod: 'Pray you, avoid it.

I Play. I warrant your honour.

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action: with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first, and now, was, and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, his form and pressure.²⁷ Now this, overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskillful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure of which one, must in your allowance,²⁸ o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. O, there be players, that I have seen play,—and heard others praise, and that highly,—not to speak it profanely, that, neither having the accent of Christians, nor the gait of Christian, Pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

I Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us.

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns, speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them, that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too; though, in the mean time, some necessary question²⁹ of the play be then to be considered: that's villanous; and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—

[Exeunt Players.]

Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

How now, my lord? will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste.—

[Exit POLONIUS.]

Will you two help to hasten them?

Both. Ay, my lord.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.]

Ham. What, ho; Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as your service
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.

standing gentlemen of the ground; and Shirley, 'grave understanders.'

²⁰ 'No shows, no dance, and what you most delight in, Grave understanders, here's no target-fighting.' Sir W. Cornwallis calls the ignorant earthlings. 'I have not been ashamed to adventure mine ears with a ballad-singer,—the profit to see earthlings satisfied with such coarse stuff.' kc.—Essay 15. ed. 1623.

²¹ Termagant is the name given in old romances to the tempestuous god of the Saracens. He is usually joined with Mahomed or Mahomet. Hall mentions him in his first Satire:—

'Nor fright the reader with the Pagan vaunt
Of mighty Mahound and great Termagant.'

²² Pressure is impression, resemblance.

²³ I. e. approval, estimation. Vide King Lear, Act II. Sc. 4.

²⁴ The quarto, 1603, 'Point in the play then to be observed.' Afterwards is added, 'And then you have some again that keeps one suit of jests, as a man is known by one suit of apparel; and gentlemen quotes his jests down in their tables before they come to the play, as thus:—Cannot you stay till I eat my porridge; and you owe me a quarter's wages; and your beer is sour; and blabbering with his lips: And thus keeping in his cinque a pace of jests; when, God knows, the warme Clown cannot make a jest unless by chance, as the blind man catcheth a hare: Masters, tell him of it.'—This passage was evidently levelled at the particular folly of some injudicious player contemporary with the poet.

²⁰ 'Speculum consuetudinis.'—Cicero. The model by whom all endeavoured to form themselves.

²¹ Quarto.—time.

²² Ecstasy is alienation of the mind. Vide Tempest, Act III. Sc. 3.

²³ To disclose was the ancient term for hatching birds of any kind; from the Fr. exclos, and that from the Lat. excludere. I believe to exclude is now the technical term. Thus in the Boke of St. Albans, ed. 1496:—'For to speke of hawks; fyrst they ben egges, and afterwards they ben disclosed hawks.' And 'comynly gosshawks ben discloyd as soone as the choughs.'

²⁴ See note on Act II. Sc. 2.

²⁵ 'Have you never seen a stalking stamping player, that will raise a tempest with his tongue, and thunder with his heels.'—The Puritan, a Comedy. The first quarto has, 'I'd rather hear a town-bull bellow, than such a fellow speak my lines.'

²⁶ The first quarto reads, 'of the ignorant.' Our ancient theatres were far from the commodious elegant structures which later times have seen. The pit was, truly, what its name denotes, an unfloored space in the area of the house, sunk considerably beneath the level of the stage; and, by ancient representations, one may judge that it was necessary to elevate the head very much to get a view of the performance. Hence this part of the audience were called groundlings. Jonson, in the Induction to Bartholomew Fair, calls them 'the under-

Hor. O, my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter: For what advancement may I hope from thee, That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits, To feed, and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp; And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear? Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice, And could of men distinguish her election, She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing; A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards Hast ta'en with equal thanks; and bless'd are those, Whose blood and judgment are so well co-mingled,¹ That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger To sound what stop she please: Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee.—Something too much of this.— There is a play to-night before the king; One scene of it comes near the circumstance, Which I have told thee of my father's death. I pry thee, when thou seest that act afoot, Even with the very comment of thy soul Observe my uncle: if his occulted guilt Do not itself unkenel in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen; And my imaginations are as foul As Vulcan's stithy.² Give him heedful note: For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;³ And, after, we will both our judgments join In censure⁴ of his seeming.

Hor. Well, my lord: If he steal aught, the whilst this play is playing, And escape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They are coming to the play; I must be killer: Get you a place.

Danish March. A Flourish. Enter King, Queen, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith; of the chameleon's dish: I eat the air, promise-crann'd; You cannot feed capons so.

King. I have nothing with this answer, Hamlet; these words are not mine.

³ Quarto, 1604.—'co-medled.'

⁴ Vulcan's stithy is Vulcan's workshop or smoky; still being an anvil.

⁵ Here the first quarto has:—

'And if he do not blench and change at that, It is a damned ghost that we have seen; Horatio, have a care, observe him well.'

Hor. My lord, mine eyes shall still be on his face, And not the smallest alteration

That shall appear in him, but I shall note it.'

6 I. e. judgment, opinion.

⁷ A Latin play on the subject of Caesar's death was performed at Christ Church, in Oxford, in 1598. Malone thinks that there was an English play on the same subject, previous to Shakespeare's. Caesar was killed in Pompey's portico, and not in the Capitol: but the error is at least as old as Chaucer's time.

⁸ This Julius to the Capitole went Upon a day, that he was wont to go, And in the Capitole anon him hence This false Brutus and his other sons And micked him with bodkins anon With many a wound, &c.

Chaucer's Monkes Tale, v. 1431. I have cited this passage to show that Chaucer uses bodkin for dagger, like Shakespeare.

⁹ I. e. 'they wait upon your sufferances or will.'—Johnson would have changed the word to pleasure; but Shakespeare has again used it in a similar sense in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act III. Sc. 1.—

Go.

And think my patience more than thy desert Is privilege for thy departure hence.'

Ham. No, nor mine now. My lord,—you played once in the university, you say? [To POLONIUS.]

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Caesar: I was killed '7 the Capitol; Brutus killed me.⁷

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so capital a calf there.—Be the players ready?

Res. Ay, my lord; they stay⁸ upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother, here's metal more attractive.

Pol. O, ho! do you mark that? [To the King.]

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

[Lying down at OPHELIA'S Feet.]

Op. No, my lord.

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Op. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think, I meant contrary⁹ matters?

Op. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Op. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Op. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I?

Op. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O! your only jig-maker.¹⁰ What should a man do, but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within these two hours.

Op. Nay, 'tis twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables.¹¹ O, heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: But, by'r-lady, he must build churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse;¹² whose epitaph is, For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.

Trumpets sound. The Dumb Show¹³ follows.

Enter a King and a Queen, very lovingly; the Queen embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down upon a bank of flowers; she, seeing him asleep, leaves him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the King's ears, and exits. The Queen returns: finds the King dead, and makes pas-

⁹ This is the reading of the quarto 1603. The quarto 1604 and the folio read country.

¹¹ I. e. a dress ornamented with the rich fur of that name, said to be the skin of the sable martin. By the statute of apparel, 24 Hen. VIII. c. 13, it is ordained that none under the degree of an earl may use sables.—Bishop, in his Blossoms, 1577, speaking of extravagance, says, that a thousand ducies were sometimes given for a moor of sables. But Hamlet meant to use the word equivocally.

¹³ This dumb show appears to be superfluous, and even incongruous; for as the murder is there circumstantially represented, the King ought to have been struck with it then, without waiting for the dialogue.

summate action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner woos the Queen with gifts; she seems loath and unwilling awhile; but, in the end, accepts his love. [Exit.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is mitching malichio; it means mischief.

Oph. Belike, this show imports the argument of the play.

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this follow: the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: Be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.²

Oph. You are naught, you are naught; I'll mark the play.

Pro. *For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg your hearing patiently.*

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?

Oph. 'Tis brief, my lord,—

Ham. As woman's love.

Enter a King and a Queen.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phoebus' cart gone round

Neptune's salt wash, and Tellus' orb'd ground;
And thirty dozen moons, with borrow'd sheen,
About the world have times twelve thirties been;
Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands.

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er, ere love be done!
But, wo is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer, and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:
For women fear too much, even as they love;³
And women's fear and love hold quantity;
In neither ought, or in extremity.

Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know;
And as my love is sir'd,⁴ my fear is so.
Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.

P. King. 'Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;

My operant⁵ powers their functions leave to do;
And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
Honour'd, belov'd; and, haply, one as kind
For husband shalt thou—

P. Queen. O, confound the rest!

1 Mitching malichio is lurking mischief, or evil doing. To much, for to skulk, to lurk, was an old English verb in common use in Shakespeare's time; and malicho or malcheo, misdeed, he has borrowed from the Spanish. Many stray words of Spanish and Italian were then affectually used in common conversation, as we have seen French used in more recent times. The quarto spells the word mallice. Our ancestors were not particular in orthography, and often spelt according to the ear.

2 The conversation with Ophelia, as Steevens remarks, cannot fail to disgust every modern reader. It was, no doubt, such as was current in society in that age, which had not yet learnt to throw a veil of decency over corrupt manners. Yet still I think that such discourse would not have been put into the mouth of Hamlet by the poet, had he not meant it to mark the feigned madness of Hamlet the stronger from his inconsistency with his character as a prince and polished gentleman.

3 Cart, car, or chariot, were used indiscriminately for any carriage formerly. Mr. Todd has adduced the following passage from the Comical History of Alphonsus, by R. G. 1599 which, he thinks, Shakespeare meant to burlesque:—

'Thrice ten times Phoebus with his golden beames
Hath compassed the circle of the skie;
Thrice ten times Ceres hath her workmen hir'd,
And fill'd her barnes with fruitfull crops of corne,
Since first in priesthood I did lead my life.'

Such love must needs be treason in my breast;
In second husband let me be accurst!
None wed the second, but who kill'd the first.

Ham. That's wormwood.

P. Queen. The instances,⁶ that second marriage move,

Are base respects of thrift, but none of love;
A second time I kill my husband dead,
When second husband kisses me in bed.

P. King. I do believe, you think what now you speak;

But, what we do determine oft we break.

Purpose is but the slave to memory;⁷
Of violent birth, but poor validity:

Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree;
But fall, unshaken, when they mellow be.

Most necessary 'tis, that we forget

To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:

What to ourselves in passion we propose,

The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

The violence of either grief or joy

Their own enactures⁸ with themselves destroy;

Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;

Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.

This world is not for aye; nor 'tis not strange,

That even our loves should with our fortunes change;

For 'tis a question left us yet to prove,

Whether love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

The great man down, you mark his favourite flies;

The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.

And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:

For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;

And who in want a hollow friend doth try,

Directly seasons⁹ him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun,—

Our wills and fates, do so contrary run,

That our devices still are overthrown;

Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own:

So think thou wilt no second husband wed;

But die thy thoughts, when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food, nor heaven light!

Sport and repose lock from me, day, and night!

To desperation turn my trust and hope!

An anchor's¹⁰ cheer in prison be my scope!

Each opposite, that blinks the face of joy,

Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!

Both here, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,

Il, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now, — 'To Oph.

P. King. 'Tis deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here a while;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile

The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.]

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;

And never come mischance between us twain! [Exit.]

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?

Queen. The lady doth protest too much, methinks.

4 This line is omitted in the folio. There appears to have been a line omitted in the quarto which should have read thus.

5 Cleopatra expresses herself much in the same manner for the loss of Antony:—

'—our des of sorrow
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.'

6 I. e. active.
7 Instances are motives. See note on King Richard III. Act III. Sc. 2.

8 'But thought's the slave of life.'—King Henry IV. Part I.

9 I. e. their own determinations, what they enact.

10 See note on Act I. Sc. 2. 'This quaint phrase (says Steevens), infects almost every ancient English composition.' Why infects? Surely it is as forcible and intelligible as many other metaphorical expressions retained in the language. It has been remarked that our ancestors were much better judges of the powers of language than we are. The Latin writers did not scruple to apply their verb condire in the same manner.

11 Anchor's for anchors's. Thus in Hall's second Saure, b. iv. —

'*Sit seven years pining in an anchor's chayne,
To win some patched shreds of minivere.*'

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.
King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?
Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest; no offence in't the word.
King. What do you call the play?
Ham. The mouse-trap.¹ Marry, how? Tropically.² This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke's name,³ his wife, Baptista: you shall see anon; 'tis a knavish piece of work: But what of that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.
Op. You are as good as a chorus,⁴ my lord.
Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.
Op. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.
Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge.
Op. Still better, and worse.
Ham. So you mistake⁵ your husbands.—Begin, sinner;—leave thy damnable faces, and begin. Come;—

— The croaking raven
Doth bellow for revenge.
Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;
Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds⁶ collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural magic and dire property,
On wholesome life usurp immediately.

[Pours the Poison into the Sleeper's Ear.
Ham. He poisons him i' the garden for his estate. His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and written in very choice Italian: you shall see anon, how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Op. The king rises.
Ham. What! frighted with false fire!
Queen. How fares my lord?
Pol. Give o'er the play.
King. Give me some light:—away!
Pol. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all but HAMLET and HORATIO.

1 'The mouse-trap,' i. e.

'— the thing

In which he'll catch the conscience of the king.'

2 First quarto—tropically. It is evident that a pun was intended.

3 'Gonzago is the duke's name, his wife, Baptista'; all the old copies read thus. Yet in the dumb show we have, 'Enter a King and Queen'; and at the end of this speech, 'Lucianus, nephew to the King.' This seeming inconsistency, however, may be reconciled. Though the Interlude is the image of the murder of the duke of Vienna, or in other words, founded upon that story, the poet might make the principal person in his fable a king. Baptista is never used singly by the Italians, being uniformly compounded with Giam and Giovanni. It is needless to remark that it is always the name of a man.

4 The use to which Shakespeare put the chorus may be seen in King Henry V. Every motion or puppet-show was accompanied by an interpreter or showman. Thus in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—

O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet!

Now will he interpret for her.'

5 The first quarto—'So you must take your husband.' Hamlet puns upon the word mistake: 'So you mis-take or take your husbands amiss for better and worse.' The word was often thus misused for any thing done wrongfully, and even for prying stealing. In one of Bastard's Epigrams, 1608, cited by Steevens—— none that seeth her face and making,

Will judge her soul'n but by mistaking.'

6 'Midnight weeds.' Thus in Macbeth:—

'Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark.'

7 See note on As You Like It, Act ii. Sc. i.

8 To turn Turk, was a familiar phrase for any violent change in condition or character.

9 'Provincial roses, on my razed shoes.' Provincial was erroneously changed to Provencal, at the suggestion of Varon. Mr. Douce rectified the error by show-

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,⁷

The hart ungalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleep;

Thus runs the world away.—

Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers (if one rest of my fortunes turn Turk⁸ with me,) with two provincial roses on my razed⁹ shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry¹⁰ of players, sir?

Hor. Half a share.¹¹

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,

This realm dismantled was

Of Jove himself; and now reigns here

A very very—peacock.¹²

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O, good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning,—

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha!—come, some music; come, the recorders.¹³—

For if the king like not the comedy,

Why, then, belike,—he likes it not, perdy.¹⁴

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Come, some music.

Guil. Good, my lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir,—

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is, in his retirement, marvellous distemp'ered.

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord, with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer, to signify this to the doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation, would, perhaps, plunge him into more choler.

Guil. Good, my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wickly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir:—pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me ling that the Provincial roses took their name from Provins, in Lower Brile, and not from Provence. Razed shoes are most probably embroidered shoes. The quarto reads, rac'd. To race, or rase, was to stripe.

10 'A cry of players.' It was usual to call a pack of hounds a cry; from the French meute de chiens: it is here humorously applied to a troop or company of players. It is used again in Coriolanus: Menenius says to the citizens, 'you have made good work, you and your cry.' In the very curious catalogue of The Companies of Beasts, given in The Booke of St. Albans, many equally singular terms may be found, which seem to have exercised the wit and ingenuity of our ancestors; as a thrave of throbbers, a scull or school of monks, &c.

11 The players were paid not by salaries, but by shares or portions of the profit, according to merit. See Malone's Account of the Ancient Theatres, passim.

12 'A very, very—peacock.' The old copies read paiock, and paioche. The peacock was as proverbially used for a proud fool as the laping for a silly one. 'Pavoneggiare, to court it, to brave it, to peacockise it, to wantonise it, to get up and down fondly, gazing upon himself as a peacock does.'—Florio, Ital. Dict. 1590. Theobald proposed to read paddock; and in the last scene, Hamlet bestows this opprobrious name upon the king. Mr. Blakeway has suggested that we might read puttock, which means a base degenerate hawk, a kiss; which Shakespeare does indeed contrast with the eagle in Cymbeline, Act i. Sc. 2:—

'I chose an eagle, and did avoid a puttock.'

13 'The recorders.' See note on a Midsummer Night's Dream, Act i. Sc. i. It is difficult to settle exactly the form of this instrument: old writers in general make no distinction between a flute, a pipe, and a recorder; but Hawkins has shown clearly, from a passage in Lord Bacon's Natural History, that the flute and the recorder were distinct instruments.

14 Perdy is a corruption of the French par Dieu

a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment: if not, your pardon, and my return shall be the end of my business.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased: But, sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command; or, rather, as you say, my mother: therefore no more, but to the matter; My mother, you say,—

Ros. Then thus she says: Your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.

Ham. O, wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother!—But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? impart.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. And do still, by those pickers and stealers.

Ros. Good, my lord, what is your cause of distemper? you do, surely, but bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but While the grass grows,—the proverb is something musty.

Enter the Players, with Recorders.

O, the Recorders:—let me see one.—To withdraw with you.—Why do you go about to recover the wind of me,¹ as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.²

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easy as lying: govern these ventages³ with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me? You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass: and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think, I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.

1 'To withdraw with you.' Malone added here a stage direction [Taking Guild. aside.] Steevens thinks it an answer to a motion Guildenstern had used, for Hamlet to withdraw with him. I think that it means no more than 'to draw back with you,' to leave that scent or trail. It is a hunting term, like that which follows.

2 'To recover the wind of me.' This is a term which has been left unexplained. It is borrowed from hunting, as the context shows; and means, to take advantage of the animal pursued, by getting to the windward of it, that it may not scent its pursuers. 'Observe how the wind is, that you may set the net so as the hare and wind may come together; if the wind be sideways it may do well enough, but never if it blow over the net into the hare's face, for he will scent both it and you at a distance.'—Gentleman's Recreation.

3 Hamlet may say with propriety, 'I do not well understand that.' Perhaps Guildenstern means, 'If my duty to the king makes me too bold, my love to you makes me importunate even to rudeness.'

4 The ventages are the holes of the pipe. The stops means the mode of stopping those ventages to produce

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir!

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud, that's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks, it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or, like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by.—They fool me to the top of my bent.—I will come by and by.

Pol. I will say so.

[Exit POLONIUS.

Ham. By and by is easily said.—Leave me, friends.

[Exeunt Ros. GUIL. ROS. &c.

'Tis now the very witching time of night; When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out Contagion to this world: Now could I drink hot blood,

And do such bitter business as the day⁴ Would quake to look on. Soft; now to my mother,—O, heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom; Let me be cruel, not unnatural:

I will speak daggers to her, but use none; My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites: How in my words soever she be shent,⁵

To give them seals, never, my soul, consent! [Exit.

SCENE III. A Room in the same. Enter King, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not: nor stands it safe with us, To let his madness range. Therefore, prepare you; I your commission will forthwith despatch, And he to England shall along with you: The terms of our estate may not endure Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow Out of his lunacies.

Guil. We will ourselves provide: Most holy and religious fear it is, To keep those many many bodies safe, That live, and feed, upon your majesty.

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound, With all the strength and armour of the mind, To keep itself from 'noyance'; but much more That spirit, upon whose weal⁶ depend and rest The lives of many. The cease of majesty Dies not alone: but, like a gulf, doth draw What's near it, with it: it is a massy wheel, Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount, To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things Are mortis'd and adjoin'd; which, when it falls, Each small annexment, petty consequence, Attends the boist'rous ruin. Never alone Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;

For we will fetters put upon⁷ this fear, Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. Guil. We will haste us.

[Exeunt ROSENCRANTZ and GUIL.

notes. Malone has made it the 'sounds produced' Thus in King Henry V. Prologue:—

'Rumour is a pipe—

And of so easy and so plain a stop.'

5 See note on Act II. Sc. 2.

6 The quarto reads:—

'And do such business as the bitter day,' &c.

7 'They are pestilent fellows, they speak nothing but bodkins.'—Return from Parnassus. In the Anul-

laria of Plautus a phrase not less singular occurs:—

'Me' Quia mihi miseri cerebrum excutunt,

Tua dicta soror: lapides loqueris.' Act II. Sc. 1.

8 To shend is to injure, whether by reproach, blows, or otherwise. Shakespeare generally uses shent for reproved, threatened with angry words. 'To give his words seals' is therefore to carry his punishment beyond reproof. The allusion is to the sealing a deed to render it effective. The quarto of 1603:—

'I will speak daggers; those sharp words being spent, To do her wrong my soul shall never consent.'

9 Folio reads 'spirits.' 10 Quarto—'about.'

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet.
Behind the arras¹ I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant, she'll tax him
home;
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet, that some more audience, than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial,² should o'erhear
The speech, of vantage.³ Fare you well, my liege;
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit POLONIUS.]

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon't,
A brother's murder!—Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;⁴
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens,
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer, but this two-fold force,—
To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!—
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: But 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature: and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
O, wretched state! O, bosom, black as death!
O, limed⁵ soul; that, struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels, make assay!
Bow, stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well!

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do't; and so he goes to heaven;
And so am I reveng'd? That would be scann'd:⁶
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.
Why, this is hire and salary,⁷ not revenge.
He took my father grossly full of bread;
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;
And, how his audit stands, who knows, save heaven?

1 See King Henry IV. Part I. Act II. Sc. 4.

2 'Matres omnes filios

In peccato adiudices, auxili in paterna injuria
Solent esse.'—Mer. Hecm. Act v. Sc. 2.

3 Warburton explains of vantage, 'by some opportunity of secret observation.' I incline to think that of vantage, 'in Shakespeare's language, is for advantage, commodi causa.

4 I. e. 'though I was not only willing, but strongly inclined to pray, my guilt prevented me.'

5 I. e. caught as with birdlime.

6 'That would be scann'd'—that requires consideration, or ought to be estimated.

7 The quarto reads, dace and silly.

8 Shakespeare has used the verb to hent, to take, to lay hold on, elsewhere; but the word is here used as a substantive, for hold or opportunity.

9 Johnson has justly exclaimed against the horrible nature of this desperate revenge; but the quotations of the commentators from other plays contemporary with and succeeding this, show that it could not have been so

But, in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heavy with him: And am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No.

Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid heat:
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage;
Or, in the incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, swearing; or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in't:
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven:
And that his soul may be as damn'd, and black,
As hell, whereto it goes.⁹ My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days. [Exit.]

The King rises and advances.

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below:
Words, without thoughts, never to heaven go.¹⁰ [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Another Room in the same. Enter Queen and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look, you lay hands to him:

Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear
with;
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood between

Much heat and him. I'll silence me e'en here.

'Pray you, be round with him.'¹¹

Queen. I'll warrant you;
Fear me not:—withdraw, I hear him coming.
[POLONIUS hides himself.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother; what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet?

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so:
You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;
And,—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall not budge;

You go not, till I set you up a glass

Where you may see the image of your son.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me?

Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind.] What, he! help!

Ham. How now! a rat?
[Drums.]

Dead, for a ducat, dead.

[HAMLET makes a pass through the Arras.]

Pol. [Behind.] O, I am slain.

[Falls, and dies.]

horrifying to the ears of our ancestors. In times of less civilization, revenge was held almost a sacred duty; and the purpose of the appearance of the ghost in this play is chiefly to excite Hamlet to it. The more fell and terrible the retributive act, the more meritorious it seems to have been held. The King himself in a future scene, when stimulating Laertes to kill Hamlet, says, 'Revenge should have no bounds.' Mason has observed that, horrid as this resolution of Hamlet's is, yet some moral may be extracted from it, as all his subsequent misfortunes were owing to this savage refinement of revenge.

10 First quarto:—

'No king on earth is safe, if God's his foe.'

11 The folio here interposes the following speech:—

'Ham. [Within.] Mother, mother, mother.'

The circumstance of Polonius hiding himself behind the arras and the manner of his death are found in the old black letter prose History of Hamblet.

Queen. O, me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:
Is it the king?

[Lifts up the Arras, and draws forth POLO-NIUS.]

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed; almost as bad, good mother,

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.¹

Queen. As kill a king?

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word.—
Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!
[To POLONIUS.]

I took thee for thy better; take thy fortune:
Thou find'st to be too busy, is some danger.—
Leave wringing of your hands; Peace; sit you down.
And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff:
If damned custom have not braz'd it so,
That it be proof and bulwark against sense.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act,
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;
Calls virtue, hypocrite; takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there; makes marriage vows
As false as dicers' oaths: O, such a deed
As from the body of contraction plucks
The very soul; and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words: Heaven's face doth glow;
Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.²

Queen. Ah me, what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?³

Ham. Look here upon this picture, and on this;
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow:
Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station⁴ like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;

1 There is an idle and verbose controversy between Steevens and Malone, whether the poet meant to represent the Queen as guilty or innocent of being accessory to the murder of her husband. Surely there can be no doubt upon the matter. The Queen shows no emotion at the mock play when it is said—

'In second husband let me be accurate.

None wed the second but who kill'd the first.—
and now manifests the surprise of conscious innocence upon the subject. It should also be observed that Hamlet never directly accuses her of any guilty participation in that crime. I am happy to find my opinion, so expressed in December, 1823, confirmed by the newly discovered quarto copy of 1603; in which the Queen in a future speech is made to say—

'But, as I have a soul, I swear by heaven,
I never knew of this most horrid murder.'

2 '—' takes off the rose

From the fair forehead of an innocent love,' &c.
One would think by the ludicrous gravity with which Steevens and Malone take this figurative expression in a literal sense, that they were unused to the language of poetry, especially to the adventurous metaphors of Shakespeare. Mr. Boswell's note is short and to the purpose. 'Rose is put generally for the ornament, the grace of an innocent love.' Ophelia describes Hamlet as—

'The expectancy and rose of the fair state.'

3 The quarto of 1604 gives this passage thus:—

Heaven's face does glow
O'er this solidity and compound mass
With heated visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.'

4 The index, or table of contents, was formerly placed at the beginning of books. In Othello, Act II. Sc. 7, we have—'an index and obscure prologue to the history of foul and lustful thoughts.'

5 It is evident from this passage that whole length pictures of the two kings were formerly introduced. Station does not mean the spot where any one is placed, but the act of standing, the attitude. So in Antony and Cleopatra, Act III. Sc. 3—

'Her motion and her station are as one.'

A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man:
This was your husband.—Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother.⁴ Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten⁵ on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?
You cannot call it, love: for, at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment; And what judgment
Would step from this to this? [Sense, sure you have,
Else could you not have motion: But, sure, that sense

Is apoplex'd: for madness would not err;
Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd,
But it reserv'd some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference.] What devil was't
That thus hath censur'd you at hoodman blind?
[Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sense all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.¹⁰]

O, shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,
If thou canst mutine¹¹ in a matron's bosom,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,
And melt in her own fire:¹² proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge;
Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will.

Queen. O, Hamlet, speak no more:
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained¹³ spots
As will not leave their tinct.

Ham. Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an enseamed¹⁴ bed;
Stew'd in corruption; honeying, and making love
Over the nasty sty;—

Queen. O, speak to me no more;
These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears:
No more, sweet Hamlet.

Without this explanation it might be conceived that the compliment designed for the suicide of the King was bestowed on the place where Mercury is represented as standing.

6 Here the allusion is to Pharaoh's dream. Genesis, xli.

7 I. e. to feed rankly or grossly: it is usually applied to the fattening of animals. Marlowe has it for 'to grow fat.' But is the old word for increase; whence we have battle, batten, batful.

8 Sense here is not used for reason; but for sensation, feeling, or perception: as before in this scene—
'Thou'lt be proof and bulwark against sense.'

Warburton, misunderstanding the passage, proposed to read notion instead of motion. The whole passage in brackets is omitted in the folio.

9 'The hoodwink play, or hoodman blind, in some place, called blindmanbuff.'—Baret. It appears also to have been called blind hob. It is hob-man blind in the quarto of 1603.

10 I. e. could not be so dull and stupid.

11 Mutine for mutiny. This is the old form of the verb. Shakespeare calls mutineers mutines in a subsequent scene; but this is, I believe, peculiar to him: they were called mutineers anciently.

12 Thus in the quarto of 1603:—

'Why, appeale with you is in the wane,
Your blood runs backward now from whence it came;
Who'll chide hot blood within a virgin's heart,
When lust shall dwell within a matron's breast?'

13 'Grained spots' that is, dyed in grain, deeply laboured.

14 I. e. greasy, rank, gross. It is a term borrowed from falconry. It is well known that the seem of any animal was the fat or tallow; and a hawk was said to be enseamed when she was too fat or gross for flight. By some confusion of terms, however, 'to enseam a hawk' was used for 'to purge her of glut and grease;' by analogy it should have been unseam. Beaumont and Fletcher, in The False One, use inseamed in the same manner:—

'His lechery inseamed upon him.'

It should be remarked, that the quarto of 1603 reads inseamious; as does that of 1611.

Ham. A murderer, and a villain;
A slave, that is not twentieth part the tithe
Of your precedent lord:—a vice¹ of kings:
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule;
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more.

Enter Ghost.²

Ham. A king
Of shreds and patches:—
Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards!—What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas, he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That, laps'd in time and passion,³ lets go by
The important acting of your dread command?
O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget: This visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look! amazement on thy mother sits:
O, step between her and her fighting soul;
Conceit⁴ in weakest bodies strongest works;
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is't with you?
That you do bend your eyes on vacancy,
And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,⁵
Starts up, and stands on end. O, gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him! on him!—Look you how pale he glares!

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable.⁶—Do not look upon me;
Lest, with this piteous action, you convert
My stern affects:⁷ then what I have to do
Will want true colour; tears, perchance, for blood.

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

1 i.e. 'the low mimic, the counterfeit, a dizard, or common vice and jester, counterfeiting the gestures of any man.'—Fleming. Shakspeare afterwards calls him a king of shreds and patches, alluding to the party-coloured habit of the vice or fool in a play.

2 The first quarto adds, 'in his night-gown.'

3 'Laps'd in time and passion.' Johnson explains this.—'That having suffered time to slip and passion to cool, let's go by,' &c. This explanation is confirmed by the quarto of 1603.

4 'Do you not come your tardy son to chide,
That I thus long have let revenge slip by?'

5 Conceit, for conception, imagination. This was the force of the word among our ancestors. Thus in The Rape of Lucrece:

'And the conceived painter was so nice.'

6 'The hair is excrementitious; that is, without life or sensation; yet those very hairs, as if they had life, start up,' &c. So Macbeth:—

'—my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in.'

7 Capable for susceptible, intelligent, i.e. would exert in them capacity to understand. Thus in King Richard III.:—

'—O 'tis a parlous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable.'

8 'My stern affects.' 'Effects, for actions, deeds, effected,' says Malone! We should certainly read affects, i.e. dispositions, affections of the mind: as in that disputed passage of Othello:—'the young affects in me defunct.' It is remarkable that we have the same error in Measure for Measure, Act iii. Sc. 1:—

'—Thou art not certain,
For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon.'

Dr. Johnson saw the error in that play, and proposed to read affects. But the present passage has escaped observation. The 'piteous action' of the ghost could not

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there. Look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal!
[Exit Ghost.]

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy⁸
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: It is not madness,
That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks;
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past; avoid what is to come;
And do not spread the compost⁹ on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Forgive me this my virtue:
For in the fatness of these purpur times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg:
Yea, curb¹⁰ and woo, for leave to do him good.

Queen. O, Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worse part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
[That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this;¹¹
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly is put on:] Refrain to-night;¹²
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: [¹³the next more easy:
For use almost can change the stamp of nature,
And either quell the devil or throw him out
With wondrous potency.] Once more, good night!
And when you are desirous to be blest,¹⁴
I'll blessing beg of you.—For this same lord, [Pointing to Polonius.]

alter things already effected, but might move Hamlet to a less stern mood of mind.

8 This speech of the queen has the following remarkable variation in the quarto of 1602:—

'Alas, it is the weakness of thy brain
Which makes thy tongue to blazon thy heart's grief:
*But as I have a soul, I swear to heaven,
I never knew of this most horrid murder:*
But, Hamlet, this is only fantasy,
And for my love forget these idle fits.'

9 'Do not by any new indulgence heighten your former offences.'

10 i.e. bow. 'Courber, Fr. to bow, crook, or curb.' Thus in Pierce Plowman:—

'Then I curbid on my knees.'

11 'That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this,' &c.
This passage, which is not in the folio, has been thought corrupt. Dr. Thirlby proposed to read, 'Of habits evil.' Stevens would read, 'Or habits' devil.' It is evident that there is an intended opposition between angel and devil; but the passage will perhaps bear explaining as it stands:—'That monster custom, who devours all sense (feeling, or perception) of devilish habits, is angel yet in this,' &c. This passage might perhaps have been as well omitted, after the example of the editors of the folio; but, I presume, it has been retained upon the principle which every where guide the editors, 'To lose no drop of that immortal man.'

12 Here the quarto of 1603 has two remarkable lines:—

'And, mother, but assist me in revenge,
And in his death your infamy shall die.'

13 'The next more easy,' &c. This passage, as far as potency, is also omitted in the folio. In the line:—

'And either quell the devil, or throw him out.'

The word quell is wanting in the old copy. Malone inserted the word curb, because he found, in The Mer chant of Venice, 'And curb this cruel devil of his will.' But the occurrence of curb in so opposite a sense just before, is against his emendation.

I do repent: But heaven hath pleas'd it so,—
To punish me with this, and this with me;
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well
The death I gave him. So, again, good night!—
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.—
But one word more, good lady.

Queen.

What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do:
Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you, his mouse;
And let him, for a pair of reechy³ kisses,
Or padding in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft.⁴ 'Twere good, you let him know;
For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gib,⁵
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense, and secrecy,
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,
Let the birds fly; and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions,⁶ in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd if words be made of breath,
And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.⁷

Ham. I must to England;⁸ you know that?

Alack,

I had forgot; 'tis so concluded on.

Ham. [There's letters seal'd: and my two school-fellows,]

Whom I will trust, as I will adders fang'd,—
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
And marshal me to knavery: Let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petar;⁹ and it shall go hard,
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon: O, 'tis most sweet,
When in one line two crafts directly meet.—
This man shall set me packing.
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room:¹⁰
Mother, good night.—Indeed, this counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you:—
Good night, mother.

[Exeunt severally; HAMLET dragging in POLONIUS.]

1 'To punish me by making me the instrument of this man's death, and to punish this man by my hand.'

2 Mouse, a term of endearment formerly. Thus Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy:—'Pleasant names may be invented, bird, mouse, lamb, puss, pigeon,' &c.

3 I.e. reeky or fumant; reekant, as Florio calls it. The King has been already called the bloat king, which hints at his intemperance. In Coriolanus we have the reechy neck of a kitchen wench. Reechy and reechy are the same word, and always applied to any vaporous exhalation, even to the fumes of a dunghill.

4 The hint for Hamlet's feigned madness is taken from the old Historie of Hamblett already mentioned.

5 For paddock, a toad, see Macbeth, Act I. Sc. 1; and for gib, a cat, see King Henry IV. Part I. Act I. Sc. 2.

6 To try conclusions is to put to proof, or try experiments. See Merchant of Venice, Act II. Sc. 2. Sir John Suckling possibly alludes to the same story in one of his letters:—'It is the story after all of the jackanapes and the partridges; thou starest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let'st out another, and starest after that till it is gone too.'

7 The quarto of 1608 has here another remarkable variation:—

'Hamlet, I vow by that Majesty

That knows our thoughts and looks into our hearts,
I will conceal, consent, and do my best,
What stratagem so'er thou shalt devise.'

8 The manner in which Hamlet came to know that he was to be sent to England is not developed. He expresses surprise when the king mentions it in a future scene; but his design of passing for a madman may account for this.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Enter King, Queen, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves:

You must translate: 'tis fit we understand them: Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.¹²—
[To ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN, who go out.]

Ah,¹³ my good lord, what have I seen to-night!

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea, and wind, when both contend!¹⁴

Which is the mightier: In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries, A rat! a rat!
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O, heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there:
His liberty is full of threats to all;
To you yourself, to us, to every one.

Alas! how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short restrain'd, and out of haunt,¹⁵
This mad young man: but, so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit;

But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore,
Among a mineral¹⁶ of metals base,
Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O, Gertrude, come away!

The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence; and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho! Guildenstern!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,

9 This and the eight following verses are omitted in the folio.

10 Hoist with his own petar. Hoist for hoised. To hoise was the old verb. A petar was a kind of mortar used to blow up gates.

11 It must be confessed that this is coarse language for a prince under any circumstances, and such as is not called for by the occasion. But Hamlet has purposely chosen gross expressions and coarse metaphors, throughout the interview with his mother, perhaps to make his appeal to her feelings the more forcible. Something may be said in extenuation. The word guts was not anciently so offensive to delicacy as it is at present; the courtly Lyly has used it in his Mydas, 1592; Stanyhurst often in his translation of Virgil; and Chapman in his version of the sixth Iliad:—
— in whose guts the king of men imprint
His ashen lance.

In short, guts was used where we now use entrails.

12 This line does not appear in the folio, in which Guildenstern and Rosenkrantz are not brought on the stage at all.

13 Quarto—Ah, mine own lord.

14 Thus in Lear:—

— he was not e'en now,
As mad as the ver'd sea.

15 Out of haunt means out of company. 'Frequentia, a great haunt or company of folk.' Thus in Antony and Cleopatra—

'Dido and her Sicilius shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.'

And in Romeo and Juliet:

'We talk here in the public haunt of men.'

16 Shakespeare, with a licence not unusual among his contemporaries, uses ore for gold, and mineral for mine. Bullokar and Blount both define 'or or ore, gold; of a golden colour.' And the Cambridge Dictionary, 1694, under the Latin word mineralia, will show how the English mineral came to be used for a mine. Thus also in The Golden Remaines of Hales of Eton, 1688:—'Controversies of the times, like spirits in the minerals, with all their labour nothing is done.'

And from his mother's closet bath he dragg'd him :
Go, seek him out ; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt ROS. and GUIL.]

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends ;
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done : [so, haply, slander,—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,¹
Transports his poison'd shot, may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air.²]—O, come away !
My soul is full of discord, and dismay. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another Room in the same. Enter HAMLET.

Ham. —Safely stowed.—[ROS. &c. within.
Hamlet ! Lord Hamlet !] But soft !³—what noise ?
who calls on Hamlet ? O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body ?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.
Ros. Tell us where 'tis ; that we may take it thence,

And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what ?

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge !
—what replication should be made by the son of a
king ?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord ?

Ham. Ay, sir ; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities.⁴ But such officers do the king best services in the end : He keeps them, like an ape doth nuts,⁵ in the corner of his jaw ; first mouthed to be last swallowed : When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again.⁶

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it : A knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body.⁷ The king is a thing—

GUIL. A thing, my lord ?

Ham. Of nothing : bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after.⁸ [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another Room in the same. Enter King, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it, that this man goes loose !

Yet must not we put the strong law on him :

He's lev'd of the distracted multitude,

Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes ;

And, where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,
But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even,

1 The blank was the mark at which shots or arrows were directed. Thus in The Winter's Tale, Act II.
Sc. 3:—

'Out of the blank and level of my aim.'

2 The passage in brackets is not in the folio. The words 'so, haply, slander,' are also omitted in the quartos ; they were supplied by Theobald. The addition is supported by a passage in Cymbeline:—

'No, 'tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
[but venom] all the worms of Nile, whose breath rides on the posting winds, and doth bawl
All corners of the world.'

3 'But soft,' these two words are not in the folio.

4 Here the quarto, 1603, inserts 'that makes his liberality your storehouse, but,' &c.

5 The omission of the words 'doth nuts,' in the old copies, had obscured this passage. Dr. Farmer proposed to read 'like an ape an apple.' The words are now supplied from the newly discovered quarto of 1603.

6 'He's but a sponge, and shortly needs must loose.
His wrong got juice, when greatness' fist shall squeeze

His liquor out.'

Marston, Sat. vii.

7 Hamlet affects obscurity. His meaning may be
The king is a body without a kingly soul, a thing—of

This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause : Diseases, desperate grown,
By desperate appliance are relieved,

Enter ROSENCRANZ.

Or not at all.—How now ? what hath befallen ?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,
We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he ?

Ros. Without, my lord ; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern ! bring in my lord.

Enter HAMLET and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius ?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper ? Where ?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten :
a certain convocation of politic worms are s'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet : we fat all creatures else, to fat us ; and we fat ourselves for magots ; Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service ; two dishes, but to one table ;
that's the end.

[King. Alas, alas !

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king ; and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.⁹]

King. What dost thou mean by this ?

Ham. Nothing, but to show you how a king may go a progress¹⁰ through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius ?

Ham. In heaven ; send thither to see : if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall lose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there. [To some Attendants.]

Ham. He will stay till you come.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve

For that which thou hast done,—must send thee
hence

With fiery quickness : Therefore prepare thyself ;

The bark is ready, and the wind at help,¹¹

The associates tend,¹² and every thing is bent
For England.

Ham. For England ?

King.

Ay, Hamlet.

Ham.

Good.

King. So is it, if thou know'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub, that sees them.—But, come ; for England !—Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet.

Ham. My mother ; Father and mother is man and wife ; man and wife is one flesh ; and so, my mother. Come, for England. [Exit.] nothing.' Johnson would have altered 'Of nothing' to Or nothing ; but Steevens and Farmer, by their superior acquaintance with our older writers, soon clearly showed,

by several examples, that the text was right.

8 'Hide fox, and all after.' This was a juvenile sport, most probably what is now called hoop, or hide and seek ; in which one child hides himself, and the rest run off after, seeking him. The words are not in the quarto.

9 'Alas, Alas !' This speech and the following one of Hamlet, are omitted in the folio.

10 A progress is a journey. Steevens says 'it alludes to the royal journey of state, always styled progresses.'
This was probably in Shakespeare's mind, for the word was certainly applied to those periodical journeys of the sovereign to visit their noble subjects, but by no means exclusively. See William Drury, in a Letter to Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, among the Convey papers, till him he is going 'a little progress to be merry with his neighbours.' And that popular brook of John Bunyan's, The Pilgrim's Progress, is surely not the account of a regal 'predatory excursion.'

11 I. e. in modern phrase 'the wind serves,' or is right to aid or help you on your way.

12 I. e. attend.

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed aboard;
Delay it not, I'll have him hence to-night;
Away; for every thing is seal'd and done
That else leans on the affair: Pray you, make haste.

[Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]

And, England, if my love thou held'st at aught,
(As my great power thereof may give thee sense;
Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe Pays homage to us,) thou may'st not coldly set
Our sovereign process; which imports at full,
By letters conjuring to that effect,
The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England;
For like the hectic in my blood he rages,¹
And thou must cure me: Till I know 'tis done,
Howe'er my haps, my joys will ne'er begin.²

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. A Plain in Denmark. Enter FORTINBRAS, and Forces, marching.

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish
king;
Tell him, that, by his licence, Fortinbras
Claims³ the conveyance of a promis'd march
Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous.
If that his majesty would aught with us,
We shall express our duty in his eye.⁴
And let him know so.

Cap. I will do't, my lord.

For. Go softly on.

[Exeunt FORTINBRAS and Forces.]

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDEN-STERN, &c.

[Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?
Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

Ham. How purpos'd, sir,

I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who

Commands them, sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the main of Poland, sir,
Or for some frontier?

Cap. Truly to speak, sir, and with no addition,
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hath in it no profit but the name.
To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it;
Nor will it yield to Norway, or the Pole,
A ranker rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then the Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls, and twenty thousand ducats,

Will not debate the question of this straw:

This is the imposthume of much wealth and peace;

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
Why the man dies.—I humbly thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit Captain.]

Ros. Will't please you go, my lord?

Ham. I will be with you straight. Go a little before. [Exeunt Ros. and GUIL.]

How all occasions do inform against me,
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good, and market⁵ of his time,
Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,⁶ Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To fast in us thus'd. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven⁷ scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And, ever, three parts coward,—I do not know
Why yet I live to say, This thing's to do:
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:
Witness, this army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince;
Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event;
Exposing what is mortal, and unsure,
To all that fortune, death, and danger, dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is, not to stir without great argument;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw;
When honour's at the stake. How stand I, then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason, and my blood,⁸
And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a fantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds: fight for a plot!¹¹
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough, and continent,¹²
To hide the slain?—O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

[Exit.]

SCENE V. Elisnore. A Room in the Castle.
Enter Queen and HORATIO.

Queen. —I will not speak with her.

Hor. She is importunate; indeed, distract;
Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen.

Hor. What would she have?
She speaks much of her father; says, she hears,

There's tricks¹³ i' the world; and hems, and beats her
heart;

Spurns enviously¹⁴ at straws; speaks things in doubt,

That carry but half sense: her speech is nothing,

'Or yields the till us ale cream.'

And in Richard Cœur de Lion (Weber, vol. II. p. 206):—
'On knees he fel down, and cryde, "Creuant."
It then became cravant, cravent, and at length craven.
It is superfluous to add that recreant is from the same source.

10 'Excitements of my reason and my blood.'
Provocations which excite both my reason and my passions to vengeance.

11 A plot of ground. Thus in The Mirror for Magistrates:—

'Of ground to win a plot, a while to dwell,
We venture lives, and send our souls to hell.'

12 Continent means that which comprehends or encloses. Thus in Lear:—

'Rive your concealing continents.'
And in Chapman's version of the third Iliad:—

—did take
Thy fair form for a continent of parts as fair.'

'If there be no fulness, then is the continent greater than the content.'—Bacon's Advancement of Learning, 1633, p. 7.

13 Envy is often used by Shakespeare and his contemporaries for malice, spite, or hatred:—

'You turn the good we offer into envy.'

King Henry VIII.
See Merchant of Venice, Act IV. Sc. 1. Indeed 'enviously, and spitefully,' are treated as synonymous by our old writers.

1 To set formerly meant to estimate. There is no ellipsis, as Malone supposed. 'To settle, or tell the price; estimate.' To set much or little by a thing, is to estimate it much or little.

2 'I would forget her, but a fever she Reigns in my blood.' Love's Labour's Lost.

3 The folio reads:—

'Howe'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun.'

4 The quarto reads—craves.

5 Eye for presence. In the Regulations for the establishment of the Queen's Household, 1537:—'All such as doe service i' the queen's eye.' And in the Establishment of Prince Henry's Household, 1618:—'All such as doe ser- i' in the prince's eye.' It was the formulary for the royal presence.

6 The remainder of this scene is omitted in the folio.
7 I. e. profit.

8 See note on Act I. Sc. 2. It is evident that discursive powers of mind are meant; or, as Johnson explains it, such latitude of comprehension, such power of reviewing the past, and anticipating the future.' Since I wrote the former note, I find that Bishop Wilkins makes ratiocinations and discourses convertible terms.

9 Craven is recreant, cowardly. It may be satisfactorily traced from crani, crant, the old French word for an act of submission. It is so written in the old metrical romance of Ywaine and Gawaine (Elison, vol. I. p.
133);

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection;¹ they aim² at it,
And both the words up fit to their own thoughts;
Which, as her winks and nods, and gestures yield
them,
Indeed, would make one think, there might³ be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.⁴

Queen. 'Twere good, she were spoken with; for she may strew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds:
Let her come in.⁵ [Exit HORATIO.
To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss:⁶
So full of artless jealousy is guilt,
It spills itself in fearing to be spilt.

Re-enter HORATIO, with OPHELIA.⁷

Oph. Where is the beautiful majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia?

Oph. How should I your true love know,
From another one?
By his cockle hat and staff,
And his sandal shoon.⁸ [Singing.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

Oph. Say you? nay; 'pray you, mark.
He is dead and gone, lady. [Sings.
He is dead and gone;
At his head a grass-green turf
At his heels a stone.

O, ho!

Queen. Nay, but Ophelia,— 'Pray you, mark.

Oph. While his shroud as the mountain snow. [Sings.

Enter King.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. Larded⁹ all with sweet flowers;
Which beauteous to the grave¹⁰ did go,
With true love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady?

Oph. Well, Godfield¹¹ you! They say, the owl was a baker's daughter!¹² Lord, we know what we

1 To collection, that is, to gather or deduce consequences from such premises. Thus in Cymbeline, Act v. Sc. 5:—

———— whose containing
Is so from sense to hardness, that I can Make no collection of it.

See note on that passage.

2 The quartos read—yawn. To aim, is to guess.

3 Folio—would.

4 Unhappily, that is, mischievously.

5 The three first lines of this speech are given to Horatio in the quarto.

6 Shakespeare is not singular in his use of amiss as a substantive. Several instances are adduced by Steevens, and more by Mr. Nares in his Glossary. 'Each toy,' is each trifle.

7 'There is no part of this play in its representation on the stage more pathetic than this scene; which, I suppose, proceeds from the utter insensibility Ophelia has to her own misfortunes. A great sensibility, or none at all, seem to produce the same effects. In the latter (case) the audience supply what is wanting, and with the former they sympathize.—Sir J. Reynolds.

8 These were the badges of pilgrims. The cockle shell was an emblem of their intention to go beyond sea. The habit being held sacred, was often assumed as a disguise in love adventures. In The Old Wife's Tale, by Peele, 1595:—'I will give thee a palmer's staff of ivory, and a scallop shell of beaten gold.'

9 Garnished.

10 Quarto—ground.

11 See Macbeth, Act i. Sc. 6.

12 This (says Mr. Douce) is a common tradition in Gloucestershire, and is thus related:—'Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough in the oven to bake for him; but was reprimanded by her daughter, who, insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size.' The dough, however, immediately began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out, Heugh, heugh, heugh, which owl-like noise probaare, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. 'Pray, let us have no words of this; but when they ask you, what it means, say you this:

Good morrow, 'tis Saint Valentine's day,¹³

All in the morning betime,

And I a maid at your window,

To be your Valentine:

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,

And tapp'd¹⁴ the chamber door;

Let in the maid, that out a maid

Never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, without an oath, I'll make an end on't:

By Gis, and by Saint Charity,¹⁵

Alack, and fie for shame!

Young men will do't, if they come to't;

By cock, they are to blame.

Quoth she, before you tumbled me,

You promis'd me to wed:

[He answers.]

So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,

An thou hadst not come to my bed.

King. How long hath she been thus?

Oph. I hope, all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think, they should lay him i' the cold ground: My brother shall know of it, and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies; good night, good night. [Exit.

King. Follow her close! give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit HORATIO

O! this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death: And now behold,
O, Gertrude, Gertrude,¹⁶
When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions! First, her father slain;
Next, your son gone; and he most violent author
Of his own just remove: The people maddied, Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whisper-

ers, bly induced our Saviour to transform her into that bird for her wickedness.' The story is related to deter children from illiberal behaviour to the poor.

13 The old copies read:—

'To-morrow 'tis Saint Valentine's day.'

The emendation was made by Dr. Farmer. The origin of the choosing of Valentines has not been clearly developed. Mr. Douce traces it to a Pagan custom of the same kind during the Lupercalia feasts in honour of Pan and Juno, celebrated in the month of February by the Romans. The anniversary of the good bishop, or Saint Valentine, happening in this month, the pious early promoters of Christianity placed this popular custom under the patronage of the saint, in order to eradicate the notion of its Pagan origin. In France the Felantins was a moveable feast, celebrated on the first Sunday in Lent, which was called the jour des brandons, because the boys carried about lighted torches on that day. It is very probable that the saint has nothing to do with the custom; his legend gives no clue to any such supposition. The popular notion that the birds choose their mates about this period has its rise in the poetical world of fiction.

14 'To dapp is to dapp, as to don is to do on, to doff to do off,' &c. Thus in Damon and Pythias, 1693:—'The porters are drunk. will they not dapp the gate to-day?' The phrase probably had its origin from doing up or lifting the latch. In the old cant language to dapp the gyger was to open the door. See HARRMAN'S Caveat for Curators, 1876.

15 Saint Charity is found in the Martyrology on the first of August. 'Romæ passio sanctarum virginum Fidei, Spei, & Charitatis, quæ sub Hadriano principis martyrie coronata adeptæ sunt.' Spenser mentions her in Eclog. v. 236. By gis and by cock are only corruptions, or rather substitutions, for different forms of imprecation by the sacred name.

16 In the quarto 1608 the King says:—

'Ah, pretty wretch! this is a change indeed:
O time, how swiftly runs our joys away?
Content on earth was never certain bred,
To-day we laugh and live, to-morrow dead.'

For good Polonius' death; and we have done but greenly,¹
in hagger-mugger² to inter him: Poor Ophelia
Divided from herself, and her fair judgment;
Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts.
Last, and as much containing as all these,
Her brother is in secret come from France:
Feeds on his wonder,³ keeps himself in clouds,
And wants not buzzers to infect his ear
With pestilent speeches of his father's death;
Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
Will nothing stick our person to arraign
In ear and ear. O, my dear Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering piece,⁴ in many places Gives me superfluous death! [A noise within.]
Queen Alack! what noise is this?⁵

Enter a Gentleman.

King. Attend.
Where are my Switzers?⁶ Let them guard the door:
What is the matter?

Gen. Save yourself, my lord;
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers! The rabble call him lord;
And, as the world were now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, custom not known,
The ratifiers and props of every word,
They cry, *Choose we; Laertes shall be king!*⁷
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
O, this is counter,⁸ you false Danish dogs.

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.]

Enter LAERTES, armed; Dances following.

Laer. Where is this king?—Sirs, stand you all without.

Danes. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Danes. We will, we will.

[They retire without the Door.]
Laer. I thank you:—keep the door.—O, thou vile
king,

Give me my father.

Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm, proclaims me bastard;
Cries, cuckold, to my father; brands the harlot
Even here, between the chaste unsmirched⁹ brow
Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?—
Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;
There's such divinity doth hedge¹⁰ a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incens'd;—Let him go, Gertrude;—

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled
with:

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!
Conscience, and grace, to the profoundest pit!
I dare damnation: To this point I stand,—
That both the worlds I give to negligence,¹¹
Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd
Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world's:

And, for my means, I'll husband them so well,
They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

If you desire to know the certainty
Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your revenge-
That, sweepstake, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them, then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms;

And like the kind life-rendering pelican,
Repeat them with my blood.¹²

King. Why, now you speak

Like a good child, and a true gentleman.
That I am guiltless of your father's death,
And am most sensibly¹³ in grief for it,
It shall as level to your judgment pierce¹⁴
As day does to your eye.

1 Greenly is unskillfully, with inexperience—
2 i.e. secretly. 'Clandestine, to hide or conceal by stealth, or in hagger mugger.'—Florida. There in North's translation of Plutarch:—'Antonius, thinking that his body should be honourably buried, and not in hagger mugger.' Pope, offended at this strange phrase, changed it to private, and was followed by others.
Upon which Johnson remarks:—'If phraseology is to be changed as words grow uncouth by disuse, or gross by vulgarity, the history of every language will be lost:
we shall no longer have the words of any author: and as these alterations will be often unskillfully made, we shall in time have very little of his meaning.'

3 The quarto reads:—'Keeps on his wonder.' The folio:—'Feeds on this wonder.'

4 A murdering-piece, or murderer, was a small piece of artillery; in French meurtrière. It took its name from the loop-holes and embrasures in towers and fortifications, which were so called. The port-holes in the fore-castle of a ship were also thus denominated.
'Meurtrière, c'est un petit canonnière, comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appelle, parceque tirant par celle a descouvert, ceux auxquels on tire sont facilement meurtri.'—Ficot. 'Fiere meurtrière, a port-hole for a murdering-piece in the fore-castle of a ship.'—Cot-grave. Case shot, filled with small bullets, nails, old iron, &c. was often used in these murderers. This accounts for the raking fire attributed to them in the text, and in Beaumont and Fletcher's Double Marriage:—

'—like a murdering-piece, aims not at me,

But all that stand within the dangerous level.'

5 The speech of the queen is omitted in the quartos.

6 Switzers, for royal guards. The Swiss were then, as since, mercenary soldiers of any nation that could afford to pay them.

7 The meaning of this contested passage appears to me this: 'The rabble call him lord; and (as if the world were now but to begin, as if antiquity were forgot, and custom were unknown) this rabble, the ratifiers and props of every idle word, cry Choose us,' &c.

8 Hounds are said to run counter when they are upon a false scent, or hunt it by the heel, running backward and mistaking the course of the game. See Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. 2.

9 Unsmirched is unsoiled, spotless. See Act i. Sc. 2.
10 Quarto 1608—wall. Mr. Boswell has adduced the following anecdote of Queen Elizabeth as an apposite illustration of this passage:—'While her majesty was on the Thames, near Greenwich, a shot was fired by accident, which struck the royal barge, and hurt a waterman near her. The French ambassador being amazed, and all crying Treason, Treason! yet she, with an undaunted spirit, came to the open place of the barge, and bade them never fear, for if the shot were made at her, they durst not shoot again: such majesty had her presence, and such boldness her heart, that she despised fear, and was, as all princes are, or should be, so full of divine fullness, that gullies mortality durst not behold her but with dazzled eyes.'—Henry Chettle's England's Mourning Garment.

11 'But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer.'—Macbeth.

12 The folio reads pellician instead of pelican. This fabulous bird is not unfrequently made use of for purposes of poetical illustration by our elder poets: Shakspeare has again referred to it in King Richard II. and in King Lear:—

'Twas this flesh begot these pelican daughters.'

In the old play of King Lear, 1606, it is also used, but in a different sense:—

'I am as kind as is the pelican,

That kills itself to save her young ones' lives.'

13 Folio—sensible.

14 Pierce is the reading of the folio. The quarto has 'pear,' an awkward contraction of appear. I do not see why appear is more intelligible. Indeed as level is here used for direct, Shakespeare's usual meaning of the word, the reading of the quarto, preferred by Johnson and Steevens, is less proper

Dance. [Within.] Let her come in.
Leer. How now! what noise is that?

Enter OPHELIA, fantastically dressed with Straws and Flowers.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven times salt,
 Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!—
 By heaven, thy madness shall be paid with weight,
 Till our scale turn the beam. O, rose of May!
 Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!
 O, heavens! it's possible, a young maid's wits
 Should be as mortal as an old man's life?
 Nature is fine! in love; and, where 'tis fine,
 It sends some precious instance of itself
 After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him barefaced on the bier;
 Hey no nonny, nonny hey nonny:
 And in his grave rain'd many a tear!—
 Fare you well, my dove!

Leer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade revenge,
 It could not move thus.

Oph. You must sing, Down-a-down, on you call him a-down-a. O, how the wheel¹ becomes it! it is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter.

Leer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance;
 'pray you, love, remember: and there is pansies,
 that's for thoughts.²

Leer. A document in madness; thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Oph. There's fennel for you, and columbines:—
 there's rue for you; and here's some for me:—we may call it, herb of grace o' Sundays:—you may wear your rue with a difference.—There's a daisy:

 —I would give you some violets; but they withered all, when my father died:—They say, he made a good end,——

For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy,—

Leer. Thought⁴ and affliction, passion, hell itself,
 She turns to favour, and to prettiness. [Sings.]

Oph. And will he not come again? [Sings.]

And will he not come again?

No, no, he is dead,

Go to thy death-bed,

He never will come again.

His beard was as white as snow,

All flaxen was his poll:

He is gone, he is gone,

And we cast away moon;

God's a mercy on his soul!

And of all christian souls! I pray God. God be wi' you! [Exit OPHELIA.]

Leer. Do you see this, O God?

King. Laertes, I must commune⁵ with your grief,
 Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
 Make choice of whom your wisest friends you will,
 And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me:
 If by direct or collateral hand
 They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
 Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
 To you in satisfaction; but, if not,
 Be you content to lend your patience to us,

Between us day and night.

Wishing that I might always have

You present in my sight.

Rosemary had this attribute, because it was said to strengthen the memory, and was therefore used as a token of remembrance and affection between lovers, and was distributed as an emblem both at weddings and funerals. Why pansies (pensees) are emblems of thoughts is obvious. Fennel was emblematic of flattery, and 'Dare thee to, to give thee', was in other words 'to flatter, to dissemble,' according to Florio. Thus in the ballad above cited:

² *Fennel is for flatterers,
 An evil thing 'tis sure.*

Browne, in his Brianna's Pastorals, says:—

³ *The columbine, in tawny often taken,
 Is then ascribed to such as are forsaken.*

Rue was for rue or repentance. It was also commonly called Aergrace, probably from being accounted 'a present remedy against all poison, and a potent assistant in exorcisms, all evil things fleeing from it.' By wearing it with a difference (an heraldic term for a mark of distinction) Ophelia may mean that the queen should wear it as a mark of repentance; herself as a token of grief. The daisy was emblematic of a disem-bler:—Next them grew the dissembling daisy, to warn such light of love wenches not to trust every fair promise that such amorous bachelors make.—Green's Quip for an Upstart Courtier. The violet is for faithfulness, and is thus characterised in The Lover's Non-gate.

⁴ Thought, among our ancestors, was used for grief, sore, pensiveness. 'Curarum volvere in pectore. He will die for sorrow and thought.'—Baret. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

⁵ Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno.

Think and die.

⁶ Poor Ophelia in her madness remembers the ends of many old popular ballads. 'Bonny Robin' appears to have been a favourite, for there were many others written to that tune. The editors have not traced the present one. It is introduced in Eastward Hoe, written by Jonson, Chapman, and Marston, where some parts of this play are apparently burlesqued. Hamlet is the name given to a foolish woman in the same scene. I know not why it should be considered an attack on Shakespeare; it was the usual license of comedy to sport with every thing serious and even sacred. Hamlet Tyrannic may as well be called an invective attack on Shakespeare.

⁷ The folio reads common, which is only a varied or topography of the same word. 'We will devise and common of these matters.'—Baret

¹ 'Nature is fine in love.' The three concluding lines of this speech are not in the quarto. The meaning appears to be, Nature is refined or subtilised by love, the senses are rendered more ethereal, and being thus refined, some precious portions of the mental energies fly off, or are sent after the beloved object; when bereft of that object, they are lost to us, and we are left in a state of mental privation:—

—'Even so by love the young and tender wit,
 Is turn'd to folly.'

'Love is a smoke, rais'd with the fume of sighs;
 Being urg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes;
 Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears;
 What is it else?—a madness,' &c.

² The wheel is the burthen of a ballad, from the Latin rotas, a round, which is usually accompanied with a burthen frequently repeated. Thus also in old French, retierie signified such a round or catch, and rotenge, or rotuchenge, the burthen or refrain as it is now called.
 Our old English term refrette, 'the soote of the dinstle, a verse often intercal'd, or the burden of a song,' was probably from refrain; or from refreslester, to pipe over again. It is used by Chaucer in The Testament of Love. This term was not obsolete in Cotgrave's time, though it would now be as difficult to adduce an instance of its use as of the wheel, at the same time the quotation will show that the down of a ballad was another term for the burthen. 'Refrain, the refret, burthen, or down of a ballad.' All this discussion is rendered necessary, because Steevens unfortunately forgot to note from whence he made the following extract, though he knew it was from the preface to some black letter collection of songs or sonnets:—'The song was accounted a good one, though it was not moche graced with the wheele, which in no wise accorded with the subject matter thereof.' Thus also Nicholas Breton, in his *Toyes for idle
 Head*, 1677:—

'That I may sing full merrily
 Not heigh ho wele, but care away.'

It should be remembered that the old musical instrument called a rote, from its wheel, was also termed vielle, quasi wheel. It must surely have been out of a mere spirit of controversy that Malone affected to think that the spinning-wheel was alluded to by Ophelia.

³ Our ancestors gave to almost every flower and plant its emblematic meaning, and like the ladies of the east, made them almost as expressive as written language, in their hieroglyphical sense. Perdita, in The Winter's Tale, distributes her flowers in the same manner as Ophelia, and some of them with the same meaning. In The Handfull of Pleasant Delities, 1694, recently reprinted in Mr. Park's Heliconia, we have a ballad called 'A Nosegale alwaies sweet for Lovers to send for Tokens,' where we find:—

And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.¹

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure funeral,²—
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment, o'er his bones,
No noble rite, nor formal ostentation,³—
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,
That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall;
And where the offence is, let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exit.

SCENE VI. Another Room in the same. Enter
HORATIO and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with me?
Serv. Sailors,⁴ sir;
They say, they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in.—
[Exit Servant.]
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

I Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

I Sail. He shall, sir, an't please him. There's a letter for you, sir: it comes⁵ from the ambassador that was bound for England; if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Hor. [Reads.] Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means to the king; they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase: finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant, they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them.
Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou would'st fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear, will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell.

He that thou knowest thine, Hamlet.

Come, I will give you way for these your letters;
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exit.

SCENE VII. Another Room in the same. Enter
King and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquaintance
seal,

And you must put me in your heart for friend;
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he, which hath your noble father slain,
Pursu'd my life.

Laer. It well appears:—But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful⁶ and so capital in nature,

¹ Thus in the quarto, 1603:—

'King. Content you, good Laertes, for a time,
Although I knew your grief is as a flood,
Brins full of sorrow; yet forbear a while,
And think already the revenge is done
On him that makes you such a hapless son.

'Laer. You have prevail'd, my lord, awhile; I'll strive
To bury grief within a tomb of wrath.
Which once unheard, then the world shall hear Laertes had a father he held dear.

'King. No more of that, ere many days be done
You shall hear that you do not dream upon.

² Folio—burial.

³ The funerals of knights and persons of rank were made with great ceremony and ostentation formerly.
Sir John Hawkins, (himself of the order,) observes that 'the sword, the helmet, the gauntlet, spurs, and tabard, are still hung over the grave of every knight.'

⁴ Quarto—sea-faring men.

⁶ Folio—your.

⁷ The bore is the caliber of a gun. The matter, (says Hamlet,) would carry heavier words.

As by your safety, greatness, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons;
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much unsinew'd,
But yet to me they are strong. The queen, his mother,

Lives almost by his looks; and for myself,
(My virtue, or my plague, be it either which,
She is so conjunctive to my life and soul,
That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
I could not but by her. The other motive,
Why to a public count I might not go,
Is, the great love the general gender⁸ bear him:
Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone,
Convert his gyres to graces;⁹ so that my arrows,
Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,¹¹
Would have reverted to my bow again,
And not where I had aim'd them.

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost;
A sister driven into desperate terms;
Whose worth, if praises may go back again,¹²
Stood challenger on mount of all the age
For her perfections:—But my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that: you must not think,

That we are made of stuff so flat and dull,
That we can let our beard be shook with danger,¹³
And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear more:
I lov'd your father, and we love ourselves;
And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine,—
How now?¹⁴ what news?

Enter a Messenger.

Meas. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet.

This is to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Meas. Sailors, my lord, they say: I saw them not;
They were given me by Claudio, he receiv'd them
Of him that brought them.¹⁵

King. Laertes, you shall hear them:—
Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

[Reads.] High and mighty, you shall know, I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and mere strange return. Hamlet.

What should this mean! Are all the rest come back?
Or is it some abuse, and so such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. Naked,—
And, in a postscript here, he says, alone:
Can you advise me?

Laer. I am lost in it, my lord. But let him come;
It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his tooth,
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so, Laertes,
As how should it be so? how otherwise?—
Will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. Ay, my lord;
So you will not o'er-rule me to a peace.¹⁶

⁸ Quarto—Criminal. Greatness is omitted in the folio.

⁹ I.e. the 'common race of the people.' We have the general and the million in other places in the same sense.

¹⁰ 'Would, like the spring which turneth wood to stone, convert his feters into graces.' punishment would only give him more grace in their opinion. The quarto reads work for wood.

¹¹ 'Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind.'
'Light'st shafes could stand in a rough wind.'—As chance's Torophilius, 1560, p. 57.

¹² 'If praises may go back again.' 'If I may praise what has been, but is now to be found no more.'

¹³ 'Idcirco solidam præbet tibi vellere barbam
Jupiter?' Perrine, Sat. i.

¹⁴ How now is omitted in the quarto: as is letters in the next speech.

¹⁵ This hemistich is not in the folio.

¹⁶ First folio omitting Ay, my lord, reads, If so you'll not o'er-rule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now return'd,—
As checking¹ at his voyage, and that he means
No more to undertake it,—I will work him
To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall:
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident.

Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd;
The rather, if you could devise it so,
That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.
You have been talk'd of since your travel much,
And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one; and that, in my regard,
Of the unworthiest siege.²

Laer. What part is that, my lord?
King. A very riband in the cap of youth,
Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his sables and his weeds,
Importing health and graveness.³—Two months since,

Here was a gentleman of Normandy,—
I have seen myself, and serv'd against the French,
And they can well on horseback: but this gallant
Had witchcraft in't; he grew unto his seat;
And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
As he had been incorp'd and demi-natur'd
With the brave beast: so far he topp'd my thought,
That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks,⁴
Came short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamord.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well: he is the brooch, indeed,
And gem of all the nation.

King. He made confession of you;
And gave you such a masterly report,
For art and exercise in your defence,⁵
And for your rapier most especial,
That he cried out, 'twould be a sight indeed,
If one could match you: the scrimers⁶ of their nation,

He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them: Sir, this report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy,
That he could nothing do, but wish and beg

Your sudden coming o'er, to play with you.

Now, out of this,—

Laer. What out of this, my lord?
King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?

Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer. Why ask you this?

King. Not that I, think, you did not love your father;

But that I know, love is begun by time;⁷

And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.

There lives within the very flame of love

A kind of wick, or snuff, that will abate it:

And nothing is at a like goodness still;

For goodness, growing to a pluriety,⁸

Dies in his own too-much: That we would do,

We should do when we would; for this would changes,

And hath abatements and delays as many,

As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;

And then this should be like a spendthrift's sigh,⁹

That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o' the ulcer:

Hamlet comes back; What would you undertake,

To show yourself in deed your father's son

More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanc-tuarize;

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,

Will you do this, keep close within your chamber:

Hamlet, return'd, shall know you are come home:

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,

And set a double varnish on the fame

The Frenchman gave you; bring you, in fine, together,

And wager o'er your heads: he, being remiss,¹⁰

Most generous and free from all contriving,

Will not peruse the foils: so that, with ease,

Or with a little shuffling, you may choose

A sword unbated,¹¹ and in a pass of practice,¹²

Requite him for your father.

Laer. I will do't.

And, for the purpose, I'll anoint my sword.

I bought an unction of a mountebank,

So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,

Where it draws blood no cataplasm so rare,

Collected from all simples that have virtue

Under the moon, can save the thing from death.

That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point

With this contagion; that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death.¹³

1 To check, to hold off, or fly from, as in fear. It is a phrase taken from falconry.—'For who knows not, quoth she, that this hawk, which comes now so fair to the fist, may to-morrow check at the lure'—Hinde's Elitio Libidinoso, 1606

2 'Of the unworthiest siege,' of the lowest rank: siege for seat or place :—

I fetch my birth
From men of royal siege. Othello.

3 I. e. implying or denoting gravity and attention to health. If we should not rather read wealth for health.

4 'That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks.'

5 That I, in imagining and describing his feats, &c.

6 Science of defence, i. e. fencing.

7 Scrimers, fencers, from scrimer, Fr. This unfavourable description of French swordsmen is not in the folio.

8 'But that I know love is begun by time,' &c. 'As love is begun by time, and has its gradual increase, so time qualifies and abates it.' Passages of proof are transactions of daily experience. The next ten lines are not in the folio.

9 Pluriety is superabundance; our ancestors used the word in this sense, as if it came from plus, pluris, and not from pleura. The disease was formerly thought to proceed from too much blood flowing to the part affected :—

— in a word,
Thy pluriety of goodness is thy ill. Massinger's Unnatural Combat.

9 Johnson says it is a prevalent notion 'that sights impair the strength, and wear out the animal powers.' Steevens makes a ludicrous mistake in the quotation from the 'Governal of Helth,' wherein he takes sythes (time) to signify sighs. Shakespeare in King Henry VI. has 'Blood-consuming sighs.' And in Fenton's Tragical Discourses: 'Your scorching sighs that have already drained your body of his wholesome humours.' The reading of the old copies, which I have restored, had been altered in the modern editions to 'a spendthrift sigh,' without reason. Mr. Blakeway justly observes, that 'Sorrow for neglected opportunities and time abused seems most aptly compared to the sigh of a spendthrift—good resolutions not carried into effect are deeply injurious to the moral character. Like sighs, they hurt by easing, they unburden the mind and satisfy the conscience, without producing any effect upon the conduct.'

10 'He being remiss.' He being not vigilant; or in-cautious.

11 I. e. unbated, to bate, or rather 'to rebate, was to make dull. Aclem ferre rebato.' Thus in Love's Labour's Lost we have—

'That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge'
And in Measure for Measure :—

— rebate and blunt his natural edge.'

12 Pass of practice is an insidious thrust. Shakespeare, in common with many of his contemporaries, always uses practice for art, deceit, treachery.

13 Rhason has exclaimed with just indignation and abhorrence against the villainous assassin-like treachery of Laertes in this horrid plot: he observes, 'There is more occasion that he should be pointed out for an object of abhorrence, as he is a character we are led to respect and admire in some preceding scenes.' In the old quarto of 1603 this contrivance originates with the king :—

King. Let's further think of this ;
Weigh, what convenience, both of time and means,
May fit us to our shape : If this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance,
'Twere better not assay'd : therefore this project
Should have a back, or second, that might hold,
If this should blast in proof :—Soft, let me see :—
We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings,²
I ha't :

When in your motion you are hot and dry,
(As makes your bouts more violent to that end,)
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd³ him
A chalice for the nonce ; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,⁴
Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise?⁵

Enter Queen.

How now, sweet queen ?

Queen. One wo doth tread upon another's heel,
So fast they follow :—Your sister's drown'd, Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd ! O, where ?

Queen. There is a willow grows asseant⁶ the brook,

That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream :
Therewith fantastic garlands did she make
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,⁷
That liberal⁸ shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call them :
There on the pendant boughs her coronet weeds
Clambling to hang, an envious sliver broke ;
When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide ;

And, mermaid-like, awhile they bore her up :
Which time, she chanted snatches of old tunes ;⁹
As one incapable¹⁰ of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indu'd¹¹
Unto that element : but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas, then, she is drown'd ?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my tears : But yet¹²
It is our trick ; nature her custom holds,
Let shame say what it will : when these are gone,

'When you are hot in midst of all your play,
Among the foils shall a keen rapier lie,
Steeped in a mixture of deadly poison,
That if it draws but the least dram of blood
In any part of him, he cannot live.'

1 If this should blast in proof, as fire arms sometimes burst in proving their strength.

2 Cunning is skill.

3 The quarto reads prepar'd ; the folio prepar'd. The modern editors read prepar'd, but I think without good reason.

4 A stuck is a thrust. Stoccata, Ital. Sometimes called a staccado in English.

5 'But stay, what noise?' these words are not in the folio.

6 Asscant, thus the quarto : the folio reads aslant.
Asscance is the same as askew, sideways, overthwart ;
a travers, Fr.

7 The ancient botanical name of the long purples was testiculis morionis, or orchis praeapicua. The grosser name to which the queen alludes is sufficiently known in many parts of England. It had kindred appellations in other languages. In Sussex it is said to be called dead men's hands. Its various names may be seen in Lyte's Herbal, 1778, or in Cotgrave's Dictionary.

8 i. e. licentious. See Much Ado about Nothing, Act
iv. Sc. 1, and Othello, Act ii. Sc. 1.

9 The quarto reads 'snatches of old lauds,' i. e.
hymns. Hymns of praise were so called from the psalm Laudate Dominum.

10 i. e. unsuspicious of it. See note 10, p. 496.

11 Indu'd was anciently used in the sense of endowed with qualities of any kind, as in the phrase, 'a child indued with the grace and dexterity that his father had.'
Shakespeare may, however, have used it for habited, accustomed.

12 Thus the quarto 1603 :—

'Therefore I will not drown thee in my tears,
Revenge it is my yield this heart relief,
For wo begets wo, and grief hangs on grief.'

The woman will be out.¹³—Adieu, my lord !
I have a speech of fire, that fain would blaze,
But that this folly drowns¹⁴ it. [Exit.
King. Let's follow, Gertrude :
How much I had to do to calm his rage !
Now fear I, this will give it start again ;
Therefore, let's follow. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Church Yard. Enter Two Clowns, with Spades, &c.

1 Cl. Is she to be buried in Christian burial, that wilfully seeks her own salvation ?

2 Cl. I tell thee she is ; therefore make her grave straight :¹⁵ the crowner hath set on her, and finds it Christian burial.

1 Cl. How can that be unless she drowned herself in her own defence ?

2 Cl. Why, 'tis found so.

1 Cl. It must be so offendendo ; it cannot be else. For here lies the point : If I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act ; and an act hath three branches ; it is, to act, to do, and to perform ;¹⁶
Argal, she drowned herself wittingly.

2 Cl. Nay, but hear you, Goodman deliver.

1 Cl. Give me leave. Here lies the water ;
good ; here stands the man ; good : If the man go to this water, and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes ; mark you that : but if the water come to him, and drown him, he drowns not himself : Argal, he that is not guilty of his own death, shortens not his own life.

2 Cl. But is this law ?

1 Cl. Ay, marry it's ; crowner's-quest law.

2 Cl. Will you ha' the truth on't ? If this had not been a gentlemans' woman, she should have been buried out of Christian burial.

1 Cl. Why, there thou say'st : And the more pity ; that great folks shall have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves more than their even-Christian.¹⁷ Come, my spade, there is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers : they hold up Adam's profession.

2 Cl. Was he a gentleman ?

1 Cl. He was the first that ever bore arms.

18 Thus in King Henry V. Act iv. Sc. 6 :—

'But all my mother came into my eyes,
And gave me up to tears.'

19 The folio reads—doubt it.

20 How Johnson could think that any particular mode of making Ophelia's grave was meant I cannot imagine.
Nothing is so common as this mode of expression :
straight is merely a contraction of straightway, immediately. Numerous examples are to be found in Shakspeare ; one may suffice from this very play : in Act iii.
Sc. 4. Polonius says :—

'He will come straight.'

And Malone cites from G. Herbert's Jacula Prudentum, 1631 :—'There is no churchyard so handsome that a man would desire straight to be buried there.'

21 Warburton says that this is a ridicule on scholastic divisions without distinction ; and of distinctions without differences. Shakespeare certainly aims at the legal subtleties used upon occasion of inquests. Sir John Hawkins points out the case of Dame Hales, in Plowden's Commentaries. Her husband Sir James drowned himself in a fit of insanity (produced, as it was supposed, by his having been one of the judges who condemned Lady Jane Grey,) and the question was about the forfeiture of a lease. There was a great deal of this law logic used on the occasion, as whether he was the agent or patient ; or in other words, (as the clown says,) whether he went to the water, or the water came to him. Malone thinks because Plowden was in law
French that Shakespeare could not read him ! and yet Malone has shown that Shakespeare is very fond of legal phraseology, and supposes that he must have passed some part of his life in the office of an attorney.

22 Even-Christian, for fellow-Christian, was the old mode of expression ; and is to be found in Chaucer and the Chroniclers. Wickliffe has even-servant for fellow-servant. The that is, that even, like, and equal were synonymous.

2 Clo. Why, he had none.¹

1 Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the scripture? The scripture says, Adam digged: Could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

2 Clo. Go to.

1 Clo. What is he, that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

2 Clo. The gallows-maker, for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

1 Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well: But how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now thou dost ill, to say, the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again: come.

2 Clo. Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright or a carpenter?

1 Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.²

2 Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

1 Clo. To't.

2 Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at a distance.

1 Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating: and, when you are asked this question next, say, a grave-maker: the houses that he makes, last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Vaughan, and fetch me a stoup of liquor. [Exit 2 Clo.]

1 Clo. Clown digs, and sings.

In youth, when I did love, did love,³

Methought, it was very sweet,

To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behove,

O, methought there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business? he sings at grave-making.

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'Tis e'en so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

1 Clo. But ere, with his stealing steps

Hath clau'd me in his chink,

And hath shipped me into the land,

As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a skull.

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: How the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jawbone, that did the first murder! This might be the pate of a politician,

1 This speech and the next, as far as arms, is not in the quarto.

2 'Ay, tell me that, and unyoke.' This was a common phrase for giving over or ceasing to do a thing, a metaphor derived from the unyoking of oxen at the end of their labour. Thus in a Dialogue of the Workmen of Dover, preserved in the additions to Holinshed:—

'My bow is broke, I would unyoke,

My foot is sore, I can worke no more.'

These pithy questions were doubtless the fireside amusement of our rustic ancestors. Steevens mentions a collection of them in print, preserved in a volume of scarce tracts in the university library at Cambridge, D. 5. 2. 'The innocence of these demandes joyeux (he says) may deserve a praise not always due to their delicacy.'

3 The original ballad from whence these stanzas are taken is printed in Tottel's Miscellany, or 'Songs and Sonnettes' by Lord Surrey and others, 1578. The ballad is attributed to Lord Vaux, and is printed by Dr. Percy in the first volume of his Reliques of Antient Poetry. The ohs and the ahs were most probably meant to express the interruption of the song by the forcible emission of the grave digger's breath at each stroke of the spade. The original runs thus:—

'I lothe that I did love;

In youth that I thought sweet:

As time requires for my behove,

Methinks they are not meet.

'For age with stealing steps

Hath claude me with his crouch;

And lusty youth away he leape,

As there had bene none such.'

4 The folio reads—ore-offices which this ass now o'erreaches;⁴ one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord.

Ham. Or of a courtier; which could say, Good-morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord? This might be my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?⁵

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so: and now my lady Worm's;⁶ chaplains, and knocked about the mazzard with a sexton's spade: Here's fine revolution, as we had the trick to see't. Did those bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats⁷ with them? mine ache to think on't.

1 Clo. A pickaxe and a spade, a spade, [Sings—*For—and a shroud sheet
O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.*

[Throws up a skull.

Ham. There's another: Why may not that be the scull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits⁸ now, his quillets, his cases, his treasures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce⁹ with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? Humph! This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers,¹⁰ his recoveries: Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries,¹¹ to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calves-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep, and calves, which seek out assurance¹² in that. I will speak to this fellow:—Whose grave's this, sirrah?

1 Clo. Mine sir.—

O, a pit of clay for to be made

For such a guest is meet.

[Sings.

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed, for thou hast in't.

1 Clo. You lie out on't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in't, yet it is mine.

5 '—My lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on: it is yours, because you liked it.'

Timon of Athens, Act I.

6 The skull that was my lord such-a-one's is now my lady Worm's.

7 Loggets, small logs or pieces of wood. Hence loggets was the name of an ancient rustic game, in which a stake was fixed in the ground at which loggets were thrown; in short, a ruder kind of quoit play.

8 Quiddits are quirks, or subtle questions: and quillots are nice and frivolous distinctions. The etymology of this last foolish word has plagued many learned heads. I think that Blount, in his Glossography, clearly points out quodlibet as the origin of it. Bishop Wilkins calls a quillet 'a frivolousness'; and Coles, in his Latin Dict. res frivola. I find the quarto of 1623 has quirks instead of quiddits.

9 See Comedy of Errors, Act I. Sc. 3. note.

10 Shakspeare here is profuse of his legal learning. Rixson, a lawyer, shall interpret for him:—'A recovery with double voucher, is the one usually suffered, and is so called from two persons (the latter of whom is always the common crier, or some such inferior person,) being successively voucher, or called upon to warrant the tenant's title. Both fines and recoveries are fictions of law, used to convert an estate tall into a fee simple. Statutes are (not acts of parliament,) but statutes ver-chant, and staple, particular modes of recognizance or acknowledgment for securing debts, which thereby become a charge upon the party's land. Statutes and recognizances are constantly mentioned together in the covenants of a purchase deed.'

11 'Is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries,' omitted in the quarto.

12 A quibble is intended. Deeds (of parchment) are called the common assurances of the realm

Ham. Thou dost lie in't, to be in't, and say it is thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

1 Clo. 'Tis a quick lie, sir; 'twill away again, from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

1 Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

1 Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

1 Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but rest her soul, she's dead.

Ham. How absolute the knave is! we must speak by the card,¹ or equivocation will undo us. By the lord, Horatio, these three² years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so picked,³ that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.—How long hast thou been a grave maker?

1 Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet overcame Fortinbras.⁴

Ham. How long's that since?

1 Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: it was that very day that young Hamlet was born:⁵ he that is mad, and sent into England.

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

1 Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, 'tis no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

1 Clo. 'Twill not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he.⁶

Ham. How came he mad?

1 Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

1 Clo. 'Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

1 Clo. Why, here in Denmark; I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot?

1 Clo. 'Faith, if he be not rotten before he die, (as we have many pocky corpses now-a-days, that scarce will hold the laying in,) he will last you some eight year, or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

1 Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned with his trade, that he will keep out water a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body. Here's a scull now hath lain you i' the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

1 Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was; Whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

1 Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue, he poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same scull, sir, was Yorick's scull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?

[Takes the Scull]

1 Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Alas, poor Yorick!—I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips, that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? ' quite chap-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber,⁷ and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour⁸ she must come; make her laugh at that.—Prythee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think, Alexander look'd o' this fashion i' the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Throws down the Scull.]

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, 'faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: As thus; Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam: And why of that loam, whereto he was converted, might they not stop a beer barrel?

Imperious⁹ Caesar, dead, and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keep the wind away:
O, that the earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!¹⁰
But soft! but soft! aside:—Here comes the king,

Enter Priests, &c. in Procession; and the Corpses of OPHELIA, LAERTES, and Mourners, following; King, Queen, their Trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: Who is this they follow?
And with such maimed rites! This doth betoken,
The corse, they follow, did with desperate hand
Fordo¹¹ its own life. 'Twas of some estate.¹²
Couch we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with HORATIO.]

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes,

A very noble youth: Mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

*1 Priest.*¹⁴ Her obsequies have been as far enlarg'd

As we have warranty: Her death was doubtful;
And, but that great command o'er-erways the order,
She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers,
Shards,¹⁵ flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her,
Yet here she is allowed her virgin crants,¹⁶

¹ 'To speak by the card,' is to speak precisely, by rule, or according to a prescribed course. It is a metaphor from the seaman's card or chart by which he guides his course.

² Seven, quarto, 1603.

³ Picked is curious, over nice. Thus in the Cambridge Edit. 1594.—'Conspicuous, exquisite, and picked, perlie, fine, dainty, curious.' See King John, Act I. Sc. 1.

⁴ 'Look you, here's a scull hath been here this dozen year, let me see, ay, ever since our last King Hamlet slew Fortinbras in combat: young Hamlet's father, he that's mad.' Quarto of 1608. It will be seen that the poet places this event thirty years ago in the present copy. See the next note by Sir William Blackstone.

⁵ 'By this scene, it appears that Hamlet was then thirty years old, and knew Yorick well, who had been dead twenty-three years. And yet in the beginning of the play he is spoken of as a very young man, one that designed to go back to school, i. e. to the university of Wittenburgh. The poet in the fifth act had forgot what he wrote in the first.' Blackstone.

⁶ 'Nimrum insanus paucis videtur; eo quod Maxima pars hominum morbo jaciatur eodem.'

Horat. Sat. 3, Lib. II.

⁹ Favour is countenance, complexion.

¹⁰ Imperial is substituted in the folio. Vide Troilus and Cressida, Act IV. Sc. 5.

¹¹ A flaw is a violent gust of wind. See Coriolanus Act V. Sc. 2.

¹² To fordo is to undo, to destroy. Thus in Othello:

—This is the night

That either makes me or fordoes me quiet.

'Would to God it might be leful for me to fordoe my self, or to make an end of me.'—Acolastus, 1529.

¹³ Estate for rank. Estates was a common term for persons of rank.

¹⁴ Quarto—Doctor.

¹⁵ Shards, does not only mean fragments of pots and dices, but rubbish of any kind. Baret has 'shardes of stones, fragmentum lapidis; and 'shardes, or pieces of stones broken and shattred, rubbel or rubbish of old houses.' Our version of the Bible has preserved to us potsherds; and I have heard bricklayers, in Surrey and Sussex, use the compounds tile-sherds, slate-sherds, &c.

¹⁶ I. e. garlands. Still used in most northern languages, but no other example of its use a/fang us has

Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

I Priest. No more be done!

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem,¹ and such rest to her
As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh,
May violets spring!²—I tell thee, churlish priest,
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia
Queen. Sweets to the sweet: Farewell!

[Scattering Flowers]

I hop'd thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife;
I thought, thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,
And not have strew'd thy grave.

Laer. O, treble wo
Fall ten times treble on that cursed head,
Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious sense
Depriv'd thee of!—Hold off the earth a while,
Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead;
Till of this flat a mountain you have made
To o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing.] What is he, whose grief
Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wandering stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

[Leaps into the Grave.]

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grapples with him.]

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.
I pry thee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not splenetic and rash,
Yet have I in me something dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: Hold off thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet!

All. Gentlemen,—

Hor. Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the Grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme,
Until my eyesids will no longer wag.

Queen. O, my son! what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thousand brothers
Could not, with all their quantity of love
Make up my sum.—What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

yet offered itself. It is thought that Shakespeare may have met with the word in some old history of Hamlet, which furnished him with his fable. The editor of the first folio changed, this unusual word for rites, a less appropriate word. Warburton boldly substituted chants, and Mr. Alexander Chalmers affirms that this is the true word.

1 A requiem is a mass sung for the rest of the soul of the dead. So called from the words—

'Requiem eternam dona eis, Domine,' &c.

part of the service.

2 '—tumulo fortunataque favilla

Nascentur violæ?' Persius, Sat. I.

3 The quarto of 1603 reads:—'Will drink up vessels?' and instead of Ossa, Ossell. Some of the commentators have supposed that by cell Hamlet means vinegar. But surely the strain of exaggeration and rant of the rest of the speech requires some more impossible feat than that of drinking up vinegar. What river, lake, or firth Shakespeare meant to designate is uncertain, perhaps the Isel, but the firth of lyse is nearest to his scene of action, and near enough in name. What the late editors meant by their strange contraction of would! I know not. Mr. Gifford observes that they appear none of them to have understood the grammatical construction of the passage. Woo't or woo'to, in the northern counties, is the common contraction of wouldst thou, and this is the reading of the old copies.—This sort of hyperbole Malone has shown was common with our ancient poets:—

'Come, drink up Rhine, Thames, and Meander dry.'

Eastward Ho!, 1609.

And drink up overflowing Euphrates.'

Greene's Orlando Furioso 1599

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. Zounds, show me what thou't do:

Woo't weep? woo't fight? woo't fast? woo't tear thyself,

Woo't drink up eales,⁴ eat a crocodile?
I'll do't.—Dost thou come here to whine?
To outface me with leaping in her grave?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I:
And, if thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us; till our ground,
Singing his pae against the burning zone,
Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness:

And thus awhile the fit will work on him;

Anon, as patient as the female dove,

When that her golden couplets are disclosed,⁵

His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir;

What is the reason that you use me thus?

I lov'd you ever: But it is no matter;

Let Hercules himself do what he may,

The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. [Exit

King. I pray thee, good Horatio, wait upon him.— [Exit HORATIO.]

Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;

[To LAERTES.]

We'll put the matter to the present push.—

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—

This grave shall have a living monument:

An hour of quiet shortly shall we see;

Till then, in patience our proceeding be. [Exit]

SCENE II. A Hall in the Castle. Enter HAMLET and HORATIO.

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other:—

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting
That would not let me sleep: methought, I lay
Worse than the mutines⁶ in the bilboes.⁷ Rashly,
And prais'd be rashness for it,—Let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well,
When our deep plots do pall:⁸ and that should teach us,

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,

Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certain.

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown⁹ scarf'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;
Finger'd their packet: and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found, Horatio,
A royal knavery; an exact command,—

4 See note on Act III. Sc. 1. The golden couplets alludes to the dove only laying two eggs. The young nestlings when first disclosed are only covered with a yellow down, and the mother rarely leaves the nest, in consequence of the tenderness of her young.

5 I. e. mutineers. See King John, Act II. Sc. 2.

6 The bilboes were bars of iron with fetters annexed to them, by which mutinous or disorderly sailors were anciently linked together. The word is derived from Bilboa, in Spain, where implements of iron and steel were fabricated. To understand Shakespeare's allusion, it should be known that as these fetters connected the legs of the offenders very closely together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Hamlet, in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep. Every motion of one must disturb his partner in confinement. The bilboes are still shown in the Tower, among the other spoils of the Spanish Armada.

7 To pall was to fade or fall away; to become, as it were, dead, or without spirit: from the old French pâler. Thus in Antony and Cleopatra—

'I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.'

8 Malone has told us that the sea-gown appears to have been the usual dress of seamen in Shakespeare's time; but not a word of what it was like. 'Eclavine,' (says Cotgrave,) a sea-gown, a coarse high-collared and short-sleeved gowne, reaching to the mid-leg, and used mostly by seamen and sailors.'

Larded with many several sorts of reasons,—
Importing Denmark's health, and England's too,
With, ho! such bugs¹ and goblins in my life,—
That on the supervise,² no leisure bated,
No, not to stay the grinding of the are,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission; read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear now how I did proceed?

Hor. Ay, beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with villanies,
Or³ I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play;—I sat me down;
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair;
I once did hold it, as our statist⁴ do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service:⁵ Wilt thou know
The effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,—
As England was his faithful tributary;
As love between them like the palm might flourish;
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear,
And stand a comma⁶ 'tween their amities;
And many such like ases of great charge,—
That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement further, more, or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shirving time allow'd.⁷

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordain'd;
I had my father's signet in my purse,
Which was the model of that Danish seal:
Folded the writ up in form of the other;
Subscrib'd it; gave't the impression; plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known: Now, the next day
Was our seafight; and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;

They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Does by their own insinuation grow:

'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.

Hor. Why, what a king is this?

Ham. Does it not, think thee, stand me now upon?

He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother;
Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;

¹ 'With, ho! such bugs and goblins in my life.'—
'With such causes of terror arising from my character and designs.' Bugs were no less terrific than goblins.
We now call them bugbears.

² '—on the supervise, no leisure bated.' The supervise is the looking over; no leisure bated means without any abatement or intermission of time.

³ 'Or,' for ere, before. See Tempest, Act I. Sc. 2.

⁴ Statists are statesmen. Blackstone says, that 'most of our great men of Shakespeare's time wrote very bad hands; their secretaries very neat ones.' This must be taken with some qualification; for Elizabeth's two most powerful ministers, Leicester and Burleigh, both wrote good hands. It is certain that there were some who did write most wretched scrawl, but probably not from affectation; though it was accounted a mechanical and vulgar accomplishment to write a fair hand. The worst and most unintelligible scrawls I have met with, are Sir Richard Sackville's, in Elizabeth's time; and the miserable scribbling of Secretary Conway, of whom James said they had given him a secretary that could neither write nor read.

⁵ Yeoman's service I take to be good substantial service. The ancient yeomen were famous for their staunch valour in the field; and Sir Thomas Smyth says, they were 'the stable troop of footmen that affraide all France.'

⁶ '—stand a comma 'tween their amities.' This is oddly expressed, as Johnson observes: but the meaning appears to be, 'Stand as a comma, i. e. as a note of connexion between their amities, to prevent them from being brought to a period.'

Thrown out his angle for my proper life,
And with such cozenage; is't not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arm; and is't not to be damnd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England,

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;

And a man's life no more than to say, one.

But I am very sorry, good Horatio,

That to Laertes I forgot myself;

For by the image of my cause, I see

The portraiture of his: I'll count⁸ his favours:

But, sure, the bravery of his grief did put me
Into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace: who comes here?

Enter OSRIC.¹⁰

Or. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark.

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir.—Dost know this water-fly?¹¹

Hor. No, my good lord.

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him: He hath much land and fertile;
let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'Tis a chough; but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.

Or. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure,
I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit: Your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Or. I thank your lordship, 'tis very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, sir, 'tis very cold: the wind is northerly.

Or. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet, methinks, it is very sultry and hot; or my complexion—

Or. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,¹²—as 'twere,—I cannot tell how.—My lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[HAMLET moves him to put on his Hat.]

Or. Nay, good my lord; for my ease in good faith,¹³ Sir, here is newly come to court, Laertes:
believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences,¹⁴ of very soft society, and great showing: Indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card¹⁵ or, calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent¹⁶ of what part a gentleman would see.

⁷ 'Not shirving-time allow'd.' That is, without allowing time for the confession of their sins.

⁸ 'Bethink thee, does it not become incumbent upon me to requite him,' &c. Vide note upon King Richard II. Act II. Sc. 3. This passage and the three following speeches are not in the quartos.

⁹ '—I'll count his favours.' Rowe changed this to 'I'll court his favour'; but there is no necessity for change. Hamlet means, 'I'll make account of his favours,' i. e. of his good will; for this was the general meaning of favours in the poet's time.

¹⁰ The quarto of 1603—'Enter a braggart Gentleman.'

¹¹ In Troilus and Cressida, Therites says, 'How the poor world is pestered with such water-flies; dimi-nutions of nature.' The gnats and such like ephemeral insects are not inapt emblems of such busy triflers as Osric.

¹² 'Exceedingly, my lord; 'tis very sultry.'

¹³ '—Igneulum brume at tempore poetas
Accipit endromidem; si dexteris astuto, sudat.'

Juvenal

¹⁴ The folio omits this and the following fourteen speeches; and in their place substitutes, 'Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.'

¹⁵ 'i. e. distinguishing excellencies.'

¹⁶ 'The card or calendar of gentry.' The general preceptor of elegance; the card (chart) by which a gentleman is to direct his course; the calendar by which he is to order his time.

¹⁷ You shall find in him the continent of what part a

Ham. Sir, his defacement suffers no pordition in you;—though, I know, to divide him inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; and yet but raw neither, in respect of his quick sail. But in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article; and his infusion of such dearth¹ and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror; and, who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.²

Os. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Os. Sir?

Ham. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.³

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Os. Of Laertes?

Ham. His purse is empty already; all his golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Os. I know, you are not ignorant—

Ham. I would, you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me.⁴—Well, sir.

Os. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.⁵

Os. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed⁶ he's unfellowed.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Os. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but, well.

Os. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses: against the which he has impawned,⁷ as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers,⁸ and so: Three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilt, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal comest.

gentleman would see.' You shall find him containing and comprising every quality which a gentleman would desire to contemplate for imitation. Perhaps we should read, 'You shall find him the continent.'

1 Dearth, according to Tooke, is 'the third person singular of the verb to dere; it means some cause which *dere*th, i. e. maketh dear; or hurteth, or doth mischief.' That dearth was, therefore, used for scarcity, as well as dearness, appears from the following passage in a MS. petition to the council, by the merchants of London, 8 Edw. VI.: speaking of the causes of the deartheness of cloth, they say, 'This detriment cometh through the dearth of wool, the procurers whereof being a few in number for the augmentation of the same.'—Concey Papers.

2 This speech is a ridicule of the Euphuism, or court jargon of that time.

3 'Is it not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.' This interrogatory remark is very obscure. The sense may be, 'Is it not possible for this fantastic fellow to understand in plain language? You will, however, imitate his jargon admirably, really, sir.' It seems very probable that 'another tongue, is an error of the press for 'mother tongue.'

4 'If you did, it would not tend much toward proving me or confirming me.'—What Hamlet would have added we know not; but surely Shakespeare's use of the word approve, upon all occasions, is against Johnson's explanation of it—'to recommend to approbation.' There is no consistency in the commentators; they rarely look at the prevalent sense of a word in the poet, but explain it many ways, to suit their own views of the meaning of a passage.

5 'I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him, &c.' I dare not pretend to know him, lest I should pretend to an equality: no man can completely know another, but by knowing himself, which is the utmost extent of human wisdom.

6 Meed is merit. Vide King Henry VI. Part III. Act ii. Sc. 1.

7 Impawned. The folio reads imposed. Figurate, in Italian, signifies both to impawn and to lay a wager.

8 The stakes are, indeed, a gage or pledge.—

9 Hangers, that part of the belt by which the sword was suspended.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Os. I knew, you must be edified by the *margent*⁹ ere you had done.

Os. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more german¹⁰ to the matter, if we could carry a cannon by our sides; I would, it might be hangers till then. But, on: Six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish: Why is this impawned, as you call it?

Os. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits;¹¹ he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How, if I answer no?

Os. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, it is the breathing time of day with me: let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him, if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame, and the odd hits.

Os. Shall I deliver you so?

Ham. To this effect, sir; after what flourish your nature will.

Os. I commend my duty to your lordship.

[Exit. Ham. Yours, yours.—He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn.

Os. This lapwing¹² runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply¹³ with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he, (and many more of the same bevy,¹⁴ that, I know, the drossy age dotes on,) only got the time of the time, and outward habit of encounter;¹⁵ a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fanned and winnowed opinions;¹⁶ and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out.

9 'The margent.' The gloss or commentary in old books was usually on the margin of the leaf.

10 I. e. more a kin. 'Those that are german to him, though fifty times removed, shall come under the hanger-man.'—Winter's Tale.

11 The conditions of the wager are thus given in the quarto of 1608:—

'Marry, sir, that young Laertes in twelve venies

At rapier and dagger, do not get three odds of you.'

12 'This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.' Horatio means to call Oerik a raw, unfledged, foolish fellow. It was a common comparison for a forward fool. Thus in Meres's Wits Treasury, 1599:—'As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head, as soon as she is hatched,' &c.

13 Forward lapwing,
He flies with the shell on his head.'

Vittoria Corombona.

14 'He did comply with his dug, before he sucked it.' See Act ii. Sc. 2.

15 The folio reads, 'mine more of the same bevy.'—Mine is evidently a misprint, and more likely for mine (i. e. many) than mine. The quarto of 1604 reads, 'many more of the same breed.'

16 'Outward habit of encounter' is exterior politeness of address.

17 'A kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fanned and winnowed opinions,' &c. The folio reads, fond and winnowed.—The corruption of the quarto, 'propriated and trunnowed,' is not worth attention; and I have no doubt that fond in the folio should be fanned, formerly spelt fan'd, and sometimes even without the apostrophe. Fanned and winnowed are almost always coupled by old writers, for reasons that may be seen under those words in Barret's Alvarado. So Shakespeare himself, in Troilus and Cressida:—

'Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away.'

The meaning is, 'These men have got the cast of the day, a superficial readiness of slight and cursory conversation, a kind of frothy collection of fashionable prattle, which yet carries them through with the most light and inconsequential judgments; but if brought to the trial by the highest breath of rational conversation, the

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: He sends to know, if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes, they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now, or whenever, provided I be so able as now.

Lord. The king, and queen, and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.

Lord. The queen desires you, to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes, before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou would'st not think, how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving,¹ as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it: I will forestall their repair hither, and say, you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury; there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: Since no man, of aught he leaves,—knows;—what is't to leave betimes.² Let be.

Enter King, Queen, LAERTES, Lords, OSRIC, and Attendants, with Foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts the hand of LAERTES into that of HAMLET.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I have done you wrong;

But pardon it, as you are a gentleman. This presence⁴ knows, and you must needs have heard,

How I am punish'd with a sore distraction.

What I have done,

That might your nature, honour, and exception,

Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.

Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never, Hamlet:

If Hamlet from himself be taken away,

And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then? His madness: It's but so,

Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;

His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.

bubbles burst; or, in other words, display their emptiness.¹

1 All that passes between Hamlet and this Lord is omitted in the folio.

2 I.e. misgiving, a giving against, or an internal feeling and prognostic of evil.

3 'Since no man, of aught he leaves,—knows;—What is it to leave betimes?' This is the reading of the folio; the quarto reads, 'Since no man has aught of what he leaves. What is't to leave betimes.' Ham is evidently here a blunder for know. Johnson thus interprets the passage:—'Since no man knows aught of the state which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should we be afraid of leaving life betimes?' Warburton's explanation is very ingenious, but perhaps strains the poet's meaning farther than he intended. 'It is true that by death we lose all the goods of life; yet seeing this loss is no otherwise an evil than as we are sensible of it; and since death removes all sense of it, what matters it how soon we lose them.' This argument against the fear of death has been dilated and placed in a very striking light by the late Mr. Green.—See Diary of a Lover of Literature, Ipswich, 1840, 4to. p. 320.—Shakspeare himself has elsewhere said, 'the sense of death is most in apprehension.'

4 I.e. the king and queen.

5 This line is not in the quarto.

6 I.e. unwounded. This is a piece of satire on fantastical honour. Though nature is satisfied, yet he will

Sir, in his audience.⁴

Let my disclaiming from a purpose'd evil Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot my arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother.

Laer.

I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour, I stand aloof; and will no reconciliation, Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, To keep my name ungorg'd.⁵ But till that time, I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham.

I embrace it freely; And will this brother's wager frankly play.— Give us the foils; come on.

Laer.

Come, one for me. Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer.

You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric.—Cousin Hamlet,

You know the wager?

Ham.

Very well, my lord; Your grace hath laid the odds⁶ o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it: I have seen you both:—

But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well: These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play.]

Os. Ay, my good lord.

King. Set me the stoups⁷ of wine upon that table:—

If Hamlet give the first or second hit,

Or quit in answer of the third exchange,

Let all the battlements their ordnance fire:

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;

And in the cup an union⁸ shall he throw,

Richer than that which four successive kings

In Denmark's crown have worn: Give me the cups;

And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,

The trumpet to the cannoneer without,

The cannons to the heavens, the heaven to earth,

Now the king drinks to Hamlet.—Come, begin;—

And you, the judges, bear a wary eye.

Ham. Come on, sir.

Laer. Come, my lord.

Ham.

One. [They play.]

Laer.

No.

Ham.

Judgment.

Os.

A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer.

Well,—again.

ask advice of older men of the sword, whether artificial honour ought to be contented with Hamlet's apology.

7 The king had wagered six Barbary horses to a few rapiers, poniards, &c.; that is, about twenty to one.—These are the odds here meant. The odds the King means in the next speech were twelve to nine in favour of Hamlet, by Laertes giving him three.

8 Stoup is a common word in Scotland at this day, and denotes a pewter vessel resembling our wine measures; but of no determinate quantity; for there are gallow-stoups, pint-stoups, mitchkin-stoups, &c. The vessel in which water is fetched or kept is also called a water-stoup. A stoup of wine is therefore equivalent to a pitcher of wine.

9 An union is a precious pearl, remarkable for its size. 'And hereupon it is that our dainties and delicacies here at Rome, &c. call them unions, as a man would say singular, and by themselves alone.' To swallow a pearl in a draught seems to have been common to royal and mercantile prodigality. Thus in the second part of 'If You Know Not Me You Know Nobody':—

'Here sixteen thousand pound at one clap goes, Instead of sugar. Gresham drinks this pearl Unto the queen his mistress.'

According to Rondeletus, pearls were supposed to have an exhilarating quality. 'Uniones quæ a conchis, &c. valde cordiales sunt.' Under pretence of throwing a pearl into the cup, the King may be supposed to drop some poisonous drug into the wine. Hamlet subsequently asks him tauntingly, 'Is the union here?'

King. Stay, give me drink: Hamlet, this pearl is thine;
Here's to thy health.—Give him the cup.

[Trumpets sound; and Cannon shot off within.]

Ham. I'll play this bout first, set it by awhile.

Come.—Another hit; What say you? [They play.]

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confess.

King. Our son shall win.

Queen. He's fat, and scant of breath.—

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin, rub thy brows:

The queen carouses¹ to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam,—

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord;—I pray you, pardon me.

King. It is the poison'd cup; it is too late.

[Aside.]

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King.

I do not think it.

Laer. And yet it is almost against my conscience.

[Aside.]

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes: You do but dally;

I pray you, pass with your best violence;

I am afeard, you make a wanton² of me.

Laer. Say you so? come on. [They play.]

Or. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Have at you now.

[LAERTES wounds HAMLET; then, in scuffling, they change Rapiers, and HAMLET wounds LAERTES.]

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come again. [The Queen falls.]

Or. Look to the queen there, ho!

Hor. They bleed on both sides;—How is it, my lord?

Or. How is't, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springs, Oris;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet!

The drink, the drink;—I am poison'd! [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy!—Ho! let the door be lock'd:
Treachery! seek it out. [LAERTES falls.]

Laer. It is here, Hamlet; Hamlet, thou art slain;

No medicine in the world can do thee good,

In thee there is not half an hour's life;

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,

Unbated,³ and evenenom'd: the foul practice

Hath turn'd itself on me: lo, here I lie,

Never to rise again: Thy mother's poison'd;

I can no more; the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point

Evenenom'd too!—Then, venom, to thy work.⁴

[Stabs the King.]

Or. and Lords. Treason! treason!

King. O, yet defend me, friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murd'rous, damned Dane,

Drink off this potion:—Is the union here?

Follow my mother.

Laer. He is justly serv'd; [King dies.]

It is a poison temper'd by himself.—

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee;
Nor thine on me! [Dies.]

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee
I am dead, Horatio:—Wretched queen, adieu!—
You that look pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but mutes or audience to this act,
Had I but time (as this fell sergeant,⁵ death,
Is strict in his arrest,) O, I could tell you,—
But let it be:—Horatio, I am dead;
Thou liv'st; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it;
I am more an antique Roman than a Dane,
Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,—
Give me the cup; let go; by heaven, I'll have it!—
O, God!—Horatio, what a wounded name,
Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me?
If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my story.—

[March afar off, and Shot within.]

What warlike noise is this!

Or. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from

Poland,

To the ambassadors of England gives

This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio;
The potent poison quite o'ercrowes⁶ my spirit;
I cannot live to hear the news from England:
But I do prophesy the election lights
On Fortinbras; he has my dying voice;
So tell him, with the currents, more or less,
Which have solicited,⁷—The rest is silence. [Dies.]

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart;—Good night, sweet prince;

And fights of angels sing thee to thy rest!

Why does the drum come hither? [March within.]

Enter FORTINBRAS, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it, you would see?
If aught of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry cries on havoc!—O, proud death!

What feast is toward in thine eternal cell,
That thou so many princes, at a shot,
So bloodily hast struck?

Ans. The sight is dismal;
And our affairs from England come too late:
The ears are senseless, that should give us hearing,
To tell him, his commandment is fulfill'd,
That Roencrantz and Guildenstern are dead:
Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it the ability of life to thank you;
He never gave commandment for their death.
But since, so jump⁸ upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd: give order, that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view;
And let me speak, to the yet unknown world,
How these things came about: So shall you hear
Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;⁹

1 i. e. the queen drinks to thy good success.

2 i. e. you trifle or play with me as if I were a child.

3 See note on Act iv. Sc. 7.

4 In the quarto of 1603:—

'The poison'd instrument within my hand'

Then venom to thy venom; die, damnd villain:

Come, drink, here lies thy union here. [King dies.]

5 A sergeant was a bailiff or sheriff's officer. Shakspeare, in his 74th Sonnet, has likened death to an arrest:—

'—when that fell arrest,

Without all bail shall carry me away.'

And Joshua Silvester, in his Dubartas:—

'And death, sergeant of the eternal Judge,

Comes very late,' &c.

6 To overcower, is to overcome, to subdue. 'These noblemen laboured with tooth and nail to overcower, and consequently to overthrow one another.'—Hutchinsed's History of Ireland.

7 'The occurrences which have solicited—the occurrences or incidents which have incited.' The sentence is left unfinished.

8 'This quarry cries on havoc!' To cry on, was to exclaim against. I suppose when unfair sportsmen destroyed more game than was reasonable, the censure was to call it havoc.—Johnson.

9 Quarry was the term used for a heap of slaughtered game. See Macbeth, Act iv. Sc. 3.

10 It has been already observed that jump and just, or exactly, are synonymous. Vide note on Act i. Sc. 1

11 'Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts' Of some

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on¹ by cunning, and forc'd cause;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall'n on the inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it.
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow, I embrace my fortune;
I have some rights of memory² in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite me.

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to speak;
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on more;
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Even while men's minds are wild; lest more mis-chance,

On plots and errors, happen.

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
To have prov'd most royally: and, for his passage,
The soldier's music, and the rites of war,
Speak loudly for him.—

Take up the bodies:—Such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.
Go, bid the soldiers shoot. [A dead March.]

[Exeunt, bearing off the dead Bodies; after which, a Peal of Ordnance is shot off.]

The following scene in the first quarto, 1616, differs so materially from the revised play, that it has been thought it would not be unacceptable to the reader:—

Enter Horatio and the Queen.

Hor. Madam, your son is safe arrived in Denmark.
This letter I even now receiv'd of him,
Whereas he writes how he escap'd the danger,
And subtle treason that the king had plotted,
Being crossed by the contention of the winds,
He found the packet sent to the king of England,
Wherein he saw himself betray'd to death,
As at his next conversion with your grace
He will relate the circumstance at full.

Queen. Then I perceive there's treason in his looks,
That seem'd to sugar o'er his villanies:
But I will sooth and please him for a time,
For murderous minds are always jealous;
But know not you, Horatio, where he is?

Hor. Yes, madam, and he hath appointed me
To meet him on the east side of the city
To-morrow morning.

Queen. O fall not, good Horatio, and withal commend me

A mother's care to him, bid him a while guinary and unnatural acts, to which the perpetrator was incited by concupiscence or 'corral stings.'

The allusion is to the murder of old Hamlet by his brother, previous to his incestuous union with Gertrude.

1 i. e. instigated, produced. Instead of 'forced cause,' the quartos read, 'for no cause.'

2 i. e. some rights which are remembered in this kingdom.

Be wary of his presence, lest that he
Fall in that he goes about.

Hor. Madam, never make doubt of that I think by this the news be come to court
He is arriv'd: observe the king, and you shall Quickly find, Hamlet being here,
Things fell not to his mind.

Queen. But what became of Glisterstone and Ro-sencraft?

Hor. He being set ashore, they went for England,
And in the packet there writ down that doom
To be perform'd on them¹ pointed for him:
And by great chance he had his father's seal,
So all was done without discovery.

Queen. Thanks be to Heaven for blessing of the prince.

Horatio, once again I take my leave,
With thousand mother's blessings to my son.

Hor. Madam, adieu!

IF the dramas of Shakespeare were to be characterised, each by the particular excellence which distinguishes it from the rest, we must allow to the tragedy of Hamlet the praise of variety. The incidents are so numerous, that the argument of the play would make a long tale. The scenes are interchangeably diversified with merriment and solemnity: with merriment that includes judicious and instructive observations; and solemnity not strained by poetical violence above the natural sentiments of man. New characters appear from time to time in continual succession, exhibiting various forms of life and particular modes of conversation. The pretended madness of Hamlet causes much mirth, the mournful distraction of Ophelia fills the heart with tenderness, and every personage produces the effect intended, from the apparition that in the first Act chills the blood with horror, to the fop in the last, that exposes affectation to just contempt.

The conduct is perhaps not wholly secure against objections. The action is indeed for the most part in continual progression; but there are some scenes which neither forward nor retard it. Of the feigned madness of Hamlet there appears no adequate cause; for he does nothing which he might not have done with the reputation of sanny. He plays the madman most when he treats Ophelia with so much rudeness which seems to be useless and wanton cruelty.

Hamlet is, through the whole piece, rather an instrument than an agent. After he has, by the stratagem of the play, convicted the King, he makes no attempt to punish him; and his death is at last effected by an incident which Hamlet had no part in producing.

The catastrophe is not very happily produced; the exchange of weapons is rather an expedient of necessity, than a stroke of art. A scheme might easily be formed to kill Hamlet with the dagger, and Laertes with the bowl.

The poet is accused of having shown little regard to poetical justice, and may be charged with equal neglect of poetical probability. The apparition left the regions of the dead to little purpose; the revenge which he demands is not obtained, but by the death of him that was required to take it; and the gratification which would arise from the destruction of an usurper and a murderer, is abated by the untimely death of Ophelia, the young, the beautiful, the harmless, and the pious

JOHNSON

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story is taken from the collection of Novels, by Gio Giraldi Cinthio, entitled Heccatomithi, being the seventh novel of the third decad. No English translation of so early a date as the age of Shakespeare has hitherto been discovered: but the work was translated into French by Gabriel Chappuy, Paris, 1664. The version is not a faithful one: and Dr. Farmer suspects that through this medium the novel came into English.

The name of Othello may have been suggested by some tale which has escaped our researches, as it occurs in Reynold's God's Revenge against Adultery, standing in one of his arguments as follows:—'She marries Othello, an old German soldier.' This history (the eighth) is professed to be an Italian one; and here also the name of Iago occurs. It is likewise found in

The History of the famous Euordanus, Prince of Denmark; with the strange Adventures of Iago, Prince of Saxonia, 4to, 1666. It may indeed be urged, that these names were adopted from the tragedy before us: but every reader who is conversant with the peculiar style and method in which the work of honest John Reyholds is composed, will acquit him of the slightest familiarity with the scenes of Shakespeare.—Steevens.

The time of this play may be ascertained from the following circumstances:—Selymus the Second formed his design against Cyprus in 1569, and took it in 1571. This was the only attempt the Turks ever made upon that island after it came into the hands of the Venetians, (which was in 1473), wherefore the time must fall in with some part of that interval. We learn from the play, that there was a junction of the Turkish fleet at Rhodes, in order for the invasion of Cyprus; that it first came sailing towards Cyprus; then went to Rhodes, there met another squadron, and then returned its way to Cyprus. These are real historical facts, which happened when Mustapha, Selymus's general, attacked Cyprus, in May, 1570; which is therefore the true period of this performance.—See Knolle's History of the Turks, p. 838, 846, 867.—Reed.

The first edition of this play, of which we have any certain knowledge, was printed by N. O. for Thomas Walkly, to whom it was entered on the Stationers' Books, October 6, 1621. The most material variations of this copy from the first folio are pointed out in the notes. The minute differences are so numerous, that to have specified them would only have fatigued the reader. Walkly's Preface will follow these Preliminary Remarks.

Malone first placed the date of the composition of this play in 1611, upon the ground of the allusion, supposed by Warburton, to the creation of the order of baronets. [See Act iii. Sc. 4, note.] On the same ground Mr. Chalmers attributed it to 1614; and Dr. Drake assigned the middle period of 1612. But this allusion being controverted, Malone subsequently affixed to it the date of 1604, because, as he asserts, 'we know it was acted in that year.' He has not stated the evidence for this decisive fact; and Mr. Boswell was unable to discover it among his papers; but gives full credit to it, on the ground that 'Mr. Malone never expressed himself at random.' The allusion to Pliny, translated by Philemon Holland, in 1601, in the simile of the Pontic Sea; and the supposed imitation of a passage in Cornwallis's Essays, of the same date, referred to in the note cited above, seem to have influenced Mr. Malone in settling the date of this play. What is more certain is, that it was played before King James at court, in 1613; which circumstance is gathered from the MS. of Vertue the Engraver.

'If (says Schlegel) Romeo and Juliet shines with the colours of the dawn of morning, but a dawn whose purple clouds already announce the thunder of a sultry day, Othello is, on the other hand, a strongly shaded picture; we might call it a tragical Rembrandt.'

Should these parallels between pictorial representation and dramatic poetry be admitted,—for I have my doubts of their propriety,—this is a far more judicious ascription than that of Stevens, who, in a concluding note to this play, would compare it to a picture from the school of Raphael. Poetry is certainly the pabulum of art; and this drama, as every other of our immortal bard, offers a series of pictures to the imagination of such varied hues, that artists of every school might from hence be furnished with subjects. What Schlegel means to say appears to be, that it abounds in strongly contrasted scenes, but that gloom predominates.

Much has been written on the subject of this drama; and there has been some difference of opinion in regard to the rank in which it deserves to be placed. For my own part I should not hesitate to place it on the first. Perhaps this preference may arise from the circumstance of the domestic nature of its action, which lays a stronger hold upon our sympathy; for overpowering as is the pathos of Lear, or the interest excited by Macbeth, it comes less near to the business of life.

In strong contrast of character, in delineation of the workings of passion in the human breast, in manifestations of profound knowledge of the inmost recesses of the heart, this drama exceeds all that has ever issued from mortal pen. It is indeed true that 'no eloquence is capable of painting the overwhelming catastrophe in Othello,—the pressure of feelings which measure out in a moment the abysses of eternity.'

WALKLY'S PREFACE TO OTHELLO,

ED. 1622, 4to.

THE STATIONER TO THE READER.

To set forth a booke without an Epistle, were like to the old English proverbe, 'A blew coat without a badge;' and the author being dead, I thought good to take that piece of worke upon me: To commend it, I will not; for that which is good, I hope every man will commend without intreaty: and I am the bolder, because the Author's name is sufficient to vent his worke. Thus leaving every one to the liberty of judgment, I have ventured to print this play, and leave it the general censure. Yours,
THOMAS WALKLY.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

DUKE OF VENICE.

BRABANTIO, a Senator.

Two other Senators.

GRATIANO, Brother to Brabantio.

LODOVICO, Kinsman to Brabantio.

OTHELLO, the Moor;

CASSIO, his Lieutenant;

IAGO, his Ancient.

RODERIGO, a Venetian Gentleman.

MONTANO, Othello's Predecessor in the Government of Cyprus.

Clown, Servant to Othello.

Herald.

DESDEMONA, Daughter to Brabantio, and Wife to Othello.

EMILIA, Wife to Iago.

BIANCA, a Courtesan, Mistress to Cassio.

Officers, Gentlemen, Messengers, Musicians, Sailors, Attendants, &c.

SCENE, for the first Act, in Venice; during the rest of the Play, at a Seaport in Cyprus.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Venice. A Street. Enter RODRIGO and IAGO.

Roderigo.

TELL me, never tell me, I take it much unkindly, That thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse, As if the strings were thine,—should'st know of this.

Iago. 'Sblood, but you will not hear me:— If ever I did dream of such a matter, Abhor me.

Rod. Thou told'st me, thou didst hold him in thy hate.

1 To cap is to salute by taking off the cap: it is still an academic phrase. The folio reads, 'Off-capp'd.'

2 Circumstance signifies circumlocution.

3 And therefore without circumstance, to the point, instruct me what I am?

The Picture, by Massinger.

4 Iago means to represent Cassio as a man merely conversant with civil matters, and who knew no more of a squadron than the number of men it contained. He afterwards calls him 'this counter-caster.'

Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city,

In personal suit to make me his lieutenant, Off-capp'd to him;—and, by the faith of man, I know my price, I am worth no worse a place: But he, as loving his own pride and purposes, Evades them, with a bombast circumstance,¹ Horribly stuff'd with epithets of war; And, in conclusion, nonsuits My mediators; for, certes, says he, I have already chose my officer.

And what was he? Forsooth, a great arithmetician,² One Michael Cassio, a Florentine, A fellow almost damnd in a fair wife;³

4 The folio reads, damnd. This passage has given rise to much discussion. Mr. Tyrwhitt thought that we should read, 'almost damnd in a fair wife,' alluding to the judgment denounced in the Gospel against those 'on whom all men speak well.' I should be contented to adopt his emendation, but with a different interpretation:—'A fellow almost damnd (i. e. lost from luxurious habits) in the serene or equable tenor of

That never set a squadron in the field,
Nor the division of a battle knows
More than a spinster; unless the bookish theoretic,¹
Wherein the togged consuls² can propose
As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiership. But, he, sir, had the election:
And I,—of whom his eyes had seen the proof,
At Rhodes, at Cyprus; and on other grounds,
Christian and heathen,—must be lee'd and calm'd³
By debtor and creditor, this counter-caster;⁴
He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,
And I (God bless the mark!) his Moorship's ancient.

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

Iago. But there's no remedy, 'tis the curse of service;

Preferment goes by letter,⁵ and affection,
Not by the old gradation, where each second
Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself,
Whether I in any just term am affi'd⁶
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him, then.

Iago. O, sir, content you;

I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and, when he's old,

cashier'd;

Whip me such honest knaves:⁷ Others there are,
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords,
Do well thrive by them, and, when they have lin'd⁸
their coats,

Do themselves homage: these fellows have some soul;

And such a one do I profess myself.

For, sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,

Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:

In following him, I follow but myself:

Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,

But seeming so, for my peculiar end:

For when my outward action doth demonstrate

The native act and figure of my heart

In compliment extern,⁹ 'tis not long after

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve

For daws¹⁰ to peck at: I am not what I am.

Rod. What a full fortune¹¹ does the thick-lips owe,
If he can carry't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him: make after him, poison his delight, his life.¹² The passage as it stands at present has been said by Steevens to mean, according to Iago's licentious manner of expressing himself, no more than a man 'very near being married.' This seems to have been the case in respect to Cassio. Act IV. Sc. 1, Iago speaking to him of Bianca, says, 'Why, the cry goes that you shall marry her.' Cassio acknowledges that such a report had been raised, and adds—'This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her love and self-flattery, not out of my promise.' Iago then, having heard this report before, very naturally alludes to it in his present conversation with Roderigo.—Mr. Boswell suspects that there may be some corruption in the text.

1 i. e. theory. See All's Well that Ends Well, Act IV. Sc. 2.

2 The rulers of the state, or civil governors. The word is used in the same sense in Tamburlaine.

3 Both we will reign the consuls of the earth.

By togged is meant peaceable, in opposition to warlike qualifications, of which he had been speaking. 'Cedant arma togæ.' The folio reads, 'tongued consuls,' which agrees better with the words which follow:—'mere prattle, without practice.'

3 It was anciently the practice to reckon up sums with counters. To this the poet alludes in Cymbeline, Act V. —'It sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge. Your neck, sir, is pen, book, and counters.'

Proclaim him in the streets; incense her kinsmen,
And, though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies: though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw such changes of vexation on't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house: I'll call aloud.

Iago. Do; with like timorous accent, and dire yell,

As when, by¹⁰ night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What ho! Brabantio! signior Brabantio!

ho!

Iago. Awake! what ho! Brabantio! thieves!
thieves! thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags!
Thieves! thieves!

BRABANTIO, above, at a Window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons?
What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Bra. Why? wherefore ask you this?

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are robb'd; for shame,
put on your gown:

Your heart is burst,¹¹ you have lost half your soul;
Even now, very now, an old black ram

Is tupping your white ewe. Arise, arise;

Awake the snorting citizens with the bell,

Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you:

Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I; What are you?

Rod. My name is—Roderigo.

Bra.

The worse welcome:

I have charg'd thee, not to haunt about my doors:

In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,

My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,

Being full of supper, and distempering¹² draughts,

Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come

To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, sir, sir, sir,——

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,

My spirit, and my place, have in them power

To make this bitter to thee.

Rod.

Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.¹³

Rod.

Most grave Brabantio,

In simple and pure soul I come to you.

Iago. 'Zounds, sir, you are one of those, that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. Because we come to do you service, you think we are ruf-

4 i. e. by recommendation.

5 'Do I stand within any such terms of propinquity to the Moor, as that I am bound to love him?' The first quarto has assign'd.

6 Knave is here used for servant, but with a sly mixture of contempt.

7 Outward show of civility.

8 This is the reading of the folio. The first quarto reads 'daws.'

9 Full fortune is complete good fortune: to owe is to possess. So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

—not the imperious show

Of the full-fortun'd Caesar.

And in Cymbeline:—

'Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine.'

10 'By night and negligence,' means 'in the time of night and negligence.' Nothing is more common than this mode of expression: we should not hesitate at the expression, 'By night and day.'

11 i. e. is broken.

12 That is, 'intoxicating draughts.' In Hamlet, the king is said to be 'marvellous distemper'd with wine.' See King Henry V. Act II. Sc. 2.

13 That is, we are in a populous city, mine is not a lone house, where a robbery might easily be committed. Grange is, strictly, the farm of a monastery; grangia, Lat. from grangum: but, provincially, any lone house or solitary farm is called a grange. So in Measure for Measure:—'At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.'

Isabel: You'll have your daughter covered with a Barbary horse; you'll have your nephews' neigh to you: you'll have coursers for cousins, and gennets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. I am one, sir, that comes to tell you, your daughter and the Moor are now making the beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer: I know thee, Rodorigo.

Rod. Sir, I will answer anything. But I beseech you,

'H't be to your pleasure, and most wise consent, (As partly, I find, it is,) that your fair daughter At this odd-even¹ and dull watch² of the night, Transported—with no worse nor better guard, But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,— To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor,— If this be known to you, and your allowance,³ We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs; But if you know not this, my manners tell me, We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe, That, from the sense of all civility, I thus would play and trifle with your reverence: Your daughter,—if you have not given her leave,— I say again, hath made a gross revolt; Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes, In an extravagant⁴ and wheeling stranger, Of here and every where: Straight satisfy yourself: If she be in her chamber, or your house, Let loose on me the justice of the state For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho! Give me a taper:—call up my people:— This accident is not unlike my dream, Belief of it oppresses me already:— Light, I say! light!

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you: It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place, To be produc'd, (as, if I stay, I shall,) Against the Moor: For, I do know, the state,— However this may gall him with some check,— Cannot with safety cast⁵ him! for he's embark'd With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars, (Which even now stand in act,) that, for their souls, Another of his fathom they have not, To lead their business: in which regard, Though I do hate him as I do hell pains, Yet, for necessity of present life, I must show out a flag and sign of love, Which is, indeed, but sign. That you shall surely find him.

Lead to the Sagittary the rais'd search; And there will I be with him. So, farewell. [Exit.]

1 Nephews here mean grand-children. See King Henry VI. Part I. and King Richard III.

2 i. e. horses for relations. A gennet is a Spanish or Barbary horse.

3 A profane wretch is an unlucky or a wicked one. 4 Faire la bete a deux dos is a French proverbial expression, which needs no explanation. See the notes to any edition of Rabelais, or Le Roux's Dictionnaire Comique.

5 This odd-even appears to mean the interval between twelve at night and one in the morning. So in Macbeth:

What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

6 i. e. your approbation.

7 That is, in opposition to or departing from the sense of all civility. So in Twelfth Night:—

'But this is from my commission.' And in The Mayor of Queenborough, by Middleton, 1661:—

'But this is from my business.'

8 Extravagant is here again used in its Latin sense, for wandering. Thus in Hamlet:—'The extravagant and erring spirit.' Sir Henry Wootton thus uses it:—'These two accidents, precisely true, and known to few, I have reported as not altogether extravagant from my purpose.' Parallel, etc. between Buckingham and Enter, below, BRABANTIO, and Servants with Torch.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is: And what's to come of my despoised time,¹¹ Is wrought but bitterness.—Now, Rodorigo, Where didst thou see her?—O, unhappy girl!— With the Moor, sayst thou?—Who would be a father?—

How didst thou know 'twas she? O, thou deceiv'st me

Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more lamps;

Raise all my kindred.—Are they married, think you?

Rod. Truly, I think, they are

Bra. O, heaven!—How got she out!—O, treason of the blood!

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds By what you see them act.—Is there not charms,¹² By which the property of youth and maidhood May be abus'd?¹³ Have you not read, Rodorigo, Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir; I have, indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother.—O, that you had had her!

Some one way, some another.—Do you know Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think, I can discover him; if you please To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house I'll call; I may command at most.—Get weapons, ho!

And raise some special officers of night.— On, good Rodorigo;—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Street. Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Attendants.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men, Yet do I hold it very stuff¹⁴ of the conscience, To do no contriv'd murder; I lack iniquity Sometimes, to do me service: Nine or ten times I had thought to have jerk'd him here under the ribs.

Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he pratled,¹⁵

And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms Against your honour, That, with the little godliness I have, I did full hard forbear him. But, I pray, sir, Are you fast married? for, be sure of this,— That the magnifico¹⁶ is much belov'd; And hath, in his effect, a voice potential:¹⁷ As double as the duke's; he will divorce you;

Essex.—In is here used for on, a common substitution in ancient phraseology. Pope and others, not aware of this, altered it, and read, 'To an extravagant' he 10 That is, dismiss him, reject him.

11 Despoised time is time of no value: time in which 'There's nothing serious in mortality; The wife of life is drawn, and the mere drags Are left this rank to brag of.'

So in Romeo and Juliet:—

Of a despoised life clos'd in my breast.

The curtain'd sleeper.' Macbeth.

14 This expression to common readers appears harsh. Stuff of the conscience, is substance or essence of the conscience. Shakespeare uses the word in the same sense, and in a manner yet more harsh in Macbeth:—

'Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of this perilous stuff.'

15 'Of whom is this said?—Of Rodorigo.'—See above.

16 The chief men of Venice are by a peculiar name called magnifico, i. e. magnificent. See Ben Jonson's Volpone.

17 i. e. as mighty, as powerful: as double, means as strong, as forcible, as double in effect as that of the duke, whose voice of course carried great sway with it, and who is said to have had extraordinary privileges, influencing every court and council of the state.

Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law, (with all his might, to enforce it on,)
Will give him cable.

Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services, which I have done the signior,
Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,
(Which, when I know that boasting is an honour,
I shall promulgate,) I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege;¹ and my desert²
May speak, unbanned,³ to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused⁴ free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For the sea's worth.⁵ But, look! what lights come yonder?

Enter Cassio, at a Distance, and certain Officers with Torches.

Iago. These are the raised father, and his friends:
You were best go in.

Oth. Not I: I must be found;
My parts, my title, and my perfect seal,
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. By Janus, I think so.
Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant,
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general;
And he requires your haste, post-haste⁶ appearance,
Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?
Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine;
It is a business of some heat: the galleys
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls,⁷ rais'd, and met,
Are at the duke's already: You have been hotly call'd for;

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate hath sent about three several quests,⁸
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.

1 'Men who have sat upon royal thrones.' So in Grafton's Chronicle, p. 448:—'Incontinent, after that he was placed in the royal siege,' &c.

2 Desmerite has the same meaning in Shakespeare as merits. Mereos and demeritos had the same meaning in the Roman language. 'Demerit,' (says Bullokar,) a deservit; also, (on the contrary, and as it is most commonly used at this day,) ill-deserving.

3 Mr. Fusell (and who was better acquainted with the sense and spirit of Shakespeare?) explains this passage as follows:—'I am his equal or superior in rank; and were I not so, such are my merits, that unbanned, without the addition of patrician or senatorial dignity, they may speak to as proud a fortune,' &c. At Venice, the demerit, as well as the toga, is a badge of aristocratic honours to this day.

4 I. e. unsettled, free from domestic cares.
5 Pliny, the naturalist, has a chapter on the riches of the sea. The expression seems to have been proverbial. Thus in Davenant's Cruel Brother, 1690—
— he would not lose that privilege
For the sea's worth.

6 So in King Henry VI., Act i.—
— As rich with praise,
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea,
With sunken wreck and sumless treasures.'

7 So in Measure for Measure—
'The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost!'

8 These words were ordinarily written on the covers of letters or packets requiring the most prompt and speedy conveyance. Often reduplicated thus:—'Haste, haste, haste, post-haste!'

6 See note 2, p. 815

9 Quests are here put for messengers; properly it signified searchers. Vide Cotgrave, in questeur.

10 A carack, or carriack, was a ship of great burthen, a Spanish galleon; so named from caraca, a lading, or freight.

11 In the third scene of the third act, Iago says:—
'Bidd Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,
Know of your love?'

'Oth. From first to last.'

I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you.

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here? [Exit.

Iago. 'Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land
carack;¹⁰

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. To who?''

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?

Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for you.

Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, and Officers of Night, with Torches and Weapons.

Iago. It is Brabantio:—general, be advis'd;¹²

He comes to bad intent.

Oth. Hols! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Br. Down with him, thief!

[They draw on both sides.

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for you.

Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.—

Good signior, you shall more command with years,
Than with your weapons.

Br. O, thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd
my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her:

For I'll refer me to all things of sense,

If she in chains of magic were not bound,

Whether a maid—so tender, fair, and happy;

So opposite to marriage, that she shunn'd¹³

The wealthy curied¹⁴ darlings of our nation,

Would ever have, to incur our general mock,

Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom

Of such a thing as thou: to fear, not to delight.¹⁵

[Judge me the world, if 'tis not roas in sense,¹⁶

That thou hast practis'd on her with foul charms;

Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs, or minerals,

That waken motion;¹⁷—I'll have it disputed on;

'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking.

I therefore apprehend and do attach thee.]

Cassio's seeming ignorance might therefore only be affected, in order to keep his friend's secret till it became publicly known.

12 I. e. be cautious, be discreet.

13 Sir W. Davenant uses the same expression in his Just Italian, 1690—
'The curied and silken nobles of the town.'

Agals:—
'Such as the curied youth of Italy.'

It was the fashion of the poet's time for lucky gallants to wear 'a curied bush of frizzled hair.' See Hall's Satires, ed. 1824, book iii. sec. 6. Shakespeare has in other places alluded to the fashion of curling the hair among persons of rank and fashion. Speaking of Tarquin, in The Rape of Lucrece, he says:—
'Let him have time to tear his curied hair.'

And Edgar, in Lear, when he was 'proud in heart and mind,' curied his hair. Turnus, in the twelfth Æneid, speaking of Æneas, says:—
— federa in pulvere crines
Vibratos calido furore.

14 'Of such a thing as thou: a thing to fear (I. e. terrify, not to delight.' So in the next scene:—
'To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on.'

15 The lines in comchets are not in the first edition, 4to, 1622.

16 The old copy reads, 'That waken motion.' The emendation is Hamner's. Motion is elsewhere used by our poet precisely in the sense required here. So in Measure for Measure:—
— one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense.'

And in a subsequent scene of this play:—'But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unblinded lusts.' So in A Mad World, my Masters, by Middleton, 1606:—
'And in myself sooth up adulterous motions.'

To waken is to incite, to stir up. We have in the present play, 'waken'd wrath.' And in Shakespeare's 11th Sonnet, 'waken'd hate.' Brabantio afterwards asserts:—
'That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood
He wrought upon her.'

For an abuser of the world, a practiser
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant:—
Lay hold upon him; if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it
Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go,
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison: till fit time
Of law, and course of direct session,
Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?
How may the duke be therewith satisfied;
Whose messengers are here about my side,
Upon some present business of the state,
To bring me to him?

Off. 'Tis true, most worthy signior,
The duke's in council; and your noble self,
I am sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council!
In this time of the night!—Bring him away:
Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,
Or any of my brothers of the state,
Cannot but feel this wrong, as 'twere their own:
For if such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves, and pagans,¹ shall our statesmen be.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Council Chamber.—
The Duke, and Senators, sitting at a Table;
Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition² in these news,
That gives them credit.

1 Sen. Indeed, they are disproportion'd;
My letters say, a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.
2 Sen. And mine, two hundred:

But though they jump not on a just account,
(As in these cases, where the aim³ reports,
'Tis oft with difference,) yet do they all confirm
A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment;
I do not so secure me in the error,
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

Sailor. [Within.] What ho! what ho! what ho!

Enter an Officer with a Sailor.

Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Duke. Now; the business?

Sailor. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state,
By signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1 This passage has been completely misunderstood.—Pagan was a word of contempt; and the reason will appear from its etymology:—Paganus, villanus vel incultus. Et derivatur a pagus quod est villa. Et quicunque habitat in villa est paganus. Præterea quicunque est extra civitatem Del, i. e. ecclesiam, dicitur paganus. Anglice, a paynim.—Ortus Vocabulorum, 1528. I know not whether pagan was ever used to designate a clown or rustic; but paganical and paganation, in a kindred sense, were familiar to our elder language. Malone thinks that 'Brabantio is meant to allude to the common condition of all blacks, who come from their own country both slaves and pagans; and that he uses the word in contempt of Othello. If he is suffered to escape with impunity, we may expect to see all our offices of state filled up by the pagans and bond-slaves of Africa.'

2 Composition for consistency. It has been before observed that news was considered of the plural number by our ancestors.

3 Aim is guess, conjecture. The quarto reads, 'they aim reports.' The meaning appears to be, 'In these cases where conjecture tells the tale.'—Aim is again used as a substantive in Julius Cæsar:—

'What you would work me to, I have some aim.'
4 'Bring it to the test, examine it by reason, it will be found counterfeit.'

5 That he may carry it with less dispute, with diminished opposition.

1 Sen. This cannot be,
By no assay of reason;⁴ 'tis a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze: When we consider
The importance of Cyprus to the Turk;
And let ourselves again but understand,
That, as it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question⁵ bear it,
[For that it stands not in such warlike brace,⁶
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in:—if we make thought of
this,
We must not think, the Turk is so unskilful,
To leave that latest which concerns him first;
Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gain,
To wake, and wage,⁷ a danger profitless.]
Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.
Off. Here is more news.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomates, reverend and gracious,
Steering with due course towards the isle of Rhodes,
Have there injoin'd them with an after fleet.

1 Sen. Ay, so I thought:—How many, as you guess?

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now do they retrace
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Montano,

Your trusty and most valiant servitor,
With his free duty recommends you thus,
And prays you to believe him.⁸

Duke. 'Tis certain then for Cyprus,— Marcus Lucchese, is he not in town?

1 Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from us; wish⁹ him post-post-haste:
despatch.

1 Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the valiant Moor.

Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ
you

Against the general enemy Ottoman.¹⁰
I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior;

[To BRABANTIO.]
We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I yours: Good your grace, pardon
me;

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business, Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
care¹¹

Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature,
That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,
And it is still itself.

6 I. e. in such state of defence. To arm was called to brace on the armour. The seven following lines were added since the first edition in quarto, 1623.

7 To wake is to undertake. 'To wage law (in the common acceptation) seems to be to follow, to urge, drive on, or prosecute the law or law-suits; as to wage war is præliari, bellare, to drive on the war, to fight in battels as warriors do.'—Blount's Glossography, p. 82.

8 'He entreats you not to doubt the truth of this intelligence.'

9 I. e. 'a desire him to make all possible haste.' The folio reads:—

'Write from us to him, post, post-haste, despatch.'
10 It was part of the policy of the Venetian state to employ strangers, and even Moors, in their wars. 'By lands they are served of strangers, both for generals, for capitaines, and for all other men of warre, because theyr lawe permiteth not any Venetian to be capitaine over an armie by lande; fearing, I thinke, Cæsar's example.'—Thomas's History of Italy, p. 82. See also Contarini's Republic of Venice, by Lewkenor, 1590, and Howall's Letters, sect. i. let. xxviii.

11 juvenumque prodia

Publica cura.

Steevens would read this line thus:—
'Rais'd me from bed; nor doth the general care—' omitting Hath and my, which he considers playhouse interpolations; by which, he says, the metre of this tragedy is too frequently deranged.

Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to speak, such was the process;
And of the cannibals that each other eat,
The anthropophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.¹ These things to hear,

Would Desdemona seriously incline;
But still the house affairs would draw her thence;
Which ever as she could with haste despatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: Which I observing,
Took once a pleasant hour; and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intensively:² I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore³—In faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange;

'Twas piteous, 'twas wondrous piteous:
She wish'd, she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd

me;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake:
She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.
This only is the witchcraft I have us'd;
Here comes the lady, let her witness it.

Enter DESDEMONA, IAGO, and Attendants.

Duke. I think, this tale would win my daughter too.

Good Brabantio,
Take up this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use,
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak;
If she confess, that she was half the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man!—Come hither, gentle mistress;
Do you perceive in all this noble company,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty:
To you, I am bound for life, and education;
My life, and education, both do learn me
How to respect you; you are the lord of duty, ill. p. 14.—I have followed the suggestion of Mr. Gifford, and restored the reading of the second folio; convinced by his reasoning, and believing that idle might easily be substituted for wilde, in the earlier copies, by a mere typographical error.

1 Nothing excited more universal attention than the account brought by Sir Walter Raleigh, on his return from his celebrated voyage to Guiana, in 1595, of the cannibals, amazons, and especially of the nation—

— whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.

See his Narrative in Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. ed. 1600, fol. p. 642, et seq. and p. 677, &c. A short extract of the more wonderful passages was also published in Latin and in several other languages, in 1600, adorned with copper-plates, representing these cannibals, amazons, and headless people, &c. A copy of one of the plates is given in the variorum editions of Shakspeare. These extraordinary reports were universally credited; and Othello therefore assumes no other character but what was very common among the celebrated commanders of the poet's time.

2 Intention and attention were once synonymous. Intensive, which intention well and is earnestly bent to a thing, says Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616.

3 To over upon faith or honour was considered swearing, equally with a solemn appeal to God. See Whitaker's Vindication of Mary, Queen of Scots, vol. ii. p. 487.

4 i. e. 'let me speak as yourself would speak, were you not too much heated with passion.'—Sir J. Reynolds.

I am hitherto your daughter: But here's my hand—
And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Bra. God be with you!—I have done:—
Please it your grace, on to the state affairs;
I had rather to adopt a child, than get it.—
Come hither, Moor:
I here do give thee that with all my heart,
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee.—For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.—I have done, my lord.

Duke. Let me speak like yourself;⁵ and lay a sentence,
Which as a grievance, or stop, may help these lovers
Into your favour.

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended,⁶
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended,
To mourn a mischief that is past and gone,
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.
What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd, that smiles, steals something from the thief;

He robs himself, that spends a bootless grief.
Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus so beguile;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile.
He bears the sentence well, that nothing bears:
But the free comfort which from thence he bears:
But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow,
That, to pay grief, must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:
But words are words; I never yet did hear,
That the bruise'd heart was pierced through the ear.⁷

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus:—Othello, the fortune of the place is best known to you: And though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects, throws a more safer voice on you; you must therefore be content to slubber⁸ the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down:⁹ I do agnize¹⁰

5 Grieve or grieve is a step; from grie, French. The word occurs again in Timon of Athens:—
'— for every grize of fortune

Is smooth'd by that below.'

Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus, has degreess in the same sense:—

'Whom when we saw lie spread on the degrees.'

6 This is expressed in a common proverbial form, in Love's Labour's Lost:—

'Past cure is still past care.'

7 i. e. 'that the wounds of sorrow were ever cured by the words of consolation.' Pierced is here used for penetrated. Spenser has employed the word in the same figurative sense, Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9:—
'Whose successful words penetrated his hart so neare
That he was rapt with double ravishment.'

8 To slubber here means to obscure. So in Jeronimo, 1606, first part:—
'The evening too begins to slubber the day.'

The latter part of this metaphor has already occurred in Macbeth:—
'— golden opinions

Which should be worn now in their newest gloss.'

9 A driven bed is a bed for which the fastenings have been selected by driving with a fan, which separates the light from the heavy.

10 To agnize is to acknowledge, confess, or avow. Thus in a Summarie Report, &c. of the Speaker relative to Mary Queen of Scots, A.D. 1566:—'A repentant convert agnizing her Majesty's great mercie,' &c. It sometimes signified 'to know by some token, to admit, or allow.'

A natural and prompt alacrity,
I find in hardness; and do undertake
These present wars against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife;
Due reference of place, and exhibition.¹
With such accommodation, and besort,
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please,
Be't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts,
By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend a gracious ear;²
And let me find a charter in your voice,³
To assist my simplicity.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence and storm of fortunes⁴
May trumpet to the world; my heart's subdued
Even to the very quality⁵ of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours, and his valiant parts,
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and be go to the war,
The rites, for which I love him, are bereft me,
And I a heavy interia shall support
By his dear absence; Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords—hence! you, let her will

Have a free way.

Vouch with me, heaven; I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat (the young affects,
In me defunct) and proper satisfaction;⁶
But to be free and bounteous to her mind:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant,
For she is with me: No, when light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid seal with wanton dulness
My speculative and active instruments,⁷

1 'I desire that proper disposition be made for my wife, that she may have a fit place appointed for her residence, and such allowance, accommodation, and attendance as befits her rank.' Exhibition for allowance has already occurred in King Lear, and in The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

2 Thus in the quarto 1622. The folio, to avoid the repetition of the same epithet, reads:—

'—Most gracious duke,

To my unfolding lend a prosperous ear.'

3 i. e. a praiseworthy ear.

4 That is, 'let your favour privilege me.'

5 By her 'downright violence and storm of fortunes' Desdemona means, the bold and decisive measure she had taken, of following the dictates of passion, and giving herself to the Moor, regardless of her parents' displeasure, the forms of her country, and the future inconveniences she might be subject to, by 'tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortune, in an extravagant and wheeling stranger, of here and every where.' This was truly taking her fortunes by storm.

6 Quality here, as in other passages of Shakespeare, means profession. 'My heart is so entirely devoted to Othello, that I will even encounter the dangers of his military profession with him.' The quarto reads, 'My heart's subdued even to the utmost pleasure of my lord.'

7 Stevens reads, at the suggestion of Sir T. Hamner:—

'Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,

In my distinct and proper satisfaction.'

Malone reads defunct instead of distinct. In the Bondman of Massinger we have a passage evidently copied from this speech of Othello:—

'—Let me wear

Your colours, lady, and though youthful heats,

That leak no further than your outward form,

Are long since buried in me, while I live.

I am a constant lover of your mind.' &c.

Mr. Offord observes that, 'as this shows how Shakespeare's contemporaries understood the lines, it should, I think, with us be decisive of their meaning.'—The

That my disports corrupt and taint my business,
Let housewives make a skillet of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!'

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going: the affair cries—haste,
And speed must answer it; you must hence to-night.

Des. To-night, my lord?

Duke.

This night.

Oth. With all my heart

Duke. At nine if the morning here we'll meet again.

Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall cur commission bring to you:
With such things else of quality and respect,
As doth import you.

Oth. Please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust:

To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.—

Good night to every one.—And; noble signior,
[To BRABANTIO,

If virtue no delighted¹⁰ beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

1 Sen. Adieu, brave Moor! use Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor; have a quick eye to see;

She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.]

Oth. My life upon her faith.—Honest Iago,

My Desdemona must I leave to thee;

I pray thee, let thy wife attend on her;

And bring them after in the best advantage.¹¹

Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour

Of love, of worldly matters and direction,

To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt OTHELLO and DESDEMONA.]

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinkst thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incontinently drown myself.

admirers of Shakespeare cannot but recollect with dismay the prodigious mass of conjectural criticism accumulated on this simple passage, as well as the melancholy preface with which it terminates; that after all 'it will probably prove a lasting source of doubt and controversy.' I confess I see little or rather no occasion for either: nor can I possibly conceive why, after the rational and unforced explanation of Johnson, the worthless reveries of Theobald, Tollet, &c. were admitted.—Affects occur incessantly in the sense of passions, affections: young affects are therefore perfectly synonymous with youthful heats. Othello, like Timon, was not an old man, though he had lost the fire of youth; the critics might therefore have dismissed their concern for the lady, which they have so delicately communicated for the edification of the rising generation. Mr. Offord suggests that Shakespeare may have given affect in the singular to correspond with heat. Affect is also used for passion, in an Elegy on the Death of Sir Thomas Wyatt, by Lord Surrey:—

'An eye whose judgment none affect could blinde,

Friendes to allure, and foes to reconcile.'

Dr. Johnson's explanation is:—'I ask it not (says Othello) to please appetite, or satisfy loose desires, the passions of youth which I have now outlived, or for any particular gratification of myself, but merely that I may indulge the wishes of my wife.' Upon had previously changed my, the reading of the old copy, to me; but he has printed affects, not seeming to know that affects could be a noun.

7 I. a. cause.

8 Thus the folio; except that, instead of active instruments, it has offic'd instrument. The quarto reads 'And feather'd Cupid folla,' &c. Speculative instruments, in Shakespeare's language, are the eyes; and active instruments, the hands and feet. To seel is to close up. The meaning of the passage appears to be, 'When the pleasures and idle toys of love make me unfit either for seeing the duties of my office, or for the ready performance of them.'

9 The quarto reads reputation

10 Delighted for delighting.

11 I. a. last opportunity.

Iago. Well, if thou dost, I shall never love thee after it. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live, when to live is a torment: and then have we a prescription to die, when death is our physician.

Iago. O, villainous! I have looked upon the world for four times seven years!¹ and since I could distinguish between a benefit and an injury, I never found a man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a Guinea-hen,² I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess, it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in virtue to amend it.

Iago. Virtue? a fig! 'tis in ourselves, that we are thus, or thus. Our bodies are our gardens; to the which, our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract it with many; either to have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry: why, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance³ of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: But we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted⁴ lusts; whereof I take this, that you call—love, to be a sect,⁵ or scion.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: Drown thyself? drown cats, and blind puppies. I have professed me thy friend, and I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness; I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow these wars; defeat thy favour with an usurped beard;⁶ I say, put money in thy purse. In cannot be, that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor,—put money in thy purse;—nor he his to her: it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration;⁷—put but money in thy purse.—These Moors are changeable in their wills:—fill thy purse with money: the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida.⁸ She must change for youth; when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice.—She must have change, she must; therefore put money in thy purse.—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: If sanctimony and a frail vow, betwixt an erring⁹ barbarian and a superstitious Venetian, be not too hard for my wits, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hanged in compassing thy joy, than to be drowned and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago. Thou art sure of me:—Go, make money;—I have told thee often, and I retell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: My cause is hearted:¹⁰ thine hath no less reason: Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered. Traverse;¹¹ go: provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow.—Adieu

Rod. Where shall we meet? the morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Rodrigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear.

Rod. I am changed. I'll sell all my land.

Iago. Go to; farewell: put money enough in your purse. [Exit RODRIGO.]

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse:
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I would time expend with such a snipe,¹²
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
He has done my office: I know not if 't be true;
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do, as if for surety.¹³ He holds me well;
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now;
To get his place, and to plume¹⁴ up my will;
A double knavery,—How? how?—Let me see:—
After some time, to abuse Othello's ear,
That he is too familiar with his wife:—
He hath a person; and a smooth dispose
To be suspected; fram'd to make women false,
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seem to be so;

1 That Iago means to say he was but twenty-eight years old, is clearly ascertained by his marking particularly, though indefinitely, a period within that time, ['and since I could distinguish,' &c.] when he began to make observations on the characters of men. Waller, on a picture which was painted for him in his youth by Cornelius Jansen, and which is now in the possession of his heir, has expressed the same thought: 'Anno ætatis 28; vita vis primo.'—In the novel, on which Othello is founded, Iago is described as a young handsome man.

2 A Guinea-hen was a cant term for a woman of easy virtue.

3 The folio reads 'if the brain;' probably a mistake for beam.

4 So in A Knack to Know an Honest Man, 1606:—
'—Virtue never taught thee that,
She sets a bit upon her bridled lusts.'

See also As You Like It, Act II. Sc. 4:—
'For thou thyself hast been a libertine,
As sensual as the brutish sting itself.'

5 A sect is what the gardeners call a cutting.

6 I have already observed that defeat was used for disfigurement or alteration of features: from the French defaire. Favour means that combination of features which gives the face its distinguishing character.

7 Sequestration is defined to be 'a putting apart, a separation of a thing from the possession of both those that contend for it.' It is not therefore necessary to suppose any change requisite in the text. In another passage of this play we have 'a sequester from liberty.' So in Romeo and Juliet:—
'These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die.'

8 The quarto reads 'as acerb as coloquintida.' The poet had the third chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel in his thoughts, in which we are told that John the Baptist lived in the wilderness on locusts and wild honey. Mr. Douce observes, that 'there is another phrase of the same kind, viz. to exchange herb John for coloquintida. It is used in Osborne's Memoirs of James I. and elsewhere. The pedantic Tomlinson, in his translation of Renodæus' Dispensatory, says, that many superstitious persons call mugwort St. John's herb, wherewith he circumscribed his loins on holidays. Shakespeare, who was extremely well acquainted with popular superstitions, might have recollected this circumstance, when, for reasons best known to himself, he chose to vary the phrase by substituting the luscious locusts of the Baptist. Whether these were the fruit of the tree so called, or the well known insect, is not likely to be determined. It is said that the insect locusts are considered a delicacy at Tonguin. Bullen says that 'coloquintida is most bitter.'—Bulwerke of Defence, 1579.

9 Erring is the same as erraticus in Latin. So in Hamlet:—
'Th' extravagant and erring spirit.'

And in As You Like It:—
'—how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage.'

10 This adjective occurs again in Act III. —'hearted throne.'

11 I. e. march.

12 Woodcock was the general term for a foolish fellow. Iago is more sarcastic, and compares his dupe to a smaller and meaner bird of almost the same shape.

13 That is, I will act as if I were certain of the fact. 'He holds me well,' is, he entertains a good opinion of me.

14 The first quarto reads 'to make up.'

And will as tenderly be led by the nose,
As asses are.
I have't;—it is engender'd:—Hell and night
Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light.
[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. *A Seaport Town in Cyprus.*¹ A Platform. Enter MOORABO AND TWO Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?
1 Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;
I cannot 'twixt the heaven² and the main,
Descry a sail.

Mon. Methinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at land:

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,³
Can hold the mortise? what shall we hear of this?

2 Gent. A segregation of the Turkish fleet:
For do but stand upon the foaming shore,⁴
The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous

main,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,⁵
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole:
I never did like molestation view
On the enchafed flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not enshelter'd and embay'd, they are drown'd;
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third Gentleman.

3 Gent. News, lords! our wars are done:
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts: A noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance,
On most part of their fleet.

Mon. How! is this true?

3 Gent. The ship is here put in,
A Venetian: Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor, Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moor himself's at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

1 All the modern editors, following Rowe, have supposed the capital of Cyprus to be the place where the scene of Othello lies during four Acts: but this could not have been Shakespeare's intention; Nicosia, the capital city of Cyprus, being situated nearly in the centre of the island, and thirty miles distant from the sea. The principal seaport town of Cyprus is Famagusta; where there was formerly a strong fort and commodious haven, 'neare which (says Knolles) standeth an old castle, with four towers, after the ancient manner of building.' To this castle we find that Othello presently repairs. Censhis, in the novel, makes no mention of any attack on Cyprus by the Turks; but they took the island from the Venetians in 1570. By mentioning Rhodes as likely to be attacked by the Turks, the historical fact is disregarded; for they were in quiet possession of that island, and had been masters of it since the year 1522; and from 1473, when the Venetians first became possessed of Cyprus, to 1522, they had not been molested by any Turkish armament.

2 The quarto reads:—

'twixt the heaven and the main;²
and Malone adopts that reading. Perhaps the poet wrote 'the heavens.' A subsequent passage may serve to show that the folio affords the true reading:—

Let's to the seaside, ho!

As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As throw our eyes out for brave Othello:
Even till we make the main and the ethereal blue
An indistinct regard.

3 The quarto of 1623 reads 'when the huge mountain meels,' the letter s, which perhaps belongs to mountains, having wandered at press from its place. In a subsequent scene we have:

'And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high'—

And in Trolius and Cressida:—

'The strong ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cuts.'

4 The elder quarto reads 'the burning shore.'

5 The constellation near the polar star. The next

Mon. I am glad on't: 'tis a worthy governor.

3 Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak of comfort,

Touching the Turkish loss,—yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted
With foul and violent tempest.

Mon.

'Pray heaven, he be;
For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full' soldier. Let's to the seaside, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in,
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello;
Even till we make the main, and the aerial blue,
An indistinct regard.

3 Gent.

Come, let's do so;
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance.

Enter CASSIO.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor; O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well ship'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approv'd allowance;⁶
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.⁷

[Within.]

A sail, a sail, a sail!

Enter another Gentleman.

Cas. What noise?

4 Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o' the sea
Stand ranks of people, and they cry—a sail.

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor.

2 Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy;
[Guns heard.]

Our friends, at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth,
And give us truth who 'tis that is arriv'd.

2 Gent. I shall.

[Exit.]

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd?
Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid
That paragons description, and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,⁸
And in the essential vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.⁹—How now? who has put in?

line alludes to the star Arctophylax, which literally signifies the guard of the bear. The 4to. 1622 reads 'ever-fred pole.'

6 The old copy reads 'a Veronessa;' whether this signified a ship fitted out by the people of Verona, who were tributary to the Venetian republic, or designated some particular kind of vessel, is not yet fully established. But as Veronessa has not hitherto been met with elsewhere, the former is most probably the true explanation.

7 A full soldier is a complete one. See Act I. Sc. 1, 8 l. c. of allowed and approved experience.

8 The meaning seems to be, 'Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death, by excess of apprehension, stand in confidence of being cured.' A parallel expression occurs in Lear:—

'This rest might yet have balm'd his broken senses,
Which if convenience will not allow
Stand in hard cure.'

10 Thus in Shakespeare's 103d Sonnet:

'— a face

'That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.'

11 This is the reading of the quartos: the folio has:
'And in the essential vesture of creation
Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.'

By the essential vesture of creation the poet means her outward form, which he in another place calls 'the muddy vesture of decay.' If the reading of the folio be adopted, the meaning would be this: She is one who excels all description, and in real beauty, or outward form, goes beyond the power of the inventive pencil of the artist.—Flecko, in his discourse on the English Stage, 1664, speaking of painting, mentions 'the stupendous works of your great ingeniars.' And Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus, Act iv. Sc. 4:—
'No, Illius, we are no good ingeniars,
We want the fine arts.'

An ingenier or ingeniuer undoubtedly means an artist or painter; and is perhaps only another form of engineer anciently used for any kind of artist or artificer.

Re-enter second Gentleman.

2 Gent. 'Tis one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. He has had most favourable and happy speed:

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,
The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—
Traitors ensteep'd¹ to clog the guiltless heel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal² natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Moa. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts,
A se'night's speed.—Great Jove, Othello guard,
And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath;
That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,
Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O, behold,

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!³
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees!—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Enwheel these round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd; nor know I aught
But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear;—How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship: But, hark! a sail.

[Cry within, A sail, a sail! Then guns heard.]

2 Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel;
This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.⁴—

[Exit Gentleman.]

Good ancient, you are welcome;—Welcome, mistress:—

[To EMILIA.]

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners; 'tis my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesy.

[Testing her.]

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips
As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;
I find it still, when I have list to sleep:
Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you are pictures out of doors,

Bells in your parlours, wild cats in your kitchens,

² Mortal is deadly, destructive.

³ 'The riches of the ship is come on shore.' Shakespeare uses riches as a singular in his eighty-seventh Sonnet:—

'And for that riches, where is my deserving?'

⁴ The first quarto reads, 'So speaks this voice.'

⁵ That is, When you have a mind to do injuries, you put on an air of sanctity. In Putterham's Art of Poetrie, 1699, we have almost the same thoughts:—'We limit the comely parts of a woman to consist in four points; that is, to be a shrew in the kitchen, a saint in the church, an angel at board, and an ape in the bed; as the chronicle reports by mistress Shore, paramour to King Edward the Fourth.' There is something similar in Middleton's Blurt Master Constable, 1602; and it is alluded to in the Miseries of Inforced Marriage, 1607.

⁶ I. e. censorious.

⁷ A similar thought occurs in The Puritan:—'The excuse stuck upon my tongue like ship-pitch upon a mariner's gown.'

⁸ The quarto reads—Att.

⁹ The hint for this question, and the metrical reply of Saints in your injuries, devils being offended,

Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

Des. O, fie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk;

You rise to play, and go to bed to work.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago.

No, let me not.

Des. What would'st thou write of me, if thou should'st praise me?

Iago. O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;

For I am nothing, if not critical.⁶

Des. Come on, assay;—There's one gone to the harbour?

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile

The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.—

Come, how would'st thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention
Comes from my pate, as birdlime does from frize,⁷
It plucks out brains and all: But my muse labours,
And thus she is deliver'd.

If she be fair and wise,—fairness, and wit,
The one's for use, the other useeth it.

Des. Well prais'd! How if she be black and witty?

Iago. If she be black, and therefore have a wit,
She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.⁸

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How, if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes, to make fools laugh i' the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish?

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish thereunto,
But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

Des. O, heavy ignorance!—thou praisest the worst best. But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed! One, that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself?⁹

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud;

Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;

Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;

Fled from her wish, and yet said,—now I may;

She that, being anger'd, her revenge being high,
Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;

She, that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail;¹⁰

She that could think, and ne'er disclose her mind,
See suitors following, and not look behind;

She was a wight,—if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what?

Iago. To suckle fools, and chronicle small beer.¹¹

Des. O, most lame and impotent conclusion!—

Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal¹² counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam; you may relish him more in the soldier, than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside.] He takes her by the palm: Ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this, will
I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon

Iago, is taken from a strange pamphlet, called Choice, Chance, and Change, or Concoits in their Colours, 1606.

¹⁰ The sense is this—one that was so conscious of her own merit, and of the authority her character had with every one, that she durst call upon malice itself to vouch for her. This was some commendation. And the character only of clearest virtue; which could force malice, even against its nature, to do justice.—Warburton. To put on is to provoke, to incite.

¹¹ That is to exchange a delicacy for coarser fare. See Queen Elizabeth's Household Book for the thirty-third year of her reign.—Ham. the master cooks have to see all the salmon's tails, &c. p. 206.

¹² I. e. 'to suckle children and keep the accounts of the household.' These expressions are only instances of the want of natural affection, and the premeditation of a critical censoriousness in Iago, which he allows himself to be possessed of, where he says 'O! I am nothing, if not critical.'

¹³ Liberal is licentious

her, do; I will gyve¹ thee in thine own courtship. You say true; 'tis so indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantship, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft, which now again you are most apt to play the sir in. Very good; well kissed! an excellent courtesy! 'tis so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? 'would, they were elyster-pipes for your sake!

[Trumpet.] The Moor, I know his trumpet.

Cas. 'Tis truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. O, my fair warrior.²

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content,
To see you here before me. O, my soul's joy!
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd death!
And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus-high; and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy: for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid,
But that our loves and comforts should increase,
Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—
I cannot speak enough of this content,
It steps me here; it is too much of joy:
And this, and this, the greatest comforts be,³

[Kissing her.]

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. O, you are well tun'd now!
But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,
As honest as I am. [Aside.]

Oth. Come, let's to the castle.—
News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How do our old acquaintance of this isle?—
Honey, you shall be well desir'd⁴ in Cyprus,
I have found great love amongst them. O, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion⁵ and I dote
In mine own comforts.—I pry'thee, good Iago,
Go to the bay, and disembark my coffers:
Bring thou the master⁶ to the citadel;
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona,
Once more, well met at Cyprus.

[Exeunt OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.]

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour.
Come hither. If thou be'st valiant as (they say) base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,—list me.
The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard:⁷—First, I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him! why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger—thus, and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies: And will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be,—again to inflame it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite,— loveliness in favour; sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in:
Now, for want of these required conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor;
very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted, (as it is a most pregnant and unforced position,) who stands so eminently in the degree of this fortune, as Cassio does? a knave very voluble, no further conscientious, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: A slippery and subtle knave; a finder out of occasions; that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself: A devilish knave! besides, the knave is handsome, young; and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and green minds⁸ look after: A pestilent complete knave; and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she is full of most blessed condition.¹¹

Iago. Blessed fig's end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes; if she had been blessed, she would never have loved the Moor; Blessed pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy.

Iago. Lechery, by his hand; an index,¹² and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts.
They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embraced together. Villanous thoughts, Roderi-go! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion: Fish!—But, sir, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice.
Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay't upon you: Cassio knows you not;—I'll not be far from you: Do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting¹³ his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden¹⁴ in choler;
and, haply, with his truncheon may strike at you:
Provoke him, that he may be for, even out of that, will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose wedding I was with myn hostes, and also desyr'd by ye jentyman himselfe.¹⁵

6 Out of method, without any settled order of discourse.

7 The master is a distinct person from the pilot of a vessel, and has the principal care and command of the vessel under the captain, where there is a captain; and in chief where there is none. Dr. Johnson confounded the master with the pilot, and the poet himself seems to have done so. See the first line of Scene 2, Act III.

8 That is, the place where the guard musters.
9 On thy mouth to stop it, while thou art listening to a whar man.

10 Minds unripe, minds not yet fully formed.

11 Qualities, disposition of mind.

12 It has already been observed that indices were formerly prefixed to books.

13 Throwing a slur upon his discipline. So in Troi-lus and Cressida, Act I. Sc. 3:—

'In taint of our best man.'

14 Sudden is precipitately violent. So Malcolm, describing Macbeth:—

'I grant him bloody—
Sudden, malicious.'

1 To gyve is to fetter, to shackle. The first quarto reads:—'I will catch you in your own courtship.' It may be as well to observe that courtship is the same as courtesy, i. e. complimentary or courtly behaviour. To play the sir, is to show good breeding and gallantry.

2 This phrase was introduced by our copiers of the French sonnetiers. Ronsard frequently calls his mistresses guerrieres; and Southern, his imitator, is not less prodigal of the same appellation. Thus in his fifth sonnet:—

'And my fair warrior, my light shines in thy fair eyes.'

3 So Cherea in The Eunuch of Terence, Act II.
Sc. 5:—

—Froh Jupiter!

Nunc tempus profecto est, cum perperd me possum in-terfici,

Ne vix aliquis hoc gaudium contamineat agitudine.'

4 Thus in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion:—

'I pry'thee chide, if I have done amiss,

But let my punishment be this and this.

[Kissing the Moor.]

Marlowe's play was written before that of Shakspeare, who might possibly have acted in it.

5 I. e. much solicited by invitation. So in The Letters of the Farnon Family, vol. I. p. 239:—'At the which qualification¹ shall come into no true taste again, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer² them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.]

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it; That she loves him, 'tis apt, and of great credit: The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not,—Is of a constant, loving, noble nature; And, I dare think, he'll prove to Desdemona A most dear husband. Now I do love her too; Not out of absolute lust, (though, peradventure, I stand accountant for as great a sin,) But partly led to diet my revenge, For that I do suspect the lusty Moor Hath leap'd into my seat: the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards; And nothing can or shall content my soul, Till I am even³ with him, wife for wife; Or, failing so, yet that I put the Moor At least into a jealousy so strong That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,—If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace⁴ For his quick hunting, stand the putting on, I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip; Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb,⁵ For I fear Cassio with my nightcap too; Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me, For making him egregiously an ass, And practising upon his peace and quiet, Even to madness. 'Tis here, but yet confus'd; Knavery's plain face is never seen, till us'd.⁶

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Street. Enter a Herald, with a Proclamation; People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere⁷ perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction leads him; for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptials: So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices⁸ are open; and there is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five, till the bell hath told eleven. Heaven bless the Isle of Cyprus, and our noble general Othello!

[Exeunt.]

¹ Johnson has erroneously explained this. Qualification, in our old writers, signifies appeasement, pacification, assuagement of anger. 'To appease and qualifie one that is angry; tranquillum facere ex irato.'—Baret.

² To advance them.

³ Thus the quarto 1622. The folio—till I am even³ with him: i. e. till I am on a level with him by retaliation.

⁴ If this poor trash of Venice, whom I trace For his quick hunting, bear the putting on.' &c. This is the reading of the folio, which, though it has a plain and easy sense, would not do for the commentators, and the quarto of 1622 reading crash, they altered it to trash, signifying to impede, to keep back, a meaning the very converse of that required by the context; to say nothing of the wretched jingle of trash and trash; which Steevens is pleased to consider 'much in Shakespeare's manner!' The fact is, to trace means neither more nor less than to follow, the appropriate hunting term; the old French tracer, tracker, trasser, and the Italian tracciare having the same meaning. Steevens is really put to it to explain how keeping Roderigo back and putting him on can quadruple, and all is doubt and perplexity. Bishop Hall, in the third satire of his fifth book, uses trace for to follow :—

'Go on and thrive, my petty tyrant's pride,
Scorn thou to live, if others live beside;
And trace proud Castile, that aspires to be
In his old age a young fifth monarchy.'

SCENE III. A Hall in the Castle. Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard to-night:

Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop, Not to outstrip discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do; But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye Will I look to't.

Oth. Iago is most honest.

Michael, good night: To-morrow with our earliest, Let me have speech with you.—Come, my dear love,

The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue;

[To DESDEMONA.]

That profit's yet to come 'twixt me and you.—

Good night. [Exeunt OTT. DES. and Attend.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Welcome, Iago: We must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 'tis not yet ten o'clock: Our general cast⁹ us thus early, for the love of his Desdemona; whom let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and she is sport for Jove.

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.

Cas. Indeed, she is a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley of provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And, when she speaks, is it not an alarm to love?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.¹⁰

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoup of wine: and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants, that would fain have a measure to the jingle of black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago; I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup; I'll drink for you.

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified¹¹ too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 'tis a night of revels; the gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in.

Cas. I'll do't; but it dislikes me. [Exit CASIO.]

⁵ 'In the rank garb,' which has puzzled Steevens and Malone, is merely 'in the right down, or straight forward fashion.' In As You Like It, we have 'the right butterwoman's rank to market.' And in King Lear, Cornwall says of Kent in disguise, that he 'doth affect a saucy roughness, and constrains the garb (i. e. assumes the fashion) quite from his nature.' Gower says of Fluellen, in King Henry V. :—'You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel.' The folio reads—'in the right garb.'

⁶ 'An honest man acts upon a plan, and forecasts his designs; but a knave depends upon temporary and local opportunities, and never knows his own purpose, but at the time of execution.'—Johnson.

⁷ Mere is entire.

⁸ All rooms, or places in the castle, at which refreshments are prepared or served out.

⁹ I. e. dismissed us, threw us off, or rid himself of our company. The herald has just informed us that there was full liberty of feasting, &c. till eleven. So in The Witch, by Middleton :—

'She cast off

My company betimes to-night, by tricks,' &c.

¹⁰ In this and the seven short speeches preceding, the decent character of Cassio is most powerfully contrasted with that of the licentious Iago.

¹¹ Silly mixed with water.

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drunk to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool,

Roderigo,
Whom love has turn'd almost the wrong side outward,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potations pottle deep; and he's to watch:
Three lads of Cyprus,—noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warlike isle,¹
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,

Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle:—But here they come:
It consequence do but approve my dream,²
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Re-enter CASSIO, with him MONTANO, and Gentlemen.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rouse³ already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.⁴

Iago. Some wine, ho!
*And let me the canakin clink, clink; [Sings.
And let me the canakin clink:*

A soldier's a man;

A life's but a span;

Why, then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys! [Wine brought in.

Cas. 'Fore heaven, an excellent song.

Iago. I learned it in England, where (indeed) they are most potent in potting; your Dane, your German, and your swag-bellied Hollander,—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English.

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Alman; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be filled.

Cas. To the health of our general.

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.⁵

Iago. O, sweet England!

*King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown,
He held them steeple all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor—down.
He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree:
'Tis pride that pulls the country down:
Then take thou care to cloak about thee.*

Some wine, ho!

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear it again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that does those things.—Well,—Heaven's

¹ As quarrelsome as the discordia semina rerum; as quick in opposition as fire and water.—Johnson.

² Every scheme subsisting only in the imagination may be termed a dream.

³ See Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 2, note 8, p. 472.

⁴ If Montano was Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus (as we are told in the Personæ Dramatis) he is not very characteristically employed in the present scene, where he is tipping with people already flustered, and encouraging a subaltern officer, who commands a midnight guard, to drink to excess.—
Steevens.

⁵ Thus the quarto 1622. The folio has—esquisite.
This accomplishment is likewise mentioned by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Captain:—

Led. Are the Englishmen

Such stubborn drinkers?

Piso. — not a leak at sea

Can suck more liquor; you shall have their children
Christen'd in mull'd sack, and at five years old
Able to knock a Dane down.

Henry Peacham, in his Complæat Gentleman, 1622, p.
124, has a section entitled 'Drinking the Plague of our above all; and there be souls that must be saved and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, or any man of quality,—I hope to be saved.

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me: the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs.—Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business.
Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk; this is my ancient;—this is my right hand, and this is my left hand:—I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough.

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then; you must not think, then, that I am drunk. [Exit.

Mon. To the platform, masters: come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow, that is gone before;—
He is a soldier, fit to stand by Caesar
And give direction; and do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtue a just equinox.
The one as long as the other: 'tis pity of him.
I fear, the trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep.
He'll watch the horologe a double set,⁶
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well,

The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps, he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his evils; Is not this true?

Enter RODERIGO.

Iago. How now, Roderigo? [Aside.
I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

Mon. And 'tis great pity, that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place, as his own second,
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio,
With one of an ingraft⁷ infirmity;
It were an honest action, to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil. But hark! what noise?
[Cry within—Help! help!

Re-enter CASSIO, driving in RODERIGO.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave!—teach me my duty!
I'll beat the knave into a twiggen⁸ bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking RODERIGO.

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant;

[Staying him.

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,

Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.

English gentry,' in which he says:—'Within these fiftie or threescore yeares it was a rare thing with us to see a drunken man, our nation carrying the name of the most sober and temperate of any other in the world.
But since we had to doe in the quarrell of the Netherlands, about the time of Sir John Norris his first being there, the custom of drinking and pledging healthes was brought over into England; wherein let the Dutch be their owne judges, if we equal them not; yea, I think, rather excell them.'

⁶ I. e. drink as much as you do. See King Henry
IV. Part II. Act v. Sc. 2.

⁷ If he have no drink, he'll keep awake while the clock strikes two rounds, or four and twenty hours.—
The word horologe is familiar to most of our ancient writers: Chaucer often uses it. So in the Devil's Charter, 1607:—

—My gracious lord,

By Sesto's horologe 'tis struck eleven.'

⁸ Rooted, settled.

⁹ I. e. a wickered bottle, and so the quarto reads.

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk!

[They fight.
Iago. Away, I say! go out, and cry—a mutiny.
[Aside to Rod. who goes out.

Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen,—

Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—

Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch, indeed!

[Bell rings.
Who's that that rings the bell?—Diablo, ho!

The town will rise; God's will, lieutenant! hold; You will be sham'd for ever.

Enter OTHELLO, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. I bleed still, I am hurt to the death—he dies.

Oth. Hold, for your lives.

Iago. Hold, hold, lieutenant, sir, Montano,—gentlemen,—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?

Hold, hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for shame!

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth this?

Are we turn'd Turks; and to ourselves do that,

Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?

For christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:

He that stirs next to carve for his own rage,

Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.—

Silence that dreadful bell, it frights the isle

From her propriety.—What is the matter, masters?

Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving,

Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know;—friends all but now, even

now,

In quarter,⁶ and in terms like bride and groom

Devesting them for bed: and then, but now,

(As if some planet had unwitted men),

Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast,

In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds;

And 'would, in action glorious I had lost

These legs, that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?⁷

Cas. I pray you, pardon me, I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to civil;

The gravity and stillness of your youth

The world hath noted, and your name is great

In mouths of wisest censure; What's the matter,

That you unlance your reputation thus,

And spend your rich opinion,⁸ for the name

Of a night brawler? give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger;

Your officer, Iago, can inform you—

While I spare speech, which something now offends me:—

Of all that I do know: nor know I aught

By me that's said or done amiss this night;

Unless self-charity⁹ be sometime a vice;

And to defend ourselves it be a sin,

When violence assails us.

1 The first quarto omits the words—he dies, and has sounds! at the commencement of the line. Montano may be supposed to say—he dies, i. e. he shall die, offering to renew the fight upon finding himself severely hurt. Othello, in the very next speech, says—'He dies upon his motion.'

2 i. e. on our station. 'This short note might have saved the long disquisitions of Ritson, Henley, and Malone, about the precise meaning of a word which, in the military language of the present day at least, seems to have no very precise meaning. The meaning given above seems the leading signification, for the principal camp guard of a regiment is called the quarter guard; but a regiment in quarters has no such guard. I wonder that Mr. Stevens, who had been in the militia, did not exercise his judgment on this passage.—Fye.

3 i. e. you have thus forgot yourself.

4 Throw away and squander your valuable character. Opinion for reputation or character occurs in other places.

5 Care of one's self

Oth. Now, by heaven,

My blood begins my safer guides to rule;

And passion, having my best judgment collied,

Assays to lead the way: If I once stir,

Or do but lift this arm, the best of you

Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on;

And he that is approv'd¹⁰ in this offence,

Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me.—What! in a town of war,

Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,

To manage private and domestic quarrel,

In night, and on the court of guard and safety!¹¹

'Tis monstrous.—Iago, who began it?

Mon. If partially affi'd,¹² or leagu'd in office,

Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,

Thou art no soldier.

Iago. Touch me not so near:

I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth

Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;

Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth

Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general,

Montano and myself being in speech,

There comes a fellow, crying out for help;

And Cassio following with determin'd sword,¹³

To execute upon him: Sir, this gentleman

Steps in to Cassio, and outcries his passion;

Myself the crying fellow did pursue,

Lest, by his clamour, (as it so fell out,) ¹⁴

The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot,

Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rasher

For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,

And Cassio high in oath; which, till to-night,

I never might say before: when I came back,

(For this was brief,) I found them close together,

At blow, and thrust: even as again they were,

When you yourself did part them.

More of this matter can I not report:—

But men are men; the best sometimes forget:—

Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,—

As men in rage strike those that wash them best,—

Yet, surely, Cassio, I believe, receiv'd,

From him that fled, some strange indignity,

Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago.

Thy honesty and love doth mince this matter

Making it light to Cassio:—Cassio, I love thee;

But never more be officer of mine.—

Enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look, if any gentle love be not rais'd up;—

I'll make thee an example.

Des. What's the matter, dear?

Oth. All's well now, sweeting; Come away to bed.

Sir, for your hurts,

Myself will be your surgeon;—Lead him off.¹⁵

[To MONTANO, who is led off.

Iago, look with care about the town;

And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.—

6 Collied is blackened, as with smut or coal, and figuratively means here obscured, darkened.

7 Convicted by proof.

8 The old copies read:—

'In night, and on the court and guard of safety.'

Malone made the necessary transposition, which he justifies by irrefragable proof; but Stevens obstinately opposed the emendation, and retained the old mumpkin in the text out of a spirit of contradiction!

9 Monstrous is here used as a triyllable, as it is again in Macbeth, Act iii. Sc. 6.

10 Affi'd is 'bound by proximity of relationship,' but here it means 'related by nearness of office.' In the first scene it is used in the first of these senses:—

'If I, in any just term, am offer'd

To love the Moor.'

11 The old copy reads:—

'And Cassio following him with determin'd sword.'

The word him seems to have crept in from the compositor's eye glancing on the word in the next line.

12 Malone thinks that the words—'Lead him off' were originally a marginal stage direction, as it was common to express them in imperative terms.—Play music—Ring the bell—Lead him off,' &c.

Come, Desdemona; 'tis the soldiers' life,
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife.
[Exeunt all but IAGO and CASSIO.]

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

Cas. Ay, past all surgery.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part, sir, of myself, and what remains is bestial.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more offence in that, than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving: You have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man! there are ways to recover the general again: You are but now cast in his mood,¹ a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog, to affright an imperious lion: sue to him again, and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despised, than to deceive so good a commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer. Drunk? and speak parrot? and squabble? swagger? swear? and discourse fustian with one's own shadow?—O, thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil!

Iago. What was he that you followed with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is it possible?

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O, that men should put an enemy in their mouths, to steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, revel, pleasure, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: How came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleased the devil drunkenness, to give place to the devil, wrath: one unperfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself.

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: As the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O, strange!—Every inordinate cup is unblessed, and the ingredient is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used; exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think, you think I love you.

Cas. I have well approved it sir,—I drunk!

Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunk at some time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general;—I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and demerit² of her parts and graces:—confess yourself freely to her; importune her; she'll help to put you in your place again; she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, that she holds it a vice in her goodness, not to do more than she is requested: This broken joint³ between you and her husband, entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay⁴ worth naming, this crack of your love shall grow stronger than it was before.

Cas. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love, and honest kindness.

Cas. I think it freely; and betimes in the morning, I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake for me: I am desperate of my fortunes, if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch.

Cas. Good night, honest Iago. [Exit CASSIO.]

Iago. And what's he, then, that says,—I play the villain?

When this advice is free,⁵ I give, and honest, Probable to thinking, and (indeed) the course To win the Moor again? For, 'tis most easy The inclining⁶ Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit: she's fram'd as fruitful⁷ As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor,—wer't to renounce his baptism, All seals and symbols of redeemed sin,—His soul is so enfeiter'd to her love, That she may make, unmake, do what she list, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function. How am I then a villain, To counsel Cassio to this parallel course,⁸ Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will their blackest sins put on, They do suggest at first with heavenly shows,⁹ As I do now: For while this honest fool Pines Desdemona to repair his fortunes, And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence¹⁰ into his ear,—That she repels¹¹ him for her body's lust; And, by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch; And out of her own goodness make the net, That shall enmesh them all.—How now, Roderigo?

Enter RODERIGO.

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry. My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well cudgelled; and, I think, the issue will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains: and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they, that have not patience! What wound did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee, And thou, by that small hurt, hath cashier'd Cassio; Though other things grow fair against the sun, Yet fruits, that blossom first, will first be ripe:¹² Content thyself awhile.—By the mass,¹³ 'tis morning;

Pleasure, and action, make the hours seem short.—Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:

⁸ Corresponding to benigna. Liberal, bountiful as the elements, out of which all things were produced.

⁹ Parallel course for course level or even with his design.

¹⁰ When devils mean to instigate men to commit the most atrocious crimes, they prompt or tempt at first with heavenly shows, &c.

¹¹ Pestilence for poison.

¹² I. e. recalls him, from the Fr. rappeler.

¹³ The blossoming or fair appearance of things, to which Iago alludes, is the removal of Cassio. As their plan had already blossomed, so there was good ground for expecting that the fruits of it would soon be ripe.

¹⁴ The folio reads—In truth, an alteration made in the play-house copy by the interference of the master of the revels.

² I. e. talk idly, utter all you know. From Drunk, &c. to shadow, inclusively, is wanting in the quarto 1622.

³ The old copies read—devotion, an error arising from a single letter being turned upside down. Theobald made the correction.

⁴ Thus the folio. The quarto 1622 reads—this brawl.

⁵ Bet or wager.

⁶ I. e. liberal. Such as honest openness or frank good will would give. There may be such a contraction of the word probable as that in the next line, but it has not yet been met with elsewhere. Churchyard has many abbreviations equally violent.

⁷ Inclining here signifies compliant.

Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter :
Nay, got thee gone. [Exit ROD.] Two things are to be done,—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress ;
I'll set her on :
Myself, the while, to draw¹ the Moor apart,
And bring him jump² when he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife ; Ay, that's the way ;
Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Before the Castle. Enter CASSIO and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here, I will content your pains, Something that's brief; and bid—good morrow,
general.³ [Music.]

Enter Clown.

Clo. Why, masters, have your instruments been at Naples, that they speak⁴ i' the nose thus ?⁵

1 Mus. How, sir, how !

Clo. Are these, I pray you, called wind instruments ?

1 Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clo. O, thereby hangs a tale,

1 Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir ?

Clo. Marry, sir, by many a wind instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you ; and the general so likes your music, that he desires you of all loves,⁶ to make no more noise with it.

1 Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't, again : but, as they say, to hear music,
the general does not greatly care.

1 Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clo. Then put up your pipes in your bag, for I'll away : Go ; vanish into air ; away.

[Exit Musicians.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend ?

Clo. No, I hear not your honest friend ; I hear
you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, keep up thy quiet. There's a poor piece of gold for thee : if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech : Wilt thou do this ?

Clo. She is stirring, sir ; if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. [Exit]

Enter Iago.

Cas. Do, good my friend.—In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then ?

Cas. Why, no ; the day had broke
Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife : My suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Precure me some access.

Iago.

I'll send her to you presently ;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. [Exit]

1 Some modern editions read—' Myself the while will draw.' But the old copies are undoubtedly right. An imperfect sentence was intended. Iago is ruminating upon his plan.

2 I. e. just at the time. So in Hamlet:—

' Thus twice before, and jump at this dead hour.'

3 It was usual for friends to serenade a new married couple on the morning after the celebration of the marriage, or to greet them with a morning song to bid them good-morrow. See Romeo and Juliet, Act iii. Sc. 5. Bionso's note about the scotte is nothing to the purpose.

4 So in The Merchant of Venice:—' The bagpipe sings i' the nose.' Rabelais somewhere speaks of 'a blow over the nose with a Naples cowl-staff.' The allusion is obvious.

5 I. e. for love's sake. We have this adjuration again in The Merry Wives of Windsor.

6 See Hamlet, Act v. Sc. i. p. 508. note 8.

7 In consequence of this line a doubt has been entertained concerning the country of Iago. Cassio was undoubtedly a Florentine, as appears by the first scene of the play, where he is expressly called one. That Iago

Cas. I humbly thank you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.⁷

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant : I am sorry
For your displeasure ;⁸ but all will soon be well.
The general, and his wife, are talking of it ;
And she speaks for you stoutly : The Moor replies,
That he you hurt, is of great fame in Cyprus,
And great affinity ; and that, in wholesome wisdom,
He might not but refuse you : but, he protests, he loves you ;

And needs no other suitor, but his likings,
To take the saf'st occasion by the front,⁹
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. 'Pray you, come in ;
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you.¹⁰
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. *A Room in the Castle. Enter
OTHELLO, IAGO, and Gentlemen.*

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot ;
And, by him, do my duties to the state :¹¹
That done, I will be walking on the works,
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.
Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see't ?
Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Before the Castle. Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam, do ; I know, it grieves my husband,
As if the case¹² were his.

Des. O, that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt,
Cassio,
But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam,
Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. O, sir,¹³ I thank you : You do love my lord :
You have known him long ; and be you well
assur'd,

He shall in strangeness stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long,¹⁴
Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that ; before Emilia here,
I give thee warrant of thy place : assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it was a Venetian is proved by a speech in the third scene of this act, and by what he says in the fifth act, after having stabbed Roderigo:—

' Iago. Alas, my dear friend and countryman Roderigo !

' Gra. What, of Venice ?

' Iago. Yea.'

All that Cassio means to say in the present passage is, I never experienced more honesty and kindness even in one of my own countrymen.

8 I. e. the displeasure you have incurred from Othello.

9 This line is wanting in the folio.

10 This speech is omitted in the first quarto.

11 Thus the quarto 1622. Folio—' to the senate.'

12 Folio reads—' As if the cause were his.'

13 Thus the quarto of 1622. The folio reads—' I know't, I thank you.'

14 'He may either of himself think it politic to keep me out of office so long, or he may be satisfied with such slight reasons, or so many accidents may make him think my readmission at that time improper, that I may be quite forgotten.'—Johnson.

To the last article : my lord shall never rest ;
I'll watch him tame,¹ and talk him out of patience ;
His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift ;
I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit : Therefore be merry, Cassio ;
For thy solicitor shall rather die,
Than give thy cause away.

Enter OTHELLO, and IAGO, at a distance.

Emil. Madam, here comes
My lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave.
Des. Why, stay,
And hear me speak.

Cas. Madam, not now ; I am very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, well,
Do your discretion. [Exit CASSIO.]

Iago. Ha ! I like not that.

Oth. What dost thou say ?
Iago. Nothing, my lord : or if—I know not what.

Oth. Was not that Cassio, parted from my wife ?
Iago. Cassio, my lord ? No, sure, I cannot think it,

That he would steal away so guiltilylike,
Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 'twas he.
Des. How now, my lord ?

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is't, you mean ?

Des. Why, your lieutenant Cassio. Good my
lord,

If I have any grace, or power to move you,

His present reconciliation² take ;

For, if he be not one that truly loves you,

That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,³

I have no judgment in an honest face :

I pry'three call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now ?

Des. Ay, sooth ; so humbled,
That he both left part of his grief with me ;

I suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona ; some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly ?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall't be to-night at supper ?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner, then ?

Oth. I shall not dine at home ;

I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why then, to-morrow night ; or Tuesday
morn ;

Or Tuesday noon, or night ; or Wednesday morn ;—

I pray thee, name the time ; but let it not Exceed three days : in faith, he's penitent ;

And yet his trespass, in our common reason,

(Save that, they say, the wars must make examples
Out of their best,⁴) is not almost a fault

To incur a private check : When shall he come ?

¹ Hawks and other birds are tamed by keeping them from sleep. To this Shakespeare alludes.—So in Cartwright's Lady Errant :—

“ We'll keep you
As they do hawks, watching until you leave
Your wildness.”

And in Davenant's Just Italian :—

“ They've watch'd my hardy violence as tame.”

² I. e. ‘take his present atonement,’ or submission.
The words were formerly synonymous.

³ Cunning here signifies knowledge, the ancient sense of the word.

⁴ The severity of military discipline must not spare the best men of the army, when their punishment may afford a wholesome example.

⁵ So hesitating, in such doubtful suspense. So in Lyly, Euphuus, 1890 :—“ Neither stand in a maiming whether it be best to depart or not.” The quarto 1623 reads—muttering.

⁶ See Act I. Sc. 2. ⁷ I. e. of weight.

⁸ “ The meaning of the word wretch is not generally understood. It is now in some parts of England a term

Tell me, Othello. I wonder in my soul,
What you could ask me, that I should deny,
Or stand so mammering¹ on. What Michael
Cassio,

That came a wooing with you,² and so many a time,
When I have spoke of you dispraisingly,
Hath ta'en on your part ; to have so much to do
To bring him in ! Trust me, I could do much,—

Oth. Pry'three, no more : let him come when he will ;

I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a boon ;
'Tis as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm ;
Or sue to you to do peculiar profit
To your own person : Nay, when I have a suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize³ and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing :

Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you ? no : Farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona : I will come to thee straight.

Des. Emilia, come :—Be it as your fancies teach
you ;

Whate'er you be, I am obedient. [Exit with EMILIA.]

Oth. Excellent wretch !⁴ Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee ! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.⁵

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago ?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd my lady,

Know of your love ?

Oth. He did, from first to last : Why dost thou ask ?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought ;

No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago ?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes ; and went between us very oft. —

Iago. Indeed ?

Oth. Indeed ! ay, indeed :—Discern'st thou aught in that ?

Is he not honest ?

Iago. Honest, my lord ?

Oth. Ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think ?

Iago. Think, my lord ?

Oth. Think my lord !

By heaven, he echoes me,
As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown.—Thou dost mean something :

I heard thee say but now—Thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife ; What did'st not like ?
And, when I told thee—he was of my counsel
In my whole course of wooing, thou cry'st, Indeed ?

of the fondest and softest tendernesses. It expresses the utmost degree of amiableness, joined with an idea which perhaps all tenderness includes, of feebleness, softness, and want of protection. Othello, considering Desdemona as excelling in beauty and virtue, soft and tenderous by her sex, and by her situation absolutely in his power, calls her Excellent wretch ! It may be expressed, ‘Dear, harmless, helpless excellence.’—Johnson. Sir W. Davenant, in his Cruel Brother, uses the word twice with the same meaning :—‘Excellent wretch ! with a timorous modesty she stiflth up her utterance.’

⁹ I think with Malone, that Othello is meant to say, ‘Ere I cease to love thee, the world itself shall be reduced to its primitive chaos.’ So in Venus and Adonis :—
‘For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And beauty dead, black Chaos comes again.’

Shakespeare's meaning is more fully expressed in The Winter's Tale :—

‘It cannot fall but by
The violation of my faith,—and then
Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together
And mar the seeds within.’

And didst contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then had'st shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit: If thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost:

And,—for I know thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them breath,—

Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more:
For such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They are close demerits,¹ working from the heart,

That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,—
I dare be sworn, I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem;
Or, those that be not, 'would, they might seem none!²

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this:

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me;
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.³
Utter my thoughts? Why, say, they are vile and false;—

As where's that palace, whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not?⁴ who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets,⁵ and law-days, and in session sit
With meditations lawful?

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend, Iago,
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,
Though I, perchance, am vicious in my guess,

As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses: and, oft, my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not,—I entreat you, then,
From one that so imperfectly conceits,⁶
You'd take no notice? nor build yourself a trouble
Out of his scattering and unsure observance:
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name, in man, and woman, dear my
lord,

Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
Who steals my purse, steals trash;⁷ 'tis something,
nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to these sands;⁸

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed.

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thought.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;

It is the green-eyed monster, which doth make⁹

The meat it feeds on: That cuckold lives in bliss,
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger;

But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er,
Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet strongly loves!

Oth. O, misery!

Iago. Poor, and content, is rich and rich enough;

But riches, finess,¹⁰ is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor:—

Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
From jealousy!

Oth. Why? why is this?

Think'st thou, I'd make a life of jealousy,
To follow still the changes of the moon
With fresh suspicions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is—once to be resolv'd: Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsuffication¹¹ and blown surmises,

⁸ 'Nunc acri Umbreni sub nomine super Othelli
Dictus, erit nulli proprius; sed codet in usum
Nunc mihi, nunc alii.' Herz. Sch. B. A. 2.

⁹ In Camden's Remaines, 1686, p. 197:—

'Nunc nunc, mox hujus, et postea nunc cupis.'

¹⁰ The old copy reads mock. The emendation is Hammer's. Stevens attempted to justify the old reading; but his arguments are not convincing; and the slight alteration of the text renders it much more clear, elegant, and poetical, and has been so well defended by Malone and others, that I have not hesitated to adopt it.

The following passages have been adduced in confirmation of Hammer's reading. At the end of the third Act, Desdemona remarks on Othello's jealousy:—

'Alas the day! I never gave him cause.'

To which Emilia replies:—

'But jealous fools will not be answer'd so,
They are not jealous ever for the cause,
But jealous, for they are jealous: 'tis a monster
Begot upon itself, born on itself.'

¹¹ I. e. endless, unbounded. Warburton observes that this is finely expressed—winter producing no fruits.

¹² No instance of this word has elsewhere occurred.
It appears to me to be intended to convey the meaning of whispered, or made out of breath. Exsufflatio is interpreted by Philippi, 'a puffing up, a making to swell with blowing.' In Plautus we have, 'Exsufflati nescio quid uxore;' which Cooper renders, 'He hath whispered somewhat in his wife's ear, whosoever it be.' He also translates 'Burmoria nescio quid afferat,' a certain brute or rumour come to my hearing.' Though I do not agree with the following explanation, I think it right to lay it before the reader:—'It seems to me, (says Mr. Todd,) that all the critics have overlooked the meaning of the passage. Exsufflatio may be traced to the low Latin exsufflare, to spit down upon, an ancient form of exorcising; and, figuratively, to spit out in abhorrence or contempt. See Du Cange, in
v. exsufflare. Exsufflatio may thus signify contemptible; and Othello may be supposed to mean, that he would not change the noble designs, that then employed his thoughts, for contemptible and despicable surmises.'
Johnson's Dict. in v. Exsufflatio.

¹ Thus the earliest quarto. The first folio reads—
'close dilations.' Which Johnson says was intended for 'cold delations,' i. e. occult and secret accusations, working involuntary from the heart. The second folio reads—'cold dilations,' which Warburton explains
'cold, keeping back a secret,' which men of phlegmatic constitutions, whose ears are not swayed or governed by their passions, we find can do: while more sanguine tempers reveal themselves at once, and without reserve.' Upon says dilations comes from the Latin dilationes, delayings, pauses.

² I believe the meaning is, 'would they might no longer seem or bear the shape of men.'—Johnson.

³ 'I am not bound to do that which even slaves are not bound to do.' So in Cymbeline:—

— O, Pisanio,
Every good servant does not all commands,
No bond but to do just ones.'

⁴ — No perfection is so absolute
That some impurity doth not pollute.'

Rape of Lucretia.
⁵ 'Who has so virtuous a breast that some impure conceptions and uncharitable surmises will not sometimes enter into it; hold a session there, as in a regular court, and "bench by the side" of authorised and lawful thoughts.' In the poet's thirteenth sonnet we find the same imagery:—

'When to the sessions of sweet silent thoughts
I summon up remembrance of things past.'

A leet is also called a law day. 'This court, in whose manor soever kept, was accounted the king's court, and commonly held every half year.' It was a meeting of the hundred 'to certify the king of the good manners and government of the inhabitants,' &c.

⁶ I. e. a conjecture. Thus the quarto 1622. The folio reads:—

— and of my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not, that your wisdom
From one that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice.'

⁷ The sacred writings were perhaps in the poet's thoughts: 'A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour than silver and gold.'— Proverbs, xxii. 1.

Matching thy inference.¹ 'Tis not to make me jealous,

To say—my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company, is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well; Where virtue is, these are more virtuous;² Nor from mine own weak merits will I draw The smallest fear, or doubt of her revolt; For she had eyes, and chose me: No, Iago; I'll see, before I doubt; when I doubt, prove; And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—Away at once with love, or jealousy.

Iago. I am glad of this, for now I shall have reason To show the love and duty that I bear you With franker spirit: therefore, as I am bound, Receive it from me:—I speak not yet of proof. Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio; Wear your eye—thus, not jealous, not secure: I would not have your free and noble nature, Out of self-bounty,³ be abus'd; look to 't: I know our country disposition well; In Venice they do let heaven see the peaks They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience

Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.⁴

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying you; And, when she seem'd to shake, and fear your looks, She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then; She that, so young, could give out such a seeming, To seal her father's eyes up, close as oak,⁵—Me thought, 'twas witchcraft:—But I am much to blame;

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon, For too much loving you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see, this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. Trust me, I fear it has. I hope you will consider, what I spoke Comes from my love;—But I do see you are mov'd:—

I am to pray you not to strain my speech To grosser issues,⁶ nor to larger reach, Than to suspicion.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord, My speech should fall into such vile success⁷

¹ I. e. such as you have mentioned in describing the torments of jealousy.

² A passage in All's Well that Ends Well is perhaps the best comment on the sentiments of Othello:—'I have those good hopes of her education promises; his disposition she inherits; which makes fair gifts fairer.' Gratior e pulchre veniens et corpora virius.

³ Self bounty for inherent generosity.

⁴ This and the following argument of Iago ought to be deeply impressed on every reader. Deceit and falsehood, whatever conveniences they may for a time promise or produce, are in the sum of life obstacles to happiness. Those who profit by the cheat, distrust the deceiver, and the act by which kindness is sought puts an end to confidence.—The same objection may be made with a lower degree of strength against the imprudent generosity of disproportionate marriages. When the first heat of passion is over, it is easily succeeded by suspicion, that the same violence of inclination, which caused one irregularity, may stimulate to another; and those who have shown that their passions are too powerful for their prudence, will, with very slight appearances against them, be censured, as not very likely to restrain them by their virtue.—Johnson.

⁵ An expression from falconry: to seal a hawk is to sew up his eyelids. Close as oak means as close as the grain of oak.

⁶ Issues for conclusions.

⁷ Success here means consequence or event; as success, in Italian. So in Sidney's Arcadia, p. 39, ed. 1613:—'Straight my heart mingave me some evil success!' And in The Palace of Pleasure:—'Fearing lest their case would sort to some pitiful success.'

⁸ Will for inclination or desire. A rank will is a lustful inclination.

⁹ You shall discover whether he thinks his best estate, his most powerful interest, is by the solicitation of your lady.

As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—

My lord, I see you are mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd:—I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point:—As,—to be hold with you,—

Not to affect many proposed matches, Of her own clime, complexion, and degree; Whereto, we see, in all things nature tends: Foh! one may smell, in such, a will¹⁰ most rank, Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.—But pardon me; I do not, in position, Distinctly speak of her: though I may fear, Her will, recoiling to her better judgment, May fall to match you with her country forms, And (happily) repeat.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:

If more thou dost perceive, let me know more;

Set on thy wife to observe: Leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave. [Going.]

Oth. Why did I marry?—This honest creature, doubtless,

Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. My lord, I would, I might entreat your honour

To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:

And though it be fit that Cassio have his place,

(For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,) Yet, if you please to hold him off a while,

You shall by that perceive him and his means:¹¹

Note, if your lady strain his entertainment;¹²

With any strong or vehement importunity;

Much will be seen in that. In the mean time,

Let me be thought too busy in my fears,

(As worthy cause I have, to fear—I am,) And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government.¹³

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.]

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,

And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,¹⁴

Of human dealings: If I do prove her haggard,¹⁵

Though that her jesses¹⁶ were my dear heart-strings,

I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,

To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;

And have not those soft parts of conversation

That chamberers have:¹⁷—Or, for I am declin'd

¹⁰ I. e. press hard his readmission to his pay and office. Entertainment was the military term for the admission of soldiers.

¹¹ Do not distrust my ability to contain my passion.

¹² Knowned for experienced. The construction is, 'He knowned with an experienced spirit all qualities of human dealings.'

¹³ Haggard is wild, and therefore libertine. A haggard falcon was a wild hawk that had preyed for herself long before she was taken; sometimes also called a ramage falcon. From a passage in The White Devil, or Vittoria Corombona, 1612, it appears that haggard was a term of reproach, sometimes applied to a woman:—'Is this your perch, you haggard? fly to the stews.' So in Shakerley Marston's Holland's Leger, 1633:

'Before these courtiers lick their lips at her,

I'll trust a wanton haggard in the wind.'

Again:—

'For she is ticklish as any haggard,

And quickly lost.'

¹⁴ Jesses are short straps of leather tied about the foot of a hawk, by which she is held on the fist.—'The falconers always let fly the hawk against the wind; if she flies with the wind behind her, she seldom returns. If therefore a hawk was for any reason to be dismissed, she was let down the wind, and from that time shifted for herself and preyed at fortune.' This was told to Dr. Johnson by Mr. Clark. So in the Spanish Gipsie, 1633:

'—That young lamerd (i. e. hawk)

Whom you have such a mind to; if you can whistle her

To come to fist, make trial, play the young falconer.'

¹⁵ Men of intrigue. Chambering and wantonness are mentioned together in the Scriptures.

Into the vale of years;—yet that's not much;—
She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief
Must be to loathe her. O, curse of marriage,
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapour of a duncheon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love,
For others' uses. Yet, 'tis the plague of great ones;
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death;
Even then this forked plague¹ is fated to us,
When we do quicken.² Desdemona comes:

Enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
I'll not believe it.

Des. How now, my dear Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous³ islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why is your speech so faint? are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. 'Faith, that's with watching; 'twill away
again:

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin⁴ is too little;

[He puts the Handkerchief from him, and it drops.]
Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt OTT. and DES.]

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin;
This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
My wayward husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to steal it: but she so loves the token,
(For he conjur'd her, she would ever keep it,)
That she reserves it evermore about her,
To kiss, and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,⁵
And give 't Iago:
What he'll do with it, heaven knows, not I;
I nothing, but to please his fantasy.

Enter IAGO.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.

Iago. A thing for me?—it is a common thing.

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

1 One of Sir John Harington's Epigrams will illustrate this forked plague:—

'Action guiltless unaware spying
Naked Diana bathing in her bowre
Was plagued with hermes; his dogs did him devour;
Wherefore take heed, ye that are curious, prying,
With some such forked plague you be not smitten,
And in your forehead see your faults be written.'

2 I. e. when we begin to live.

3 The generous islanders are the islanders of rank, distinction: generous, Lat. This explanation however (as Steevens observes) may be too particular; for generous also signified valiant, of a brave spirit.

4 In the north of England this term for a handkerchief is still used. The word occurs in Macbeth, Julius Caesar, and other of these plays.

5 That is, copied. Her first thoughts are to have a copy made of it for her husband, and restore the original to Desdemona: but the sudden coming in of Iago, in a surly humour, makes her alter her resolution, to please him. The same phrase afterwards occurs between Cassio and Bianca, in Sc. iv.

'This scheme of getting the work of this valued handkerchief copied, and restoring the original to Desdemona, was probably introduced by the poet to render Emilia less unamiable. It is remarkable that when she perceives Othello's fury on the loss of this token, though she is represented as affectionate to her mistress, she never attempts to relieve her from her distress; which she might easily have done by demanding the handkerchief from her husband, or divulging the story if he refused to restore it. But this would not have served the plot.—In Cinthio's Novel, while the artless Desdemona is caressing the child of Othello's ancient, the villain steals the handkerchief which hung at her girdle without the knowledge of his wife.—Malone.

'This observation is very just; it is particularly striking in the representation; neither is the concluding

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now
For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief?
Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stolen it from her?

Emil. No, 'faith; she let it drop by negligence;
And, to the advantage,⁶ I, being here, took't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with it, that you have been so earnest

To have me fetch it?

Iago. Why, what's that to you?

[Snatching it.]

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Give it me again: Poor lady! she'll run mad,
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not you known of't; I have use for it.
Go, leave me. [Exit EMILIA.]

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it: Trifles light as air,
Are, to the jealous, confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. This may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:
Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,
Which, at the first, are scarce found to distaste;
But, with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say so:—

Enter OTHELLO.

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandra-gora,⁷

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'st⁸ yesterday.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

To me?

Iago. Why, how now, general? no more of that.

Oth. Avaunt! be gone! thou hast set me on the rack:—

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,⁹

Than but to know't a little.

Iago.

How now, my lord?

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of lust?¹⁰

I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:

I slept the next night well, was free and merry;

apology to be admitted, as there is no reason why Emilia should be present when Othello demands the handkerchief.—Fye.

6 That is, I being opportunely here, took it up.

7 'Seem as if you knew nothing of the matter.' The folio reads, 'Be not acknowen on't.'—This word occurs in the Life of Ariosto, subjoined to Sir John Harington's translation of the Orlando Furioso, p. 418, ed. 1607:—'some say he was married to her privily, but durst not be acknowen to it.' Again, in Corneille, a tragedy, by Thomas Kyd, 1594:—

'Our friend's misfortune doth increase our own.

Cic. But ours of others will not be acknowen.'

8 Iago first ruminates on the qualities of the passion which he is labouring to excite; and then proceeds to comment on its effects. 'Jealousy, (says he,) with the smallest operation on the blood, flames out with all the violence of sulphur; &c.

I did say so;

Look where he comes!

I. e. I knew the least touch of such a passion would not permit the Moor a moment of repose:—I have just said that jealousy is a restless commotion of the mind; and look where Othello approaches, to confirm the propriety and justice of my observation.—Stevens.

9 The mandragora has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted an opiate of the most powerful kind. See Antony and Cleopatra, Act I. Sc. 6.

10 I. e. possessed.

11 A similar passage to this, and what follows it, is found in The Witch, by Middleton. In the same drama there is also a scene between Francisca and her brother Antonio, when she first excites his jealousy, which has several circumstances in common with the dialogue which passes between Iago and Othello on the same subject. It is more than probable that Middleton was the imitator.

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers¹ and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known: O, now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!²
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,³
The royal banner; and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!⁴
And, O, you mortal engines, whose rude throats
The immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is it possible!—My lord,——

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore;

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof;

[Taking him by the Throat.]

Or, by the worth of mine eternal soul,⁵

Thou hadst been better have been born a dog,
Than answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago.

Is it come to this?

Oth. Make me to see it; or (at the least) so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,

To hang a doubt on: or, we upon thy life!

Iago. My noble lord,——

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: abandon all remorse;⁶
On horror's head horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd,
For nothing canst thou to damnation add,
Greater than that.

Iago.

O, grace, O, heaven, defend me!
Are you a man? have you a soul, or sense?
God be wi' you; take mine office.—O, wretched fool,
That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice!⁷
O, monstrous world! Take note, take note. O world,
To be direct and honest, is not safe.—
I thank you for this profit; and, from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay:—Thou should'st be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.

Oth.

By the world,

¹ The vanguard of the camp. Pioneers were generally degraded soldiers. According to the old ordinances of war, a soldier who lost any part of his arms by negligence or play, was to be dismissed with punishment, or to be made 'some subject pioneer.'

² There are some points of resemblance between this speech and the following lines in a poem of George Peele's. 'A Farewell to the Famous and Fortunate Generals of our English Forces, Sir John Norris and Sir Francis Drake, 1599:—'

'Change love for arms; girt to your blades, my boyes:
Your rests and muskets take, take helms and targe,
And let god Mars his trumpet make you mirth,
The roaring cannon, and the brazen trumpet,
The angry-sounding drum, the whistling fife,
The shrieks of men, the princelie courser's cry.'

³ In mentioning the fife, joined to the drum, Shakespeare, as usual, points from life; those instruments, accompanying each other, being used in his age by the English soldiers. The fife, however, as a martial instrument, was afterwards entirely discontinued among our troops for many years; but at length revived in the war before the last by the British guards under order of the duke of Cumberland, when they were encamped before Maestricht in 1747, and thence soon adopted into other English regiments of infantry. They took it from the allies with whom they served. This instrument accompanying the drum is of considerable antiquity in the European armies, particularly the German. In a curious picture, painted 1535, in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford, representing the siege of Pavia by the French King, we see fifes and drums. In the diary of King Henry's siege of Bolloigne, 1544, (Bymer, Foed. xv. p. 53,) mention is made of drummes and vifflours marching at the head of the king's army. The drum and fife were also much used at shows and processions. At a stately masque on Shrove Tuesday,

I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not;
I'll have some proof: Her name, that was as fresh
As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black
As mine own face.—If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it.—'Would, I were satisfied!

Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied!

Oth.

Would? nay, I will.

Iago. And may: but, how? how satisfied my
lord?

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on?

Behold her tupp'd?

Oth.

Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: Damn them, then,
If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster,
More than their own! What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's the satisfaction?
It is impossible you should see this,

Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys
As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as asses
As ignorance made drunk. But yet, I say,

If imputation, and strong circumstances,—
Which lead directly to the door of truth,—

Will give you satisfaction, you may have it.

Oth. Give me a living⁸ reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office:

But, sith I am enter'd in this cause so far,—

Prick'd to it by foolish honesty and love,—

I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately;

And, being troubled with a raging tooth,

I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul,

That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs;

One of this kind is Cassio:

In sleep I heard him say,—Sweet Desdemona,

Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,

Cry,—O, sweet creature!—and then kiss me hard,

As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots,

That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg

Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then

Cried,—Cursed fate, that gave thee to the Moor!

Oth. O, monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion!⁹

'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.¹⁰

1510, in which Henry VIII. was an actor, Hollinshed mentions the entry of 'a drum and fife, apparelled in white damask and green bonnettes'; and at the Inner Temple celebration of Christmas (described by Leigh in his Accidence of Armory, 1576,) 'We entered the prince his hall, where anon we heard the noise of drum and fife.' It will hardly be necessary to state that this note is abridged from one by Thomas Warton, whose passion for the spirit-stirring instruments to which it relates is upon record. The remainder of his note is an attempt to derive the word whiffler from vifflour, a fife; but it is probable that it had another origin.

⁴ Daveant in his Albino, and Fletcher in his Prophesies, have each of them imitated this passage of Othello.

⁵ The quarto of 1599 reads, 'man's eternal soul.'—Perhaps an opposition was designed between man and dog.

⁶ i. e. all tenderness of nature, all pity; the sense in which remorse is most frequently used by Shakespeare.

⁷ A similar image is found in Marlowe's Lucie's Dominion; where the Moor says,—

'—Cardinal, this disgraces
Shall dye thy soul as ink as my face.'

⁸ So in Pericles:—

'If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep,
Unlaid I still my virgin knot will keep.'

⁹ A living reason is a reason founded on fact and experience, not on surmise and conjecture; a reason that convinces the understanding as perfectly as if the fact were exhibited to the life.

¹⁰ Some foregone conclusion is some former experience. Conclusion is used for experiment or trial in several other places of these plays.

¹¹ The old quarto gives this line to Iago, as well as the two which follow; in the folio it is given to Othello.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs,
That do demonstrate thisly.

Oth.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done;—

She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a handkerchief,
(I am sure it was your wife's), did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth.

If it be that,—
Iago. If it be that, or any that was here,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives;
One is too poor, too weak for my revenge!
Now do I see 'tis true!—Look here, Iago;
All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven:
'Tis gone.

Arise, black vengeance, from thy hollow cell!
Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted throne,
To tyrannous hate! swell, boom, with thy fraught,
For 'tis of aspics' tongues!

Iago. Pray, be content.

Oth.

O, blood, Iago, blood!
Iago. Patience, I say; your mind, perhaps, may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,
Whose icy current and compulsive course
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont;
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble love,
Till that a capable and revenge
Swallow them up.—Now, by yond' marble heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow
I here engage my words. [Kneels.]

Iago.

Do not rise yet.—

[Kneels.]

Witness, you ever-burning lights above!

You elements that clip us round about!

Witness, that here Iago doth give up

The execution¹⁰ of his wit, hands, heart,

To wrong'd Othello's service! let him command,

And to obey shall be in me remorse,¹¹

What bloody work soever.

Oth.

I greet thy love,

1 Iago says, 'Yet we see nothing done,' as an oblique and secret mock of what Othello had before said.—Give me the occasion proof.

2 The quarto reads, 'Now do I see 'tis true.'

3 So in Marlowe's Lucretia's Dominion:—

'Are these your fears? thus blow them into air.'

This was perhaps caught from Horace:—

'Tradam protervis in mare Creticum

Portare ventis.'

4 Hollow, which has been stigmatized by Warburton as a poor unmeaning epithet, gives the idea of what Milton calls—

Of unessential night.

Or the trane profundum of Lucretius. It is used indeed in Milton himself. Paradise Lost, b. i. v. 314:—

'He call'd so loud, that all the hollow deep

Of hell resounded.'

5 The heart on which thou wast enthroned. So in Twelfth Night:—

'It gives a very echo to the seat

Where love is throw'd.'

See Romeo and Juliet, Act v. Sc. 1, as before.

6 i. e. swell, because the freight thou art charged with is of poison.

7 From the word Like to marble heaven, inclusively, is not found in the quarto 1622. Pope thinks that it would be better omitted, as an unnatural excursion in this place. Shakespeare probably derived his knowledge upon this subject from the second book and ninety-seventh chapter of Pliny's Natural History, 1601:—

'And the sea Pontus evermore floweth and runneth out into the Propontic; but the sea never redireth backe againe into Pontus.' Mr. Edwards conceived this simile to allude to Sir Philip Sidney's device, whose impression Camden, in his Remains, says, was the Caspian sea, with this motto, Sine refluxu.

8 Ca. able seems to be here used for expansive, com-

Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance bound-
teous,

And will upon the instant put thee to't:
Within these three days let me hear thee say,
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead; 'tis done, at your request:
But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lowd mixer; O, damn her!
Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw,
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil. Now art thou my lieutenant.

Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Enter DEADEMONA,
EMILIA, and Clown.

Des. Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?

Cl. I dare not say, he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?

Cl. He is a soldier; and for me to say a soldier lies is stabbing.

Des. Go to; Where lodges he?

Cl. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.¹²

Des. Can any thing be made of this?

Cl. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say—he lies here, or he lies there, were to be in my own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified by report?

Cl. I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.¹³

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him have moved my lord in his behalf, and hope, all will be well.

Cl. To do this, is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.]

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,
Emilia?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse
Full of cruozadoes.¹⁴ And, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking.

prelusive. Nashe, in his Pierces Penitence, 1602, employs the word in the same manner:—'Then belike, quoth I, you make this word, Damsen, a capable name,
of gods, of men, of devils.'

9 This expression occurs in Soliman and Perseda, 1600:—

'Now by the marble face of the welkin,' &c.

So in Marston's Antonio and Mellicka, 1602:—

'And please'd the marble heavens.'

10 The first quarto reads excellent. By executing Shakespeare meant employment or exercise. So in Love's Labour's Lost:—

'Full of comparisons and wounding floes,

Which you on all estates will execute.'

And in Troilus and Cressida:—

'In fellest manner execute your arms.'

11 Shakespeare always uses remorse for pity or com-miseration. 'Let him command whatever bloody business, and in me it shall be an act not of cruelty but of pity or commiseration to obey him.' The quarto reads,
'What bloody business over.'

12 This and the following speech are wanting in the first quarto.

13 i. e. and by them, when answered, form my own answer to you. The qualms of the answer is in character.

14 Cruozadoes were not current, as it should seem, at Venice, though they certainly were in England, in the time of Shakespeare; who has here again departed from the strict propriety of national costume. It appears from Rider's Dictionary that there were three sorts of cruza-does: one with a long cross, one with a short cross, and the great cruzado of Portugal. They were of gold, and weighed from two pennyweights six grains, to two penny-weights sixteen grains, and differed in value from six shillings and eightpence to nine shillings. The sovereigns who struck these coins were Emanuel and his son John of Portugal. Mr. Deane has given the

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think, the sun, where he was born,

Drew all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now, till Cassio

Be call'd to him.—How is't with you, my lord?

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. Well, my good lady.—[Aside.] O, hardness to dissemble!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand: This hand is moist, my lady.

Des. It yet has felt no age, nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness, and liberal heart; Hot, hot, and moist; This hand of yours requires

A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,

Much castigation, exercise devout;

For here's a young and sweating devil here,

That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand, A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;

For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand: The hearts of old, gave hands;

But our new heraldry is—hands, not hearts.¹

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come, now, your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck?

Des. I have sent to bid Cassio come speak with you.

Oth. I have a salt and sullen² rheum offends me; Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

Oth. That is a fault:

That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer,³ and could almost read

The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it,

'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my father Entirely to her love; but if she lost it,

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye Should hold her loathly, and his spirits should hunt

After new fancies: See, dying, gave it me;

And bid me, when my fate would have me wive, To give it her. I did so: and take heed of't,

Make it a darling like your precious eye;

To lose or give't away, were such perdition, As nothing else could match.

1 Warburton thought that this was a satirical allusion to the new order of baronets, created by James I. in 1611. Sir William Macintosh supports him in this supposition, and has pointed out a similar allusion in The Merry Wives of Windsor. But if the play was written in 1603, as Malone presumes, this is a sufficient refutation. Warburton has a further conceit, that by the word hearts the poet meant to allude to the gallantry of the reign of Elizabeth, in which men distinguished themselves by their heart; and that by hands those courtiers were pointed at, who served her inglorious successor by their gold.

Desdemona is too fanciful to require an answer.—Steevens observes, that 'the absurdity of making Othello so familiar with British heraldry, the use of a consistory as well as policy in any sneer of Shakespeare at the badge of honours instituted by a prince whom he was sollicitous to flatter, and at whose court this very piece was acted in 1613, are strong arguments against the propriety of Warburton's explanation.'

In various parts of our poet's works he has alluded to the custom of plighting troth by the union of hands. So in The Tempest:—

'Mir. My husband then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing

As bondage e'er of freedom. Here's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in it.'

'The hearts of old, (says Othello,) dictated the union of hands, which formerly were joined with the hearts of the parties in them; but in our modern marriages hands alone are united, without hearts.'

Des. Is it possible?

Oth. 'Tis true: there's magic in the web of it:

A sibyl, that had number'd in the world

The sun to make two hundred compasses,

In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;

The worms were hallow'd, that did breed the silk;

And it was dyed in mummy,⁴ which the skilful

Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.⁵

Des. Indeed! is't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to't well.

Des. Then 'would to heaven, that I had never seen it.

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Oth. Is't lost? is't gone? speak, is it out of the way?

Des. Heaven bless us!

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; But what an if it were?

Oth. Ha!

Des. I say it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch't, let me see it.

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now;

This is a trick, to put me from my suit;

I pray, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me that handkerchief: my mind mis gives.

Des. Come, come;

You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.⁶

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. A man that, all his time,

Hath founded his good fortune on your love;

Shar'd dangers with you;——

Oth. The handkerchief,——

Des. In sooth,

You are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exit OTHELLO.]

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief:

I am most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungerly, and when they are full,

They belch us. Look you! Cassio, and my husband.

Enter IAGO and CASSIO.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do't;

And, lo, the happiness! go, and importune her.

Des. How now, good Cassio? what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech you, That, by your virtuous means, I may again

Exist, and be a member of his love,

Whom I, with all the duty⁷ of my heart,

3 The folio reads 'sorry.' Rider explains sullen by acerbous, Latin.

4 A charmer, for an enchanter, is of common occurrence in the Poems. So in Ferkins's Discourse on Witchcraft, 1610:—'By witches we understand not only those which kill and torment, but all charmere, jugglers, all wizards, commonly called wise men and wise women, &c.'

5 The balsamic liquor running from mummies was formerly celebrated for its anti-epileptic virtues. We are now wise enough to know that the qualities ascribed to it are all imaginary; yet this fanciful medicine held a place in the druggists' shops till lately. It was much coveted by painters, as a transparent brown colour that threw a warmth into the shadows of a picture.

6 The quarto reads 'with the skilful conservators;' &c. So in The Microcosmos of John Davies of Hereford, 4to. 1605:—

'Mummy made of the mere heart of love.'

7 This and the following short speech are omitted in all the ancient editions but the first quarto. The singular phraseology, 'talk me of Cassio,' is illustrated in a note on The Taming of the Shrew, Act I. Sc. 2.

8 The folio reads 'the office of my heart:' the words were, however, synonymous. Thus Barlet:—'Duties, office, duty of behaviour in honesty and reason: officium.' So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'—— his goodly eyes—now turn

The office and devotion of their view;' &c.

Entirely honour; I would not be delay'd:
If my offence be of such mortal kind,
That neither service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me into his love again,
But to know so must be my benefit;
So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content,
And shut myself up¹ in some other course,
To fortune's alms.

Des. Alas! thrice gentle Cassio,
My advocacy is not now in tune;
My lord is not now my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour,² as in honour, alter'd.
So help me, every spirit sanctified,
As I have spoken for you all my best;
And stood within the blank³ of his displeasure,
For my free speech! You must a while be patient;
What I can do, I will; and more I will,
Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?
Emil. He went hence but now,
And, certainly, in strange uneasiness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,
When it hath blown his ranks into the air;
And, like the devil, from his very arm
Puff'd his own brother;—And can he be angry?
Something of moment, then: I will go meet him;
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Des. I prythee, do so.—Something, sure, of state,—(Exit Iago.)

Either from Venice; or some unbatch'd practice,⁴
Made demonstrable here in Cyprus to him,—
Hath puddled his clear spirit: and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even so:
For let our finger ache, and it induceth⁵
Our other healthful members ev'n to that sense
Of pain: Nay, we must think, men are not gods;
Nor of them look for such observances
As fit the bridal.—Beshrew me much, Emilia,
I was, (unhandsome warrior⁶ as I am,)
Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;
But now I find, I had suborn'd the witness,
And he's indicted falsely.

Emil. Pray heaven, it be state matters, as you think;

And no conception, nor no jealous toy,
Concerning you.

Des. Alas, the day! I never gave him cause.

Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;
They are not ever jealous for the cause,
But jealous for they are jealous: 'tis a monster,
Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him.—Cassio, walk hereabout:
If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,
And seek to effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

(Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.)

1 'Si nequeo placidas affari Caesaris aures,
Salem aliquis veniat, qui mihi dicat, abi.'

2 Here again is a strange discordance of opinion in the commentators on the meaning of shut myself up, which evidently signifies no more than 'confine myself.' One of the old quartos reading 'shoot myself up,' by mistake, Mason absurdly contends for that reading.—'To fortune's alms' means waiting patiently for whatever bounty fortune, or chance, may bestow upon me. We have the same uncommon phrase in King Lear:—

'—Let your study
Be to content your lord, who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms.'

3 I. e. in countenance.

4 To stand within the blank is to stand in the direct range or in the immediate course; to have his displeasure directed toward her.

5 Some undeveloped treason.

6 I have elsewhere observed that to induce was used formerly where we now use to induce. Ophelia, in Hamlet, Act IV. Sc. 7. is said to be 'induced unto that element.' Malone has well explained the meaning of

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?
How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?

*I*faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging, Cassio.
What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours
More tedious than the dial eight score times?
O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca;
I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;
But I shall, in a more continuant time,
Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

(Giving her DESDEMONA'S Handkerchief.)
Take me this work out.¹

Bian. O, Cassio, whence came this?

This is some token from a newer friend.

To the felt absence now I feel a cause:

Is it come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to! woman,
Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous now,
That this is from some mistress, some remembrance:
No, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not, sweet: I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well; ere it be demanded,
(As like enough, it will,) I'd have it copied:
Take it, and do't: and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore?

Cas. I do attend here on the general;

And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?²

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.

I pray you, bring me on the way a little;

And say, if I shall see you soon at night.

Cas. 'Tis but a little way, that I can bring you,

For I attend here: but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circumstanc'd.

(Exeunt.)

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Before the Castle. Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.

Iago. Will you think so?

Oth.

Think so, Iago?

Iago.

What?

To kiss in private?

Oth.

An unauthoris'd kiss.

Iago. Or to be naked with her friend abed,

An hour, or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth.

Naked abed, Iago, and not mean harm?

It is hypocrisy against the devil:¹

the passage:—'Let but our finger ache, and this sensation so gets possession of, and is so infused into the other members, as to make them all participate of the pain.'

'—totumque infusa per artus.'

Mens agitat molem, et magno se corpore miscet.

7 I. e. the nuptial feast. 8 See Act II. Sc. 1.

9 I. e. copy this work in another handkerchief. See Act III. Sc. 2. So in Middleton's Women beware Women:—

'—she intends

To take out other works in a new sampler.'

Again in the Preface to Holland's Pliny, 1601:—'Nicophanes (a famous painter) gaye his mind wholly to antique pictures, partly to exemplify and take out patterns, after that in long continuance of time they were decayed.'

10 This and the following speech are wanting in the first quarto.

11 'We must suppose that Iago had been applying cases of false comfort to Othello; as that though the parties had been even found in bed together, there might be no harm done: it might be only for trial of their virtue; as was reported of the Romish saint, Robert D'Arbreisel, and his nurse.—Warburton.

They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts,¹ and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing, 'tis a venial slip:
But if I give my wife a handkerchief,—

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then, 'tis hers, my lord; and, being hers,

She may, I think, bestow't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too;
May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;
They have it very oft, that have it not:
But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it:—

Thou said'st,—O, it comes o'er my memory,
As doth the raven o'er the infected house,
Boding to all,—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?

Oth. That's not so good, now.

Iago. What, if I had said, I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say,—As knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistresses,
Convinced or supplied² them, cannot choose
But they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assur'd,
No more than he'll unswear.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. 'Faith, that he did,—I know not what he did.

Oth. What? what?

Iago. Lie—

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her, on her; what you will.

Oth. Lie with her! lie on her!—We say, lie on her, when they belie her: Lie with her! that's falsome,—Handkerchief,—confession,—handkerchief.—To confess, and be hanged for his labour.³
—First to be hanged, and then to confess:—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion, without some instruction.⁴
It is not words, that shake me thus:—Fie!—
Noses, ears, and lips:—Is it possible?—Confess!
—Handkerchief!—O, devil! [Falls in a Trance.]

Iago. Work on,
My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames, even thus,
All guiltless meet reproach.—What, ho! my lord!

1 The devil tempts their virtue by stirring up their passions, and they tempt heaven by placing themselves in a situation which makes it scarcely possible to avoid falling by the gratification of them. Perhaps the story of St. Adhelm, related in Bale's Actes of English Votaries, is referred to:—This Adhelmus never refused women, but wold have them commonly both at borde and bedde, to mocke the devyll wylk, &c. See also Fabian's Chronicle, Part iv. ch. 141.

2 The raven was thought to be a constant attendant on a house infected with the plague.

3 I.e. by their own importunity overcome the resistance of a mistress, or, in compliance with her own request, and in consequence of her unsolicited fondness, gratified her desires. Mariana tells Angelo, in Measure for Measure:—

'And did supply thee at thy garden house.'
Theobald thought that supplied should be supplied, I.e. made her plizant to his desires.

4 This proverbial saying is used in Marlowe's Jew of Malta:

'Blame us not, but the proverb—Confess and be hang'd.'

And in one of the old collections there is an epigram on it.—All that remains of this speech, from to confess, is wanting in the quarto.

5 'The starts and broken reflections in this speech (says Warburton) have something in them very terrible, and show the mind of the speaker to be in inexorable agonies.'

There is a difference of opinion between the commentators; some thinking with Warburton that the words 'Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing

Enter Cassio.

My lord, I say! Othello!—How now, Cassio?

Cas. What is the matter?

Iago. My lord is fallen into an epilepsy;

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.

Iago. No, forbear:

The lethargy must have his quiet course:

If not, he foams at mouth; and, by and by,

Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:

Do you withdraw yourself a little while,

He will recover straight; when he is gone,

I would on great occasion speak with you.—

[Exit Cassio.]

How is it, general? have you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven;

'Would, you would bear your fortunes like a man.

Oth. A borned man's a monster, and a beast.

Iago. There's many a beast, then, in a populous city,

And many a civil monster.

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good sir, be a man;

Think, every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,

May draw with you; there's millions now alive,

That nightly lie in those unproper⁶ beds,

Which they dare swear peculiar; your case is better.

O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,

To lip a wanton in a secure couch,⁷

And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;

And, knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. O, thou art wise; 'tis certain.

Iago. Stand you awhile apart;

Confine yourself but in a patient list.⁸

Whilst you were here, ere while mad⁹ with your grief,

(A passion most unsuited such a man,)

Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,

And laid good 'scuse upon your ecstasy;

Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;

The which he promis'd. Do but encave¹⁰ yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,

That dwell in every region of his face;¹¹

For I will make him tell the tale anew,—

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife:

I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience:

Or I shall say, you are all in all in spleen,

And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?

I will be found most cunning in my patience;

But (dost thou hear?) most bloody.

passion, without some instruction,' allude to his own feelings; others that they advert to the story about Cassio's dream, which had been invented and told him by Iago. I must confess that I incline to the latter opinion: 'Nature would not express such admirations of passion without some former experience.' I think this view of the passage confirmed by these words in a former scene:—

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion.

For (as Sir Joshua Reynolds observes) 'Othello, in broken sentences and single words, all of which have a reference to the cause of his jealousy, shows that all the proofs are present at once to his mind, which so overpower it that he falls into a trance.'

6 Unproper for common. So in The Mative, a collection of Epigrams and Satires:—

'Rose is a fyre, but not a proper woman

Can any creature proper be that's common?'

7 In a couch in which he is lulled into a false security and confidence in his wife's virtue: a Latin sense. So in The Merry Wives of Windsor:—'Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty,' &c.

8 I.e. within the bounds of patience.

9 The folio reads 'overwhelmed with your grief.'

10 Hide yourself in a private place.

11 Congreve might have had this passage in his memory when he made Lady Touchwood say to Maskwell, 'Ten thousand meanings lurk in each corner of that various face.'

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?
[OTHELLO withdraws.]
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A housewife, that by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and clothes: It is a creature,
That dotes on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's plague,

To beguile many, and be beguild by one;
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter.—Here he comes:—

Re-enter Cassio.

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour
Quite in the wrong.—How do you now, lieutenant?

Cas. The worse, that you give me the addition,
Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Fly Desdemona well, and you are sure of't.
Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power,

[Speaking lower.]

How quickly should you speed?

Cas. Alas, poor caltiff!

Oth. Look, how he laughs already! [Aside.]

Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think 'faith she loves me.

Oth. Now he denotes it faintly, and laughs it out.

[Aside.]

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. Now he importunes him

To tell it o'er: Go to; well said, well said. [Aside.]

Iago. She gives it out, that you shall marry her:

Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. Do you triumph, Roman? do you triumph?

[Aside.]

Cas. I marry her!—what? a customer? I pray-thee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Ha, ha, ha!

Oth. So, so, so, so: They laugh that win.

[Aside.]

Iago. 'Faith, the cry goes, that you shall marry
her.

Cas. Pr'ythee, say true.

Iago. I am a very villain else.

Oth. Have you scored me! [Aside.]

Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out: she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.

Oth. Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.

[Aside.]

Cas. She was here even now: she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the seabank with certain Venetians; and thither comes this bauble; by this hand, she falls thus about my neck;—

Oth. Crying, O, dear Cassio! as it were: his gesture imports it.

[Aside.]

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me;
so hales, and pulls me: ha, ha, ha!—

Oth. Now he tells, how she pluck'd him to my chamber: O, I see that none of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.

[Aside.]

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another fitchew! warry, a porcupine one.—What do you mean by this haunting of me?

1 Unbookish for ignorant.

2 Othello calls him Roman ironically. Triumph brought Roman into his thoughts. 'What (says he) you are triumphing as great as a Roman?'

3 A common woman, with whom any one may be familiar.

4 i. e. 'have you numbered my days?' To score is to tale or tell, to number, or mark as on a tally. But perhaps it only means, 'have you marked me?' as beasts are scored or marked when purchased for slaughter.

5 The old quarto reads 'have you scored me?'
6 The folio omits 'by this hand;' and reads 'thither comes the bauble and falls me thus.' &c.

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
What did you mean by that same handkerchief, you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out the whole work!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some-man's token, and I must take out the work!
There,—give it your hobby-horse: whosoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca? how now?
how now?

Oth. By heaven, that should be my handkerchief.

Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may: as you will not, come when you are next prepared for. [Exit.]

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. 'Faith, I must, she'll rail in the street else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. 'Faith, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Pr'ythee, come; Will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. [Exit CASIO.]

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laughed at his vice?

Oth. O, Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman, your wife! also gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine years a killing:—A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damned to-night; for she shall not live: No, my heart is turned to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand.

O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—She debauch with her needle!—An admirable musician!
O, she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—
Of so high and plentiful wit and invention!—

Iago. She is the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand, a thousand times:—And then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain: But yet the pity of it,
Iago!—O, Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into messes!—Cuckold me!

Iago. O, 'tis foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Got me some poison, Iago: this night:—
I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind again: this night, Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases; very good.

Iago. And, for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker: You shall hear more by midnight.

[A Trumpet within.]

8 Shakespeare has alluded to the best of this animal in King Lear. He tells Iago that Bianca is as lowly, but of a better sort, the polecat being a very stinking animal.

9 This thought, which concerns the puffs, occurs again in Antony and Cleopatra, Act IV. Sc. 5:—

— throw my heart

Against the firm and hardness of my fault,
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all four thoughts.

10 — when she hath sung.

The tiger would be tame. Venus and Adonis

11 'Why then give sin a passport to offend.'

Tragedy of King Richard III. 1592.

Oth. Excellent good.—What trumpet is that same?

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico,

Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with him.

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Lod. 'Save you, worthy general!'

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you.

[Gives him a Packet.]

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the Packet, and reads.]

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you: How does lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fallen between him and my lord

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord?

Oth. This fail you not to do, as you will—
[Reads.]

Lod. He did not call; he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt thy lord and Cassio?

Des. A most unhappy one; I would do much To atone¹ them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be, the letter mov'd him;

For, as I think, they do command him home, Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. By my troth, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed.

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. How, sweet Othello?

Oth. Devil!

Des. I have not deserv'd this.

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice; Though I should swear I saw it: 'Tis very much, Make her amends, she weeps.

Oth. O, devil, devil! If that the earth could teem with woman's tears, Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile:—Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:— I do beseech your lordship, call her back.

Oth. Mistress,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Lod. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her turn;

Sir, she can turn, and turn,⁴ and yet go on, And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep; And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,— Very obedient:—Proceed you in your tears.— Concerning this, sir,—O, well painted passion! I am commanded home:—Get you away; I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate, And will return to Venice;—Hence, avaunt!

[Exit DESDEMONA.] Cassio shall have my place. And,—sir,—to-night, I do entreat that we may sup together.

You are welcome, sir, to Cyprus.—Goats, and monkeys.⁵ [Exit.]

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full senate Call—all-in-all sufficient?—This the noble nature Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue The shot of accident, nor dart of chance, Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain?

Iago. He is that he is; I may not breathe my converse.

What he might be,—if what he might, he is not,— I would to heaven, he were.

Lod. What, strike his wife?

Iago. 'Faith, that was not so well; Yet 'would I know,

That stroke would prove the worst.

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood, And now create this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me, to speak What I have seen and known. You shall observe him;

And his own courses will denote him so, That I may save my speech: Do but go after, And mark how he continues.

Lod. I am sorry, that I am deceiv'd in him.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. A Room in the Castle. Enter.

OTHELLO and EMILIA.

Oth. You have seen nothing, then?

Emil. Nor ever heard; nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm: and then I heard Each syllable that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

Emil. Never.

4 So in King Henry VI. Part I.

'Done like a Frenchman; turn and turn again.'

5 The quarto reads, 'I am commanded here.'

6 In this exclamation Shakespeare has shown great art. Iago in the first scene, in which he endeavours to awaken his suspicion, being urged to give some evident proof of the guilt of Cassio and Desdemona, tells him it were impossible to have culled a demonstration of it, though they should be as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys. These words, we may suppose, still ring in the ears of Othello, who, being now fully convinced of his wife's infidelity, rushes out with this emphatic exclamation: 'Iago's words were but too true; now, indeed, I am convinced that they are as hot as goats and monkeys.'

7 There are great difficulties in ascertaining the place of this scene. What Othello says in an early part of it to Emilia—'Leave procreants alone, and shut the door,'—and his subsequent address to her as he goes out, decisively point out a room in Othello's Castle as the place of the scene; and compel us to place the interlocutors there, however inconsistent with Roderigo's entry, and Iago's address to Desdemona. 'Go in and weep not.' The truth is, that our poet and his audience, in this instance, as in many others, were content, from want of scenery, to consider the very same spot, at one and the same time, as the outside and inside of a house. See the Historical Account of the English Stage, &c. [Boswell's edition of Malone's Shakespeare, vol. iii.]—Malone.

1 The quarto reads 'God save the worthy general.' Malone says that the reply of Othello does not relate to what Lodovico has just said, but is spoken by Othello while he salutes him. Stevens, on the contrary, thinks that 'The distracted Othello, considering his happiness in this world at an end, readily catches at the idea of future felicity suggested by the words Save you, general!' He adds, 'If it be urged that the words only mean preserve you in this world, my sense of the passage will not be much weakened; as our protection, even here, depends on the Almighty.'—In Measure for Measure (Act ii. Sc. 3) two replies of Angelo to similar salutations from Isabella are equally equivocal.

2 i. e. make them one, reconcile them.

3 'If women's tears could impregnate the earth.' By the doctrine of equivocal generation new animals were supposed producible by new combinations of matter. See Bacon, v. iii. p. 70, edit. 1740. Shakespeare here alludes to the fabulous accounts which make the crocodile the most deceitful of animals, whose tears are proverbially fallacious. 'It is written that he will weep over a man's head when he hath devoured the body, and will then eat up the head too.' Wherefore in Latin there is a proverb, 'Crocodile lachrymæ, crocodile tears, to signify such tears as are feigned, and spent only with intent to deceive or do harm.'—Bullock's Expositor, 1616.

To fall, in this passage, is a verb active.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wager she is honest, Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other, Remove your thought; it doth abuse your bosom. If any wretch hath put this in your head, Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse! For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true, There's no man happy; the purest of their wives! Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go.—

[Exit EMILIA.]

She says enough:—yet she's a simple bawd, That cannot say as much. This is a subtle where, A closet-lock-and-key of villainous secrets: And yet she'll kneel, and pray; I have seen her do't.

Re-enter EMILIA, with DESDEMONA.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. Some of your function, mistress;

[To EMILIA.]

Leave procreants alone, and shut the door; Cough, or cry—hem, if any body come: Your mystery, your mystery;—nay despatch.

[Exit EMILIA.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?

I understand a fury in your words, But not the words.¹

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself; Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils themselves Should fear to seize thee: therefore be double damn'd, Swear—thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? How am I false?

Oth. O, Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day!—Why do you weep?

Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?

If, haply, you my father do suspect,

An instrument of this your calling back, Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost him,

Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven

To try me with affliction; had he rain'd

All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head; Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips; Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes; I should have found in some part of my soul A drop of patience: but (alas!) to make me A fixed figure, for the time of scorn² To point his slow unmoving finger at,— O! O!

Yet could I bear that too; well, very well: But there, where I have garner'd³ up my heart; Where either I must live, or bear no life;⁴ The fountain from the which my current runs, Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion there!

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubim; Ay, there, look grim as hell!

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me honest. Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the shambles, That quicken even with blowing. O, thou weed,⁵ Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet, That the sense aches at thee.—'Would, thou had'st ne'er been born!

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed?

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book, Made to write whore upon? What committed?

Committed!—O, thou public commoner!

I should make very forges of my cheeks, That would to cinders burn up modesty, Did I but speak thy deeds.—What committed! Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon winks; The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,⁶ Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth, And will not hear it: What committed!— Impudent strumpet!

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord,⁷

From any other foul unlawful touch,

Be—not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is it possible?

Des. O, heaven forgive us!

Oth.

I cry your mercy, then; I took you for that cunning whore of Venice, That married with Othello.—You, mistress,

Re-enter EMILIA.

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter, And keep the gate of hell; You! you! ay, you! We have done our course; there's money for your pains;

I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive? How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. 'Faith, half asleep.

1 The quarto reads 'of her sex.'

2 This line is not in the folio.

3 Rowe reads 'the hand of scorn,' an elegant and satisfactory emendation; and it is to be wished that there was sufficient authority to admit it into the text. Steevens thinks the old reading right, saying, that Othello takes his idea from a clock: 'To make me (says he) a fixed figure (on the dial of the world) for the hour of scorn to point and make a full stop at'—adverting many similar expressions in defence of it, as 'the hour of death,' 'the day of judgment,' 'the moment of evil'; and in King Richard the Third:—

'Had you such leisure in the time of death.'

The folio reads and moving instead of unmoving. To me there seems to be no objection in 'slow moving'; about which Malone and Mason make difficulties. The epithet derives support from Shakespeare's 104th Sonnet:—

'Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand, Steal from his figure, and no pace perceived; So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand, Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceived.'

The finger of the dial was the technical phrase. And in The Comedy of Errors we have—

'Time's deformed (i. e. deforming) hand.'

4 I. a. treasured up.

5 'Whereby we do exist or cease to be.' Lear

6 So in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'So half my Egypt were submarg'd, and made A cistern for scald snakes.'

7 'At such an object do thou, patience, thyself change colour'; at this do thou, even thou, rosy cherub as thou art, look grim as hell.' The old copies have, 'I here look grim as hell.' I was written for ay; and here was an evident error of the press for there. Theo bald made the correction.

8 The quarto reads:—

'O thou black weed, why art so lovely fair?'

Thou smell'st so sweet, that the sense aches at thee.' 9 This and the three following lines are not in the first quarto. The peculiar sense in which committed is here used may be gathered from King Lear, Act iii. Sc. 14:—'Commit not with man's sworn spouse.' It is so used by many of our old writers, and comes from the transgression, being a violation of the commandment, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery.'

10 So in the Merchant of Venice:—

'Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind.'

11 This expression is from Sacred Wit:—'To possess his vessel in sanctification.'

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?
Des. With who?
Emil. Why, with my lord, madam,
Des. Who is thy lord?¹
Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.
Des. I have none: Do not talk to me, Emilia;
 I cannot weep; nor answer I have none,
 But what should go by water.² 'Prythee, to-night
 Lay on my bed my wedding sheets,—remember;—
 And call thy husband hither.
Emil. Here is a change indeed! [Emil.]
Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet.
 How have I been behav'd, that he might stick
 The small'st opinion on my great'st abuse?³

Re-enter EMILIA, with IAGO.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is it with you?
Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes,
 Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks:
 He might have chid me so; for, in good faith,
 I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?
Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhord'd her,
 Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her,
 As true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?
Iago. What name, fair lady?
Des. Such as, she says, my lord did say I was.
Emil. He call'd her, whore; a beggar in his drink
 Could not have laid such terms upon his callet.⁴
Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I am sure, I am none such.
Iago. Do not weep, do not weep; Alas, the day!
Emil. Has she forsook so many noble matches,
 Her father and her country, and her friends,
 To be call'd—where? would it not make one weep?
Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beahrew him for it!
 How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.
Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain,
 Some busy and insinuating rogue,
 Some cogging cozening slave, to get some office,
 Have not devis'd this slander; I'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man; it is impossible.
Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!
Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her, whore? who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's abus'd by some most villanous knave,⁵
 Some base notorious⁶ knave, some scurvy fellow:—
 O, heaven, that such companions⁷ thou'dst unfold;

1 This and the following speech are not in the quarto.

2 There are some lines on the death of Queen Elizabeth, in Camden, also to be found in Decker's Wonderful Yeare, 1603, which conclude with a similar couplet:—

'I think the barge-men might with easer thighs
 Have rowed her thither in her people's eyes:
 For how-so-e're, thus much my thoughts have scan'd,
 Sh'ad come by water, had she come by land.'

3 This is the reading of the quarto: which Dr. Johnson thought preferable to the reading of the folio—on my least misuse.

4 A callet is a trull, a drab. The word is of great antiquity in the English language. Chaucer has it in his Remedy of Love. Harington uses it in his translation of Ariosto, 1591:—

'And thus this old ill-favour'd spiteful callet.' In a note he says, 'Callet is a nick-name used to a woman'; and that in Irish it signifies a witch. The etymology of the word is yet to seek.

5 The quarto has, 'some outrageous knave.'

6 Some notorious knave is here used for some knave worthy to be noted, or branded to everlasting infamy.

7 It has been already observed that companions was a term of contempt.

8 'Do not clamour so as to be heard beyond the house.'

And put in every honest hand a whip,
 To lash the rascal naked through the world,
 Even from the east to the west!

Iago. Speak within door.⁸
Emil. O, fie upon him! some such squire he was,
 That turn'd your wit the seamy side without,⁹
 And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. O, good Iago,
 What shall I do to win my lord again?

Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven,
 I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel!¹⁰—

If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
 Either in discourse of thought,¹¹ or actual deed;
 Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,
 Delighted them in any other form;
 Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
 And ever will,—though he do shake me off
 To beggarly divorcement,—love him dearly,
 Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;
 And his unkindness may defeat my life,
 But never taint my love. I cannot say, where;
 It does abhor me, now I speak the word;
 To do the act that might the addition earn,
 Not the world's mass of vanity could make me.

Iago. I pray you, be content; 'tis but his humour;
 The business of the state does him offence,
 And he does chide with you.¹²

Des. If 'twere no other,—
Iago. It is but so, I warrant you. [Trumpets.]
 Hark, how these instruments summon to supper!
 And the great messengers of Venice stay!¹³
 Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exeunt DESDEMONA and EMILIA.]

Enter RODRIGO.

How now, Rodrigo?
Rod. I do not find, that thou deal'st justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?
Rod. Every day thou do'st at me with some device, Iago; and rather, (as it seems to me now,) keep'st from me all convenience, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. I will, indeed, no longer endure it: Nor am I yet persuaded, to put up in peace what already I have foolishly suffered.

Iago. Will you hear me, Rodrigo?
Rod. Faith, I have heard too much; for your words and performances, are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.
Rod. With nought but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me, to deliver to Desdemona, would half have corrupted a votarist: You have told me she has received them, and returned me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance;¹⁴ but I find none.

Iago. In a former scene, speaks of Rodrigo as of one 'Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side outward.'

10 The quarto omits the rest of this speech.

11 'Discourse of thought' is the 'discursive range of thought.' Pope changed it to 'discourse or thought.' I have shown in a former page that the old reading is the poet's mode of expression. So in Davies's Epigrams, v. In Plurimos:—

'But since the devill brought them thus together,
 To my discoursing thoughts it is a wonder,
 Why presently, as soon as they came thither,
 The selfe same devill did them part asunder.'

Steevens thought Pope's alteration defensible, because the Liturgy mentions three modes of committing sin—

'in thought, word, and deed.'

12 This was the phraseology of the time. 'To complain, to make a quarrel, to chide with one for a thing Expostulare a queri.' Again:—'Is it best to chide with him or take him up for this displeasure or wrong?'—

Baret. So Shakespeare's 11th Sonnet:—

'O for my sake do you with fortune chide.'

13 Thus the quarto. The folio poorly reads:—

'The messengers of Venice stay the meat.'

14 The folio reads acquaintance. Acquittance is required. So in King Henry V.:—

'And shall forge the offence of our hand
 Sooner than quitance of desert and mark.'

Iago. Well; go to; very well.

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor 'tis not very well: By this hand, I say, it is very scarry; and begin to find myself fobbed in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you, 'tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: If she will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not, assure yourself, I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now.

Rod. Ay, and I have said nothing, but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there's mettle in thee; and even, from this instant, do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: Thou hast taken against me a moost just exception; but yet I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appeared; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment.¹ But, Roderigo, if thou hast that within thee, indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean, purpose, courage, and valour,—this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoyest not Desdemona, take me from this world with treachery, and devise engines for my life.²

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason, and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice, to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be linger'd here by some accident; wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean—removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him uncapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me do?

Iago. Ay; if you dare do yourself a profit, and a right. He sups to-night with a harlot,³ and thither will I go to him;—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune: if you will watch his going thence, (which I will furnish to fall out between twelve and one,) you may take him at your pleasure; I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amazed at it, but go along with me; I will shew you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high supper-time, and the night grows to waste:⁴ about it.

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisfied. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another Room in the Castle. Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 'twill do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

¹ Shakespeare knew well that most men like to be flattered on account of those endowments in which they are most deficient. Hence Iago's compliment to this snipe on his sagacity and shrewdness. —Malone.

² To devise engines seems to mean to contrive instruments of torture, &c. So in King Lear:—
'—like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature.'

³ The folio reads 'a harlotry.' Shakespeare has the expression, 'a peevish self-will'd harlotry,' in two other plays.

⁴ i. e. the night is wasting space. So in Julius Caesar:—

'Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.'

⁵ The quarto of 1623 reads 'good faith.'

⁶ Mad must here be accepted as meaning wild, unruly, fickle. As a constant mind meant a firm or sound one, inconstancy would of course be considered a species of madness.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?—

O.—Desdemona,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant, I will be returned forthwith: dismiss your attendant there; look, it be done.

Des. I will, my lord.

[Exit Oth. Lod. and Attendants.]

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says he will return incontinent.

He hath commanded me to go to bed,

And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia, Give me my nightgown, and adieu: We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I; my love doth so approve him,

That even his stubbornness, his checks, and frowns, Pr'ythee, unpun me,—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I have laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one:—Good father! how foolish are our minds!—

If I do die before thee, pr'ythee, shroud me

In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd—Barbara: She was in love; and, he, she lov'd, prov'd mad,⁷ And did forsake her: she had a song of—willow, An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,

And she died singing it: That song, to-night, Will not go from my mind; I have much to do,⁸

But to go hang my head all at one side, And sing it like poor Barbara. Pr'ythee, despatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your nightgown?

Des. No, unpun me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. And he speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice, who would have walk'd barefoot to Palestine, for a touch of his nether lip.

I.

Des. The poor soul set sighing by a sycamore tree, Sing all a green willow; [Singing.]

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,

Sing willow, willow, willow;

The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;

Sing willow, &c.

Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones;

Lay by these:

Sing willow, willow, willow;

Pr'ythee, hie thee; he'll come anon.—

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

II.

Let nobody blame him, his scorn I approve,—

Nay, that's not next—Hark! who is that knocks?

⁷ From I have much to do, to Nay, that's not next, was inserted after the first edition in quarto, 1623, as was likewise the remaining part of the song. Desdemona means to say—I have much ado to do any thing but hang my head, &c. (This (says Dr. Johnson) is perhaps the only insertion made in the later editions which has improved the play: the rest seem to have been added for the sake of amplification or ornament. When the imagination had subsided, and the mind was no longer agitated by the horror of the action, it became at leisure to look round for specious additions. This addition is natural. Desdemona can at first hardly forbear to sing the song; she endeavours to change her train of thought, but her imagination at last prevails, and she sings it.—The ballad, in two parts, printed from the original in black letter in the Pepys collection, is to be found in Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, vol. i. p. 193.

Emil. It is the wind.
Des. I call'd my love, false love; but what said he then?
Sing willow, &c.
If I court no women, you'll couch with me men.'

So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch?
 Doth that bode weeping?

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I have heard it said so.²—O, these men, these men!

Dost thou in conscience think,—tell me, Emilia,—
 That there be women do abuse their husbands
 In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question.
Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. Why, would not you?

Des. No, by this heavenly light!

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light;
 I might do't as well i' the dark.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. The world is a huge thing: 'Tis a great price

For a small vice.

Des. Good troth, I think thou would'st not.

Emil. By my troth, I think I should; and un-der't, when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring;³ nor for measures of law; nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition; but, for the whole world.—Why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't.

Des. Beahrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world.

Emil. Why the wrong is but a wrong i' the world; and, having the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many
 To the vantage,⁴ as would store the world they play'd for.

But I do think, it is their husbands' faults
 If wives do fall: Say, that they slack their duties,
 And pour our treasures into foreign laps;⁵
 Or else break out in peevish jealousies,
 Throwing restraint upon us; or, say they strike us,
 Or scant our former having⁶ in despite:
 Why, we have galls; and, though we have some grace,

Yet we have some revenge. Let husbands know,
 Their wives have sense⁷ like them: they see, and
 smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
 As husbands have. What is it that they do,
 When they change us for others? Is it sport?
 I think it is; And doth affection breed it?
 I think it doth; Is't frailty, that thus errs?

1 This couplet is not in the original ballad, which is the complaint not of a woman forsaken, but of a man rejected. These lines were properly added when it was accommodated to a woman.

2 This as well as the following speech is omitted in the first quarto.

3 A joint-ring was anciently a common token among lovers. See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, ed. 1632, p. 644. Their nature will be best understood by a passage in Dryden's Don Sebastian:—

— a curious artist wrought them,
 With joints so close as not to be perceived;
 Yet are they both each other's counterpart:
 — and, in the midst,
 A heart divided in two halves was placed.

4 i. e. to boot, over and above. The remaining part of this speech is omitted in the first quarto.

5 So in Shakspeare's 142d Sonnet:—
 'Robb'd other beds' revenues of their rents.'

6 Our former allowance of expense.

7 Sense is here used, as in Hamlet, for sensation, or sensual appetites.

8 The old copy reads, 'their ills instruct us so.'

It is so too; And have not we affections?
 Desires for sport? and frailty, as men have?
 Then, let them use us well: else, let them know,
 The ills we do, their ills instruct us to.⁹

Des. Good night, good night; Heaven me such usage⁹ send,

Not to pick bad from bad; but, by bad, mend!
 [Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I. A Street. Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk; straight will he come;

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
 Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow:
 It makes us, or it maims us; or it kills on that,
 And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand; be bold, and take thy sword. [Retires to a little distance.

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;

And yet he has given me satisfying reasons:—

'Tis but a man gone:—forth, my sword; he dies.

[Goes to his stand.

Iago. I have rubb'd this young quat almost to the sense,¹⁰

And he grows angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,

Every way makes my gain:¹¹ Live Roderigo,

He calls me to a restitution large

Of gold and jewels that I bobb'd¹² from him,

As gifts to Desdemona;

It must not be: if Cassio do remain,

He hath a daily beauty in his life,

That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor

May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril:

No, he must die:—But so, I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he;—villain, thou diest.

[Rushes from his post, and makes a pass at CASSIO.

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy indeed,
 But that my coat is better than thou think'st;
 I will make proof of thine.

[Draws and wounds RODERIGO.

Rod. O, I am slain!

[IAGO rushes from his post, cuts CASSIO behind in the Leg,¹³ and exit.

Cas. I am maim'd for ever:—Help, ho! murder!

murder! [Falls.

Enter OTHELLO, at a distance.

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.

Rod. O, villain that I am!

Oth. Hark! 'Tis even so.

Cas. O, help! ho! light! a surgeon!

Oth. 'Tis he;—O, brave Iago, honest, and just!

That hast such noble sense of thy friend's wrong!

Thou teachest me,—Minion, your dear lies dead,

9 'Such uses' is the reading of the folio; but the first quarto has 'such usage,' which Dr. Johnson prefers, I think, without reason.

10 A quat, in the midland counties, is still used for a pimple, which by rubbing is made to smart, or rubbed to sense. Roderigo is called a quat by the same mode of speech as a low fellow is now termed in low language a scab. To rub to the sense is to rub to the quick. This explanation by Dr. Johnson had previously appeared in the British Magazine, 1743, p. 425. So in The Devil's Law Case, 1623:—'O young quat! incontinence is plagued in all the creatures of the world.' The word is also used in Decker's Gull's Hornbook.

11 The quartos read 'my game.'

12 'That I fool'd him out of.' To bob is to cheat or deceive with a false tale. So in Turberville's Songs and Sonnets:—

'When wedding day was doon,
 To play her pranks, and bob the fool,
 The shrowish wife begoon.'

13 Iago maims Cassio in the leg, in consequence of what he had just heard him say; from which he supposed that his body was defended by some secret armour.

And your fate hies¹ apace;—Strumpet, I come:
Forth² of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted;
Thy bed, lust-stain'd, shall with lust's blood be spotted. [Exit OTHELLO.]

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at a distance.

Cas. What, ho! no watch! no passage? murder!
murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.

Cas. O, help!

Lod. Hark!

Rod. O, wretched villain!

Lod. Two or three groans:—it is a heavy³ night:
These may be counterfeits; let's think't unsafe
To come into the cry, without more help.

Rod. Nobody come? then shall I bleed to death.

Enter IAGO, with a Light.

Lod. Hark!

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.

Iago. Who's there? whose noise is this, that cries on murder?⁴

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did you not hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here; for heaven's sake, help me.

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same, indeed; a very valiant fellow.

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously?

Cas. Iago? O, I am spoil'd, undone by villains!
Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done
this?

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,
And cannot make away.

Iago. O, treacherous villains!—

What are you there? come in, and give some help.
[To LODOVICO and GRATIANO.]

Rod. O, help me here!

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O, murderous slave! O, villain!

[IAGO slays RODERIGO.]

Rod. O, damn'd Iago! O, inhuman dog!—
O! O! O!

Iago. Kill men i' the dark!—Where be these bloody thieves?

How silent is this town!—Ho! murder! murder!
What may you be? are you of good, or evil?

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico?

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy; Here's Cassio hurt
By villains.

Gra. Cassio?

Iago. How is it, brother?

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!—
Light, gentlemen; I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is't that cry'd?

Iago. Who is't that cry'd?

Bian. O, my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio!
O, Cassio! Cassio! Cassio!

Iago. O, notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be, that have thus mangled you?
Cas. No.

Gra. I am sorry, to find you thus: I have been to seek you.

Iago. Lend me a garter:⁵ So.—O, for a chair,
To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints:—O, Cassio! Cassio!
Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury.⁶

Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come;
Lend me a light.—Know we this face, or no?

Alas! my friend, and my dear countryman,⁷ Roderigo? no:—Yes, sure; O, heaven! Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Even he, sir; did you know him?

Gra.

Know him, ay.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry you gentle pardon;
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio?—O, a chair, a chair!

Gra. Roderigo?

Iago. He, he, 'tis he:—O, that's well said;—the chair:—

[A Chair brought in.]

Some good man bear him carefully from hence;

I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—For you, mistress,
[To BIANCA.]

Save you your labour. He that lies slain here,
Cassio,

Was my dear friend: What malice was between you?
Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To BIANCA.] What, look you pale?—O, bear him out o' the air:—

[CASSIO and ROD. are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen:⁸—Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the guestness of her eyes?⁹

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon:—

Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her;

Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak,
Though tongues were out of use.¹¹

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter; what's the matter, husband?

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark,
By Roderigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd;

He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio!

Iago. This is the fruit of whoring.—Pr'ythee,
Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night:¹²—

What, do you shake at that?

¹ Thus the first quarto. The second quarto and the folio read 'And your unbest fate hies.'

² The folio reads 'for off'; the quarto reads forth of, i. e. out of. So in King Richard III.—
'I clothe my naked villainy
With odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ.'

And in Hamlet:—
'Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep.'
Again, in Jonson's Volpone:—
'Forth the resolved corners of his eyes.'

³ 'No passengers? nobody going by?' So in the Comedy of Errors:—
'Now in the stirring passage of the day:
A passenger anciently signified a passage-boat or vessel, and could not therefore be used in its modern sense without an equivocal.

⁴ i. e. a thick cloudy night.

⁵ This phrase, to cry on, for cry out on, has already occurred in Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2.

⁶ This speech is not in the first quarto.

⁷ Thus the folio. The quarto 1622 reads—to bear a part in this.

⁸ This passage incontestably proves that Iago was meant for a Venician.

⁹ Thus the folio. The quarto reads—Stay you, good gentlewoman. It seems probable that Iago addresses Lodovico and Gratiano, who are going away to assist Cassio, and to see him properly taken care of. The subsequent appeal and address of Iago to them appears to confirm this supposition. Malone follows the quarto, and defends the reading of it.

¹⁰ The quarto, instead of guestness, reads features, and instead of stare, in the next line, has stare.

¹¹ So in Hamlet:—
'For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak,
With most miraculous organ.'

¹² In the second scene of the preceding act Iago informs Roderigo that Cassio was to sup with Bianca; that he would go to him there, and bring him away between twelve and one. Indeed Cassio had himself told Iago that he would sup with Bianca, and Iago had promised to meet him at her house. We must suppose, therefore, that this consummate villain thought it more secure to waylay him, as we find he does, without actually joining him at supper time. Otherwise Bianca would surely have answered:—
'Why, you well know
He supp'd,' &c.

Bian. He suppd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me.

Emil. Fie, fie upon thee, strumpet!

Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest, As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I? foh! fie upon thee!

Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd:—

Come, mistress, you must tell us another tale.—

Emilia, run you to the citadel,

And tell my lord and lady what has happ'd.—

Will you go on, I pray;—This is the night, [Aside. That either makes me, or fordoes' me quite.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A Bedchamber: DESDEMONA in Bed asleep. A Light burning. Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul, Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!¹

It is the cause.—Yet I'll not shed her blood;

Nor scar that whiter skin of her's than snow,

And smooth as monumental alabaster.

[Takes off his Sword.

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.

Put out the light, and then—Put out the light!²

If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,

I can again thy former light restore,

Should I repent me:—but once put out thine,³

Thou cunning'st pattern of excell'ing nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat,

That can thy light relume.⁴ When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital growth again,

It needs must wither:—I'll smell it on the tree.—

[Kissing her.

O, balmy breath, that dost almost persuade

Justice to break her sword!⁵—One more, one more.—

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And love thee after:—One more, and this the last:

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,

But they are cruel tears; This sorrow's heavenly;

It strikes, where it doth love.⁶—She wakes—

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth.

Ay, Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth. Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des.

Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime,

Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,

Solicit for it straight.

Steevens suggests that as the former line is imperfect, some such words may have been accidentally omitted. His other supposition, 'perhaps the poet was unwilling that Bianca should say, in the presence of Iago's wife, that he too had been of the supper party,' is much less probable.

1 To fordo is to undo, to ruin, to destroy. So in Hamlet:

'— Did with desperate hand

Fordo his own life.'

2 Othello, full of horror at the cruel action which he is about to perpetrate, seems at this instant to be seeking his justification, from representing to himself the cause,

3 e. the greatness of the provocation he had received.

4 The old copy gives this line thus:—

'Put out the light, and then put out the light.'

The present regulation of the passage, by which so much beauty and spirit is added to it, was proposed by Mr. Upton, but it is to be found in Ayre's Life of Pope; it may therefore have originated with Warburton, who thus explains it:—'The meaning is, I will put out the light, and then proceed to the execution of my purpose. But the expression of putting out the light, bringing to mind the effects of the extinction of the light of life, he breaks short, and questions himself about the effects of this metaphorical extinction, introduced by a repetition of his first words, as much as to say,—But hold, let me first weigh the reflection which this expression naturally excites.' Dr. Farmer treats this as a refinement of Warburton's, observing that to put out the light was a phrase for to kill. Malone stoutly combats on the same side, but his arguments have not convinced me, and I have therefore followed Warburton's arrangement. Mr. Boswell would have done so if he could have used his own discretion. 'I have felt bound, (says he) to print

Des. Alas, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by:

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit:

No!—Heaven forbid!—I would not kill thy soul.⁷

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth.

Ay, I do.

Des.

Then, heaven

Have mercy on me!

Oth.

Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Humph!

Des. And yet I fear you: for you are fatal then.

When your eyes roll so: Why I should fear, I know not,

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel, I fear.

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des.

They are loves I bear to you.

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest.

Des. That death's unnatural, that kills for loving.—

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:

These are portents; but yet, I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me.

Oth.

Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so: What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief, which I so lov'd, and gave thee,

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des.

No, by my life and soul;

Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth.

Sweet soul, take heed,

Take heed of perjury; Thou'rt on thy death-bed.

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth.

Yes, presently:

Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;

For to deny each article with oath,

Cannot remove, nor choke the strong conception,

That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then, Lord have mercy on me!

Oth.

I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too! I never did

Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio,

But with such general warranty of heaven

As I might love: I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in his hand.

O, perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart,

And mak'st me call, what I intend to do,—

(A murder which I thought,)—a sacrifice:⁸

I saw the handkerchief.

the text according to Mr. Malone's opinion; but if Warburton's explanation be an error, it is deus ex machina, for one am very sorry to part with it. Broken sentences, as Mr. Malone has more than once observed, are very much in our poet's manner, and are surely natural in the perturbed state of Othello's mind. I am unwilling to persuade myself that a regulation of the text which contains so much beauty could be merely the refinement of a critic, and that our great author, in one of his most highly-wrought scenes, instead of it, intended nothing but a cold conceit.

4 Thus the quarto. The folio reads—put out thy light. Steevens adopted the present reading for the sake of the measure, and to avoid the useless repetition of the word light.

5 Thus the folio. The first quarto—returne: the second quarto—rehearse.

6 This image seems to be derived from Scripture:—

'Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth.'

7 Davenant has borrowed this thought in his Law of Lombardy:

'I am not fraught with the devil's spleen; I would not hurt thy soul.'

Othello seems to have been a favourite with his author; for he has bestowed on him that piety he has refused to Hamlet.—Steevens.

8 This thought is likewise found in The Legend of Orpheus and Euridice, by H. L. 1597:—

'Unnatural, that kill where you should kiss.'

And in King Richard III.—

'It is a quarrel most unnatural,

To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.'

9 'This line is difficult. Thou hast hardened my heart, and makest me kill thee with the rage of a murderer, when I thought to have sacrificed thee to justice

Des. He found it, then;
I never gave it him:—Send for him hither,
And let him confess a truth.

Oth. He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord?

Oth. That he hath—us'd thee.¹

Des. How? unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He'll not say so.

Oth. No, his mouth is stopp'd;

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for't.

Des. My fear interprets, then,—What, is he dead?

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives,² my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas! he is betray'd, and I undone.

Oth. Out, strumpet! Weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow, let me live to-night.

Oth. Nay, if you strive,—

Des. But half an hour.

Oth. Being done,

There is no pause.³

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late.⁴ [He smothereth her.]

Emil. [Within.] My lord, my lord! what ho!
my lord! my lord!

Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I, that am cruel, am yet merciful;
I would not have thee linger in thy pain.—

So, so.⁵

Emil. [Within.] What ho! my lord, my lord!

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within.] O, good my lord, I would speak
a word with you.

Oth. Yes:—'tis Emilia:—by and by.—She's dead.

'Tis like she comes to speak of Cassio's death:
The noise was high.—Ha! no more moving?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? Were't good?
I think, she stirs again:—No.—What's the best?
If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife?—I have no wife:
O, insupportable! O, heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon: and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

Emil. [Within.] I do beseech you I may speak with you,

O, good my lord!

Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia:—

with the calmness of a priest striking a victim.⁶—Johnson. There is a second attempt at explanation by Johnson, adopting the reading of one of the quartos—'thou dost stone thy heart,' still less successful than the above. The obvious sense of the passage is—'Thou dost harden my heart, and mak'st me now call what I intend to do,—and which I before thought murder,—a sacrifice only.' The difficulty consists in the inverted phrase—'a murder which I thought'—being parenthetical. The passage has been hitherto absurdly pointed. Johnson exclaims—'I am glad that I have ended this dreadful scene. It is not to be endured.'

1 The quarto 1623 reads:—

'That he hath—us'd death'

2 This thought appears to have been common:—

'Know, Caesar, had I now as many lives
As there are stones, or hairs upon my head,
I would,' &c. The Devil's Charter, 1607.

Again, in Beaumont and Fletcher's King and No King, produced in 1611:—

'—but if all

My hairs were lives, I would be engaged
In such a cause.'

3 The first quarto omits this speech.

4 After this speech of Othello, the elder quarto adds an invocation from Desdemona, consisting only of the sacred name thrice repeated. The statute of the 3d of James I. c. 21, against the profane use of the name of God, &c. was highly necessary, for many of the old plays abound in the most wanton and shocking profa-

Soft,—by and by:—Let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou? What's the matter with thee now?
[Unlocks the door.]

Enter Emilia.

Emil. O, good my lord, yonder's foul murder done.

Oth. What? now?

Emil. But now, my lord!

Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more near the earth than she was wont;
And makes men mad.⁷

Emil. Cassio, my lord, has kill'd a young Venetian,

Call'd—Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd?

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd? Then murder's out of tune,
And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Emil. Alas! what cry is that?

Oth. That! what?

Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice:—
Help! help, ho! help!—O lady, speak again!

Sweet Desdemona! O, sweet mistress, speak!

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done

This deed?

Des. Nobody; I myself; farewell:

Commend me to my kind lord; O, farewell. [Dies.]

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?

Emil. Alas, who knows?

Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.

Emil. She said so; I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's like a liar, gone to burning hell;

'Twas I that kill'd her.

Emil. O, the more angel she,

And you the blacker devil!

Oth. She turn'd to folly,⁸ and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

Oth. She was false as water.⁹

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say

That she was false; O, she was heavenly true!

Oth. Cassio did tup her; ask thy husband else.

O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,

But that I did proceed upon just grounds

To this extremity; Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock?

Oth. Ay, with Cassio.

Nay, had she been true,

If heaven would make me such another world

Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,¹¹

I'd not have sold her for it.

nations of a name which never ought to be mentioned in such an irreverend manner on the stage.

5 It is supposed that some theatrical direction has been omitted, and that, when Othello says, 'So, so,' he then stabs her. After the repetition of words, Desdemona might speak again with propriety, and yet very soon expire.

6 '—Fillum unicum adolescentulum

Habeo: ah! quid dixi habere me? imo habui, Chreme.' Terent. Heautont.

7 Stevens seems to think the use of the epithet heavy hour here unusual. Surely there is nothing more common. Heavy, sad, and grievous are synonymous with all our old writers.

8 'On my faith I think the moon be at the full,

For frantike fancies be then most plentiful.'

The Play of the Weather, by John Heywood.

9 Folly signifies here, as in the sacred writings, was tonnes, unchastity. See Deuteronomy, xlii. 21. So in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly.'

10 I. e. as unstable, as deceitful. In Genesis, xlii.
Jacob applies a similar term to Reuben:—'Thou wast light as water.'

11 Filay informs us that Ptolemy Philadelphus had a statue of his wife Arsinoe, made of one topaz, four ca-bits in length.—Hist. Nat. b. xxxvii. c. 8. Dr. Clarke, in his Lectures on Mineralogy, says he used topaz and chrysolite as synonymous terms. Perhaps Shakespeare alludes to this story.—Plutarch.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. Ay, 'twas he that told me first;
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.

Emil. My husband?

Oth. What needs this iteration,¹ woman! I say, thy husband!—

Emil. O, mistress, villany hath made mocks with love!²—

My husband say, that she was false?

Oth. He, woman.
I say, thy husband: Dost understand the word?
My friend, thy husband, honest, honest, Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! he lies to the heart;
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst:

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt.⁴ O, gull! O dolt!
As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed,—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known,
Though I lost twenty lives:—Help! help ho! help!
The Moor has kill'd my mistress: Murder! murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, and IAGO.

Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general?

Emil. O, are you come, Iago? you have done
well,

That men must lay their murders on your neck.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou beest a man:
He says, thou told'st him that his wife was false;
I know, thou didst not, thou'rt not such a villain;
Speak, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no
more

Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him, she was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a lie: an odious damned lie;

Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie:—

She false with Cassio!—Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress; Go to, charm your tongue.⁵

1 The folio reads—that told me on her first.

2 The quarto reads—iteration. The two next speeches are omitted in that copy.

3 Villany hath taken advantage to play upon the weakness of a violent passion.

4 'More can I bear than you dare execute.'

This line, from the Second Part of King Henry VI. is one of those attributable to Shakspeare, and explains Emilia's sentiment. There is a similar idea in King Henry VIII. Act iii. Sc. 2.

5 To charm is to conjure, to enchant, to lay or still as with a charm. So in King Henry V.—

Charming the narrow seas

To give you gentle seas.

Pliny informs us that fascio lingua was the constant exclamation before any charm was applied. From this circumstance the phrase to charm a tongue, may have originated. So in The Tempest:—

'Hush, be mute,

Or else our spell is marr'd.'

6 This line, and the six following speeches, are wanting in the first quarto.

7 That is, at the instant when she gave Desdemona's handkerchief to Iago: for even then Emilia appears to have suspected it was sought after for no honest purpose, and therefore asks her husband—'What will you do with it?' &c. See Act iii. Sc. 2.

8 So in Shakspeare's 144th Sonnet:—

'My female evil

Tempteth my better angel from my side.'

9 The first and the second folio both read—reprobance.

10 Dr. Johnson thinks that this and other passages in the play seem to suppose a longer space comprised in the action of this play than the scene includes. Mr. Tallet has adduced several instances in support of this opinion, as that in Act iii. Sc. 3:—

Emil. I will not charm my tongue: I am bound to speak;

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.⁶

All. O, heavens, forefend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murder on.

Oth. Nay, stare not, masters; it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'Tis a strange truth.

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil.

Villany, villany, villany!—

I think upon't,—I think,—I smell't!—O, villany!

I thought so then;—I'll kill myself for grief.—

O, villany, villany!

Iago. What, are you mad? I charge you, get you home.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak;

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now:—

Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O!

[Hanging over his wife.

Emil. Nay, lay thee down, and roar;

For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,

That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth.

O, she was foul!—[Rising.

I scarce did know you, uncle: There lies your niece,

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd:

I know, this act shows horrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemona! I am glad thy father's dead;

Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief

Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,

This sight would make him do a desperate turn,

Yea, curse his better angel from his side,⁷

And fall to reprobation.⁸

Oth. 'Tis pitiful: but yet Iago knows,

That she with Cassio hath the act of shame

A thousand times committed; ⁹ Cassio confess'd it:

And she did gratify his amorous works

With that recognition and pledge of love

Which I first gave her; I saw it in his hand;

It was a handkerchief, an antique token

My father gave my mother.¹¹

Emil. O, heaven! O, heavenly powers!

Iago.

Come, hold your peace,

Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out;—I hold my peace,

sir? no;

No, I will speak as liberal¹² as the air;

'I slept the next night well, was free and merry,

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips.'

'On Othello's wedding night, he and Cassio embarked from Venice, where Desdemona was left under the care of Iago. They all met at Cyprus; and since their arrival there, the scenes include only one night, the night of the celebration of their nuptials. What night was there to intervene between Cassio's kisses and Othello's sleeping the next night well? Iago has said,

'I lay with Cassio lately,' which he could not well have done, unless they had been longer at Cyprus than is represented in the play; nor could Cassio have kept away for the space of a whole week from Bianca.'

Steevens obviates one objection, by supposing that what Othello mentions might have passed before he was married to Desdemona, when Cassio went between them, and that a thousand times is only an aggravated term for many times. The difficulties started by Mr. Tallet he is unable to explain.

11 Othello tells his wife, Act iii. Sc. 4:—

'That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give.'

This passage, therefore, has been censured as an oversight in the poet; but perhaps it exhibits only a fresh proof of his art. The first account of the handkerchief, as given by Othello, was purposely ostentatious, in order to alarm his wife the more. When he mentions it a second time, the truth was sufficient for his purpose.

—Steevens.

12 The folio reads—

'I'll be in speaking liberal as the north.'

The quarto reads—'liberal as the air.' The text is formed out of the two copies. Liberal here means free.

So in Jeronimo, l. e. the first part of The Spanish Tragedy, 1605:—

'Now let your bloods be liberal as the sea.'

Let heaven, and men, and devils, let them all,
All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.
Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.
[IAGO offers to stab his Wife. Fie!]

Gra.
Your sword upon a woman?
Emil. O, thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of,
I found by fortune, and did give my husband;
For often, with a solemn earnestness,
(More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,)
He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. Villanous whore!
Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas; I found it,
And I did give't my husband.

Iago. Filth, thou liest.
Emil. By heaven, I do not; I do not, gentlemen;
O, murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
Do with so good a wife?

[IAGO stabs EMILIA, then runs out.
Oth. Are there no stones in heaven,
But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!
Gra. The woman falls; sure, he has kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay; O, lay me by my mistress' side!
Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'Tis a notorious villain. Take you this weapon,

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without: let him not pass,
But kill him rather; I'll after that same villain,
For 'tis a damned slave.

[Exeunt MONTANO and GRATIANO.
Oth. I am not valiant, neither,

But every puny whipster gets my sword:—
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. What did thy song bode, lady?
Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music:—Willow, willow, willow.—
Moor, she was chaste; she lov'd thee, cruel Moor;
So come my soul to bliss, as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die,—I die. [Dies.]

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber,
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper;¹
O, here it is:—Uncle, I must come forth.

Gra. [Within.] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear;

Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in upon me, then, and speak with me,
Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter GRATIANO.

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth. Behold! I have a weapon;
A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh: I have seen the day,
That, with this little arm, and this good sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop:—But, O, vain boast!
Who can control his fate? 'tis not so now.—
Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd;
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
And very sear-mark of my utmost sail.
Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;
Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires;—Where should Othello go?—

1 The meaning appears to be:—'Has not heaven one supernumery bolt, to hurl directly at the head of this sneaking villain?'

2 So in the Merchant of Venice:—
'—he makes a swanlike end,
Fading in music.'

3 The particular name of the ice-brook may be determined from several passages in Martial. (See lib. i.
ep. 50, lib. iv. ep. 55.) It was undoubtedly the brook or rivulet called Salo (now Xalco) near Bilbille in Celsi-beria. In this the Spaniards plunged all their swords and other weapons while hot from the forge; and to the icy quality of the waters they were supposed to be indebted for their stubborn temper. See also Justin, l. 44.
It should be remembered that Spain was famous for producing the best sword blades.

Now, how dost thou look now? O, ill-starr'd wretch!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl!
Even like thy chastity.—

O, cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O, Desdemona! Desdemona! dead?
Dead? O! O! O!

Enter LODOVICO, MONTANO, CASSIO, carried in a Chair, and Officers, with IAGO, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate
man?

Oth. That's he, that was Othello; here I am.
Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet—but that's a fable;

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[OTHELLO wounds IAGO.

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill'd.
Oth. I am not sorry, neither; I'd have thee live;
For, in my sense, 'tis happiness to die.

Lod. O, thou Othello, that was once so good,
Fall'n in the practice of a cursed slave,
What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing:
An honourable murderer, if you will;
For naught I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villainy:
Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay.
Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.
Will you, I pray you, demand that damned devil,
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing: What you know, ye
know:

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,
Which, as I think, you know not: Here is a letter,
Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo;
And here, another: the one of them imports
The death of Cassio to be undertook
By Roderigo.

Oth. O, villain!

Cas. Most heathenish, and most gross!
Lod. Now, here's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too: and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant to have sent this damned villain;
But that, belike, Iago, in the interim,⁴
Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O, the pernicious catiff!—
How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief
That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber.
And he himself confess'd, but even now,
That there he dropp'd it, for a special purpose,
Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O, fool! fool! fool!

Cas. There is, besides, in Roderigo's letter,—
How he upbraids Iago, that he made him

4 Thus in Coriolanus, Act i. Sc. 1:—

'—Cracking ten thousand curbs
Of more strong link ascender, than can ever
Appear in your impediment.'

5 This and the six preceding lines are omitted in the first quarto. Wrench originally signified only a girl or young woman. It is so used in our old version of the Scriptures, and by many of our early writers.

6 To see if, according to the common opinion, his fate be cloven.

7 The same thought occurs in Antony and Cleopatra:—
''Tis well thou'rt gone,
If it be well to live.'

8 In the ensue, by the stratagem.

9 The first quarto reads:—'in the nick.'

Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast; And even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us;
Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,—
If there be any cunning cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his: You shall close prisoner rest,
Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state:—Come, bring him away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two, before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know it;
No more of that;—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am;—nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice: then must you speak
Of one, that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one, not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme; of one, whose hand,
Like the base Judean,¹ threw a pearl away, Richer than all his tribe; of one, whose subdu'd
eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum: Set you down this:
And say, besides,—that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk²
Beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus. [Stabs himself.]

Lod. O, bloody period!

Gra. All, that's spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee, ere I kill'd thee;—No way but this, [Falling upon DESDEMONA.]

Killing myself, to die upon a kiss. [Dies.]

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no
weapon;

For he was great of heart.

Lod. O, Spartan dog,⁴

More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea!

Look on the tragic loading of this bed;

[To IAGO.]

This is thy work: the object poisons sight;
Let it be hid. Gratiano, keep the house,
And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
For they succeed to you.—To you, lord governor,
Remains the censure³ of this hellish villain;
The time, the place, the torture,—O, enforce it!
Myself will straight abroad; and, to the state,
This heavy act with heavy heart relate. [Exeunt.]

THE beauties of this play impress themselves so strongly upon the attention of the reader, that they can draw no aid from critical illustration. The fiery openness of Othello; magnanimous, artless, and credulous, boundless in his confidence, ardent in his affection, inflexible in his resolution, and obdurate in his revenge; the cool malignity of Iago, silent in his resentment, subtle in his designs, and studious at once of his interest and his vengeance; the soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit, and conscious of innocence, her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected, are such proofs of Shakespeare's skill in human nature, as, I suppose, it is vain to seek in any modern writer. The gradual progress which Iago makes in the Moor's conviction, and the circumstances which he employs to inflame him, are so artfully natural, that though it will perhaps not be said of him as he says of himself, that he is a man not easily jealous, yet we cannot but pity him, when at last we find him perplexed in the extreme.

There is always danger, lest wickedness, conjoined with abilities, should stand upon esteem, though it misses of approbation; but the character of Iago is so conducted, that he is from the first scene to the last hated and despised.

Even the inferior characters of this play would be very conspicuous in any other piece, not only for their justness, but their strength. Cassio is brave, benevolent and honest, ruined only by his want of subornness to resist an insidious invitation. Rodrigo's suspicious credulity, and impatient submission to the cheats which he sees practised upon him, and which by persuasion he suffers to be repeated, exhibit a strong picture of a weak mind betrayed by unlawful desires to a false friend; and the virtue of Emilia is such as we often find, worn loosely, but not cast off, easy to commit small crimes, but quickened and alarmed at atrocious villanies.

The scenes from the beginning to the end are busy, varied by happy interchanges, and regularly promoting the progression of the story; and the narrative in the end, though it tells but what is known already, yet is necessary to produce the death of Othello.

Had the scene opened in Cyprus, and the preceding incidents been occasionally related, there had been little wanting to a drama of the most exact and scrupulous regularity. JOHNSON.

To Dr. Johnson's admirable and nicely discriminative character of Othello, it may seem unnecessary to make any addition; yet I cannot forbear to conclude our commentaries on this transcendent poet, with the fine eulogy which the judicious and learned Lowth has pronounced on him, with a particular reference to this tragedy, perhaps the most perfect of his works:—

In his virtu [tragedie Græcæ scilicet scriptoribus] accento quædam Philosophiæ erat Poetica aculeus: neque sane quæquam adhuc Poësin ad fastidium sumæ ac culmen erexit, nisi qui prius in intima Philosophiæ artis suæ fundamenta jecisset.

Quod si quis objiciat, nonnullos in hoc pœsoe genere excelluisse, qui nunquam habuit suam Philosophiæ, ac ne liberis quidem præter ceteros imbuti; sciat is, me rem ipsam querere, non de vulgari opinione, aut de verbo laborare: qui autem tantum ingenio consecutus est, ut materiam hominum, vixque omnem humanitatis, causasque eas, quibus aut incitatur mentis impetus aut retrahitur, penitus perspicere habeat, ejusque omnes motus oratione non modo explicet, sed effingat planaque oculis subjiciat; sed excitet, regat, commoveat, moderetur; cum, et si disciplinarum instrumentis munus adjuvum existat tamen esse Philosophum arbitrat. Quo in genere affectum zelotypiæ, ejusque causas, adjuncta, progressionem, effectus, in una Shakespeare nostri fabula, copiose, subtilius, accuratius etiam variatque pertracand the facility with which they would part with them, a circumstance to which two succeeding poets have alluded:—

So the unthankful Indian these bright gems
Which might add majesty to diadems,
Among the waves scatters.

Habington—to Castara weeping.

Thus also in The Woman's Conquest, by Sir Robert Howard:—

Behold my queen—
Who with no more concern I'll cast away
Than Indians do a pearl, that ne'er did know
Its value.

Shakespeare himself connects India with pearls in Troilus and Cressida:—

Her bed is India, where she lies a pearl.

It is here figuratively used for a fair woman. I conclude with Mr. Boswell, that the arguments are strong in favour of Indian, the reading of the earliest copy.

3 It is said that it was immediate death for a Christian to strike a Turk in Aleppo.

4 The dogs of Spartan race were reckoned among those of the most fierce and savage kind.

5 I. e. judgment, the sentence.

1 Thus the folio. The quarto reads—'Speak of them as they are.'

2 The quarto 1623 reads—Indian. The folio has Judean. Warburton, Theobald, and Dr. Farmer think that the allusion is to Herod, who in a fit of blind jealousy threw a way such a jewel in his wife Mariamne. Steevens admits the reading Judean, but thinks the allusion is not to the story of Herod, on account of the epithet base; and because 'the simile appears almost too apposite to be used on the occasion, and would be little more than bringing the fact into comparison with itself.' He thinks that the allusion is to the story of a Jew, who not being able to find a purchaser for a very large pearl at an immoderate price, publicly threw it into the sea at Venice. Malone once objected to Judean on account of the wrong accent, but subsequently changed his opinion, and thought the word tribe strongly favoured that reading. To this Mr. Boswell replies, that the word tribe was never alone peculiarly applicable to the Jews, but meant a kindred, and is constantly used at this day in speaking of a peculiar race or set of Indians. That the early travellers are full of descriptions of 'the pearled treasures' of the Indians, who may be called base on account of their ignorance, tari existimo, quam ab omnibus omnium Philosophorum scholis in simili argumento, est unquam disputatum. [Prædictio prima, edit. 1763, p. 8.]—Malone.

If by 'the most perfect' is meant the most regular of the foregoing plays, I subscribe to Mr. Malone's opinion; but if his words were designed to convey a more exalted praise, without a moment's hesitation I should transfer it to Macbeth.

It is true that the domestic tragedy of Othello affords room for a various and forcible display of character. The less familiar groundwork of Macbeth (as Dr. Johnson has observed) excludes the influence of peculiar dispositions. That exclusion, however, is recompensed by a loftier strain of poetry, and by events of higher rank; by supernatural agency, by the solemnities of incantation, by shades of guilt and horror deepening in their progress, and by visions of futurity selected in aid of hope, but eventually the ministers of despair.

Were it necessary to weigh the pathetic effusions of these dramas against each other, it is generally allowed that the sorrows of Deedemona would be more than counterbalanced by those of Macduff. Yet if our author's rival pieces (the distinct property of their subjects considered) are written with equal force, it must still be admitted that the latter has more of originality. A novel of considerable length (perhaps amplified and embellished by the English translator of it) supplied a regular and circumstantial outline for Othello; while a few slight hints collected from separate narratives of Hollinshed, were expanded into the sublime and awful tragedy of Macbeth.

Should readers, who are alike conversant with the appropriate excellences of poetry and painting, pronounce on the reciprocal merits of these great productions, I must suppose that they would describe them as of different pedigrees. They would add, that one was of the school of Raphael, the other from that of Michael Angelo; and that if the steady Sophocles and Virgil should have decided in favour of Othello, the remonstrances of the daring Æschylus and Homer would have claimed the laurel for Macbeth.

To the sentiments of Dr. Lowth respecting the tragedy of Othello, a general eulogium on the dramatic works of Shakespeare, imputed by a judicious and amiable critic to Milton, may not improperly be subjoined:—

There is good reason to suppose (says my late friend the Rev. Thomas Warton) that Milton threw many additions and corrections into the Theatrum Pœtarum, a book published by his nephew, Edward Philips, in 1675. It contains criticisms far above the taste of that period. Among these is the following judgment on Shakespeare, which was not then I believe the general opinion:—'In tragedy, never any expressed a more lofty and tragic height, never any represented nature more purely to the life; and where the pathos of art are most wanting, as probably his learning was not extraordinary, he pleases with a certain wild and native elegance.'—Milton's Minor Poems, p. 126, Note on P. Allegro.

What greater praise can any poet have received, than that of the author of Paradise Lost?

VENUS AND ADONIS.

The Epistle.

Villa miretur vulgus, mihi flavus Apollo
Focula Castalia plena ministret aqua.—Ovid.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,
Earl of Southampton and Baron of Titchfield.

RIGHT HONOURABLE:

I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden: only, if your honour seem but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours, till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own wish, and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

EVEN as the sun with purple-colour'd face
Had ta'en his last leave of the weeping morn,
Rose-cheek'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Hunting he lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn:
Sick-thoughted Venus makes amain unto him,
And like a bold-fac'd suitor 'gins to woo him.

Thrice fairer than myself, (thus she began,)
This field's chief flower, sweet above compare,
Stain to all nymphs, more lovely than a man,
More white and red than doves or roses are;
Nature that made thee, with herself at strife,
Saith, that the world hath ending with thy life.

Vouchsafe, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
And rein his proud head to the saddle-bow;
If thou wilt deign this favour, for thy need
A thousand honey secrets shalt thou know:
Here come and sit, where never serpent hisses,
And being set, I'll smother thee with kisses:

And yet not cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety,
But rather furnish them amid their plenty,
Making them red and pale with fresh variety;
Ten kisses short as one, one long as twenty:
A summer's day will seem an hour but short,
Being wasted in such time-beguiling sport.

With this she seizeth on his sweating palm,
The precedent of pith and livelihood,
And, trembling in her passion, calls its balm,
Earth's sovereign salve to do a goddess good:
Being so enrag'd, desire doth lend her force,
Courageously to pluck him from his horse.

Over one arm the lusty courser's rein,
Under her other was the tender boy,
Who blush'd and pouted in a dull disdain,
With leaden appetite, unapt to toy;
She red and hot, as coals of glowing fire,
He red for shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimble she fastens: (O, how quick is love!)
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove:
Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips:
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open.

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks;
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He saith, she is immodest, blames her 'miss;
What follows more, she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends, she doth anew begin.

Forc'd to content, but never to obey,
Panting he lies, and breatheth in her face;
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace:
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and aw'd resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:
Rain added to a river that is ranh,
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame, and anger ashy-pale;
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears,
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive dapper peering through a wave,
Who being look'd on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat,
More thirst for drink than she for this good turn.
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
O, pity, 'gan she cry, flint-hearted boy;
'Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?

I have been woo'd as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war;
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes, in every jar;
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter'd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest;
Scorning his churlish drum, and ensign red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

Thus he that over-rul'd, I overway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain:
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
Yet was he servile to my easy disdain,
O, be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil'd the god of fight.

Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine,
(Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,)
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine;—
What see'st thou in the ground? hold up thy head;
Look in mine eye-balls, there thy beauty lies:
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?

Art thou asham'd to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink; so shall the day seem night;
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight;
These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean,
Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe; yet may'st thou well be tasted;
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:
Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime,
Rot and consume themselves in little time.

Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-natur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic, and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
Then might'st thou pause, for then I were not for
thee;

But having no defects, why dost abhor me?

Thou can'st not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are grey,¹ and bright, and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand felt,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevel'd hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and well aspire.

Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me thro' the sky,
From morn till night, even where I list to sport me;
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou should'st think it heavy unto thee?

Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom, and complain on theft,
Narcissus, so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use;
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear;
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty breedeth beauty;

Thou wast begot,—to get, it is thy duty.

Upon the earth's increase why should'st thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?
By law of nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead,
And so, in spite of death, thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive.

By this, the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For, where they lay, the shadow had forsook them,
And Titan, tired in the mid-day heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him, and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His low'ring brows o'er-whelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours, when they blot the sky,—
Souring his cheeks, cries, Fie, no more of love;
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove.

Ah me, (quoth Venus,) young, and so unkind?
What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone?
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun;
I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears.

The sun that shines from heaven, shines but warm,
And lo, I lie between that sun and thee;
The heat I have from thence doth little harm,
Thine eye darts forth the fire that burneth me:
And were I not immortal, life were done,
Between this heavenly and earthly sun.

Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel,
Nay more than flint, for stone at rain relenteth?
Art thou a woman's son, and canst not feel
What 'tis to love? how want of love tormenteth
O, had thy mother borne so hard a mind,
She had not brought forth thee, but died unkind.

What am I, that thou should'st at contemns me this?
Or what great danger dwells upon my suit?
What were thy lips the worse for one poor kiss?
Speak, fair; but speak fair words, or else be mute:
Give me one kiss, I'll give it thee again,
And one for interest, if thou wilt have twain.

Fie, lifeless picture, cold and senseless stone,
Well-painted idol, image, dull and dead,
Statue, contenting but the eye alone,¹
Thing like a man, but of no woman bred;
Thou art no man, though of a man's complexion,
For men will kiss even by their own direction.

This said, impatience chokes her pleading tongue,
And swelling passion doth provoke a pause;
Red cheeks and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong;
Being judge in love, she cannot right her cause:
And now she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
And now her sobs do her intendments break.

Sometimes she shakes her head, and then his hand,
Now gazeth she on him, now on the ground;
Sometimes her arms infold him like a band;
She would, he will not in her arms be bound:
And when from thence he struggles to be gone,
She locks her lily fingers, one in one.

Fondling, she saith, since I have hemm'd thee here,
Within the circuit of this ivory pale,
I'll be a park, and thou shalt be my deer;
Feed where thou wilt, on mountain or in dale;
Grazed on my lips; and, if those hills be dry,
Stray lower, where the pleasant fountains lie.

Within this limit is relief enough,
Sweet bottom-grass, and high delightful plain,
Round rising hillocks, brakes, obscure and rough,
To shelter thee from tempest and from rain;
Then be my deer, since I am such a park;
No dog shall reuse thee, though a thousand bark.

At this Adonis smiles, as in disdain,
That in each cheek appears a pretty dimple:
Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,
He might be buried in a tomb so simple;
Fore-knowing well, if there he came to lie,
Why there Love liv'd, and there he could not die.

¹ Mine eyes are grey. What we now call blue eyes, were, in Shakespeare's time, called grey eyes, and were considered as eminently beautiful.—Malone.

These lovely caves, these round enchanting pits,
Open'd their mouths to swallow Venus' liking;
Being mad before, how doth she now for wits?
Struck dead at first, what needs a second striking?
Poor queen of love, in thine own law forlorn,
To love a cheek that smiles at thee in scorn!

Now which way shall she turn? what shall she say?
Her words are done, her woes the more increasing;
The time is spent, her object will away,
And from her twining arms doth urge releasing:
Pity,—(she cries) some favour,—some remorse;—
Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse.

But lo, from forth a copse that neighbours by,
A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud,
Adonis' trampling courser doth espy,
And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud:
The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
And now his woven girths he breaks asunder;
The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thum-
The iron bit he crusheth 'tween his teeth, [der;
Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up-prick'd; his braided hanging mane
Upon his compass'd crest now stand on end;
His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
As from a furnace, vapours doth he send:
His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire,
Shows his hot courage, and his high desire.

Sometime he trots, as if he told the steps,
With gentle majesty, and modest pride;
Anon he rears upright, curvets and leaps,
As who should say, Lo! thus my strength is try'd;
And this I do, to captivate the eye
Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

What recketh he his rider's angry stir,
His flattering holla, or his Stand, I say?
What cares he now for curb, or pricking spur?
For rich carapsons, or trapping gay?
He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
For nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look, when a painter would surpass the life,
In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
His art with nature's workmanship at strife
As if the dead the living should exceed;
So did this horse excel a common one,
In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long,
Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril wide,
High crest, short ears, strait legs, and passing strong,
Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide:
Look what a horse should have, he did not lack,
Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he scuds far off, and there he stares;
Anon he starts at stirring of a feather;
To bid the wind a base he now prepares,
And wher' he run, or fly, they know not whether;
For through his mane and tail the high wind sings,
Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love, and neighs unto her;
She answers him, as to she knew his mind:
Being proud, as females are, if see him woo her,
She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind;
Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels,
Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

Then, like a melancholy malecontent,
He vails his tail, that, like a falling plume
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent;
He stamps, and bites the poor flies in his fume:
His love perceiving how he is enrag'd,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuag'd.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him,
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad, unto the wood they hie them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All swoln with chasing, down Adonis sits,
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love, by pleading may be blest;
For lovers say, the heart hath treble wrong,
When it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage.
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage,
But when the heart's attorney once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
(Even as a dying coal revives with wind,)
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind;
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all assurance he holds her in his eye.

O, what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue!
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now, her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels:
With one fair hand she heaveeth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels:
His tender cheek receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fall'n snow takes any dint.

O, what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing;
And all this dumb play had his acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Shew'd like two silver doves that sit a billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began;
O, fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee,
Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee.

Give me my hand, saith he, why dost thou feel it?
Give me my heart, saith she, and thou shalt have it;
O, give it me, lest thy hard heart do steal it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard,
Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard.

For shame, he cries, let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 'tis your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone;
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare.

Thus she replies: Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire.
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none;
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

Who sees his true love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint, that dare not be so bold,
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?

Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy ;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy ;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee :
O ! learn to love ; the lesson is but plain,
And, once made perfect, never lost again.

I know not love, (quoth he,) nor will not know it,
Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it ;
"This much to borrow, and I will not owe it ;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it ;
For I have heard it is a life in death,
That laughs, and weeps, and all but with a breath.

Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished ?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth ?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth :
The colt that's back'd and burthen'd being young,
Loseth his pride, and never waxeth strong.

You hurt my hand with wringing ; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat :
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart ;
'To love's alarm it will not ope the gate :
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery ;
For where a heart is hard, they make no battery.

What! canst thou talk, quoth she, hast thou a tongue?
O, would thou had'st not, or I had no hearing !
Thy mermaid's voice hath done me double wrong ;
I had my load before, now press'd with bearing :
Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh-sounding,
Ear's deep sweet music, and heart's deep-sore-wounding.

Had I no eyes, but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible,
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible :
Though neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
Yet should I be in love, by touching thee.

Say, that the sense of feeling were bereft me,
And that I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
And nothing but the very smell were left me,
Yet would my love to thee be still as much ;
For from the still'tory of thy face excelling [ing.
Comes breath perfum'd, that breedeth love by smell-

But O, what banquet wert thou to the taste,
Being nurse and feeder of the other four !
Would they not wish the feast might ever last,
And bid Suspicion double lock the door ?
Lest Jealousy, that sour unwelcome guest,
Should, by his stealing in, disturb the feast.

Once more the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
Which to his speech did honey passage yield ;
Like a red morn, that ever yet betoken'd
Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field,
Sorrow to shepherds, wo unto the birds,
Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds.

This ill presage advisably she marketh :—
Even as the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
Or as the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
Or as the berry breaks before it staineth,
Or like the deadly bullet of a gun,
His meaning struck her, ere his words begun.

And at his look she flatly falleth down,
For looks kill love, and love by looks reviveth :
A smile recures the wounding of a frown ;
But blessed bankrupt, that by love so thriveth !
The silly boy believing she is dead,
Claps her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red ;

And all-amaz'd brake off his late intent,
For sharply he did think to reprehend her,
Which cunning love did wittily prevent :
Fair fall the wit, that can so well defend her !
For on the grass she lies, as she were slain,
Till his breath breatheth life in her again.

He wrings her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
He bends her fingers, holds her pulses hard ;
He chafes her lips ; a thousand ways he seeks
To mend the hurt that his unkindness marr'd ;

He kisses her ; and she, by her good will,
Would never rise, so he will kiss her still.

The night of sorrow now is turn'd to day :
Her two blue windows faintly she up-heaveth,
Like the fair sun, when in his fresh array
He cheers the morn, and all the world relieveth :
And as the bright sun glorifies the sky,
So is her face illumin'd with her eye ;

Whose beams upon his hairless face are fix'd
As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine.
Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
Had not his clouded with his brows' repine ;
But hers, which through the crystal tears gave light,
Shone like the moon, in water seen by night.

O, where am I ? quoth she, in earth or heaven,
Or in the ocean drench'd, or in the fire ?
What hour is this ? or morn or weary even ?
Do I delight to die, or life desire ?
But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy ;
But now I died, and death was lively joy.

O, thou didst kill me ;—kill me once again :
Thy eye's shrewd tutor, that hard heart of thine,
Hath taught thee scornful tricks, and such disdain,
That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine ;
And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

Long may they kiss each other for this cure !
O, never let their crimson liveries wear !
And as they last, their verdure still endure,
To drive infection from the dangerous year !
That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
May say, the plague is banish'd by thy breath.
Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
What bargains may I make, still to be sealing ?
'To sell myself I can be well contented,
So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing ;
Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips
Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

A thousand kisses buys my heart from me ;
And pay them at thy leisure, one by one.
What is ten hundred touches unto thee ?
Are they not quickly told and quickly gone ?
Say, for non-payment that the debt should double ;
Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble ?

Fair queen, quoth he, if any love you owe me,
Measure my strangeness with my unripe years ;
Before I know myself seek not to know me ;
No fisher but the ungrown fry forebears :
The mellow plumb doth fall, the green sticks fast,
Or being early pluck'd, is sour to taste.

Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
His day's hot task hath ended in the west :
The owl, night's herald, shrieks, 'tis very late ;
The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest ;
And coal-black clouds, that shadow heaven's light,
Do summon us to part, and bid good night.

Now let me say good night, and so say you ;
If you will say so, you shall have a kiss.
Good night, quoth she ; and ere he says adieu,
The honey fee of parting tender'd is :
Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace ;
Incorporate then they seem ; face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
Whereon they surfeit, yet complain on drought ;
He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth,
(Their lips together glue'd,) fall to the earth.

Now quick Desire hath caught the yielding prey,
And glutton-like she feeds, yet never filleth ;

¹ 'To drive infection from the dangerous year.'—I have somewhere read, that in rooms where plants are kept in a growing state, the air is never unwholesome.—Stevens.

² 'Say for non-payment that the debt should double.'—It was once usual when a sum of money, secured by bond, remained unpaid at the prescribed time, to leave the lender at liberty to recover twice the amount.—Malone.

Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
Paying what ransom the insulter willesh:
Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high,
That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
With blindfold fury she begins to forage;
Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;
Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush, and honour's wreck.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe, that's tir'd with chasing,
Or like the froward infant, still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What wax so frozen, but dissolves with temp'ring,
And yields at last to every light impression?
Things out of hope are compass'd off with vent'ring,
Chiefly in love, whose leave exceeds commission:
Affection fain't not like a pale-fac'd coward,
But then woos best, when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd:
Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through, and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him;
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart;
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incaged in his breast.

Sweet boy, she says, this night I'll waste in sorrow,
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
Tell me, Love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?
He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends
To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

The boar! (quoth she) whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
Usurps her cheek; she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws:
She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus^s is her annoy,
To clip Elysium, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,^s
Do surfeit by the eye, and pine the maw,
Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless berries saw:
The warm effects which she in him finds missing,
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing:

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be:
She hath assay'd as much as may be prov'd;
Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee;
She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
Fie, fie, he says, you crush me; let me go;
You have no reason to withhold me so.

Thou had'st been gone, quoth she, sweet boy, ere
this,

But that thou told'st me, thou would'st hunt the boar.
O, be advis'd: thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
Whose tusches never sheath'd, he whetteth still,
Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his foes;

His eyes, like glow-worms, shine when he doth strut;
His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes;
Being mov'd, he strikes what e'er is in his way,
And whom he strikes, his cruel tusches slay.

His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd;
Being ireful, on the lion he will venture:
The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
As fearful of him, part; through whom he rushes.

Alas, he nought esteems that face of thine,
To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eyne,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
But having thee at vantage, (wondrous dread!)
Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still;
Beauty hath nought to do with such foul fiends:
Come not within his danger by thy will;
They that thrive well, take counsel of their friends;
When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

Did'st thou not mark my face? Was it not white?
Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? And fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou doest lie,
My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest,
But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

For where love reigns, disturbing jealousy
Doth call himself affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, kill, kill;
Distemp'ring gentle love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

This sour informer, this bate-breeding spy,
This canker, that eats up love's tender spring,
This carry-tale, dissentionous jealousy, ^{bring,}
That sometimes true news, sometimes false doth
Knocks at my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
That if I love thee, I thy death should fear:

And more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry chafing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore;
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed,
Doth make them droop with grief, and hang the head.

What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul'd by me
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox, which lives by subtlety,
Or at the roe, which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy hounds.

And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshut his troubles,
How he out-runs the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses with a thousand doubles.
The many mazes through the which he goes,
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

Sometimes he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their smell;
And sometime where earth-delving conies keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell;
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer;
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear:

For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot-scent snuffing hounds are driven to doubt;
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singled
With much ado the cold fault cleanly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies,
As if another chase were in the skies.

By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,

^s Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes.
—An allusion to a picture of Zeuxis, mentioned by Pliny, in which some grapes were so well represented, that birds lighted on them to pick at them.—Stevens.

To hearless if his foes pursue him still ;
 Anon their loud alarms he doth hear ;
 And now his grief may be compared well
 To one sore sick, that hears the passing bell.
 Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbed wretch
 Turn, and return, indenting with the way ;
 Each envious briar his weary legs doth scratch,
 Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur stay :
 For misery is trodden on by many,
 And being low, never reliev'd by any.

Lie quietly, and hear a little more ;
 Nay, do not struggle, for thou shalt not rise :
 To make thee hate the hunting of the boar,
 Unlike myself thou hear'st me moralize,
 Applying this to that, and so to so ;
 For love can comment upon every wo.

Where did I leave ?—No matter where, quoth he ;
 Leave me, and then the story aptly ends :
 The night is spent. Why, what of that ? quoth she :
 I am, quoth he, expected of my friends ;
 And now 'tis dark, and going I shall fall :—
 In night, quoth she, desire sees best of all.

But if thou fall, O then imagine this,
 The earth, in love with thee, thy footing trips,
 And all is but to rob thee of a kiss.
 Rich preys make true men thieves ; so do thy lips
 Make modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
 Lest she should steal a kiss, and die forsworn.

Now, of this dark night I perceive the reason :
 Cynthia for shame obscures her silver shine,
 Till forging Nature be condemn'd of treason,
 For stealing moulds from heaven that were divine,
 Wherein she fram'd thee, in high heaven's despite,
 To shame the sun by day, and her by night.

And therefore hath she brib'd the destinies,
 To cross the curious workmanship of nature ;
 To mingle beauty with infirmities,
 And pure perfection with impure defeature ;
 Making it subject to the tyranny
 Of mad mischances, and much misery ;

As burning fevers, agues pale and faint,
 Life-poisoning pestilence, and frenzies wood,
 The marrow-eating sickness, whose attaint
 Disorder breeds by heating of the blood :
 Surfeits, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
 Swear nature's death for framing thee so fair.

And not the least of all these maladies,
 But in one minute's fight brings beauty under :
 Both favour, saviour, hue, and qualities,
 Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
 Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done,
 As mountain-snow melts with the mid-day sun.

Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
 Love-lacking vestals, and self-loving nuns,
 That on the earth would breed a scarcity,
 And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
 Be prodigal : the lamp that burns by night,
 Dries up his oil, to lend the world his light.

What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
 Seeming to bury that posterity,
 Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
 If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity ?
 If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
 Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

So in thyself thyself art made away ;
 A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
 Or theirs, whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
 Or butcher sire, that reaves his son of life.
 Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
 But gold that's put to use, more gold begets.

Nay then, quoth Adon, you will fall again
 Into your idle over-handled theme ;
 The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
 And all in vain you strive against the stream ;
 For by this black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse,
 Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse.

If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
 And every tongue more moving than your own,

Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
 Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown ;
 For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
 And will not let a false sound enter there ;
 Lest the deceiving harmony should run
 Into the quiet closure of my breast ;
 And then my little heart were quite undone,
 In his bed chamber to be barr'd of rest.
 No, lady, no ; my heart longs not to green,
 But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

What have you urg'd, that I cannot approve ?
 The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger ;
 I hate not love, but your device in love,
 That lends embracements unto every stranger.
 You do it for increase, O, strange excuse !
 When reason is the bawd to lust's abuse.

Call it not love, for Love to heaven is fled,
 Since sweating Lust on earth usurp'd his name ;
 Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
 Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame ;
 Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves,
 As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

Love comforteth, like sunshine after rain ;
 But lust's effect is tempest after sun :
 Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
 Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done.
 Love surfeits not ; lust like a glutton dies :
 Love is all truth ; lust full of forged lies.

More I could tell, but more I dare not say ;
 The text is old, the orator too green.
 Therefore in sadness, now I will away ;
 My face is full of shame, my heart of teen :
 Mine ears, that to your wanton talk attended,
 Do burn themselves for having so offended.

With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
 Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
 And homeward through the dark lawn runs apace ;
 Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.
 Look, how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
 So glides he in the night from Venus' eye ;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
 Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
 Till the wild waves will have him soon no more,
 Whose ridges with the morning clouds contend :
 So did the merciless and fitchy night
 Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware
 Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
 Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
 Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood,
 Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
 Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
 That all the neighbour-carves, as seeming troubled,
 Make verbal repetition of her moans ;
 Passion on passion deeply is redoubled :
 Ah me ! she cries, and twenty times, we, we !
 And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She, marking them, begins a waiting note,
 And sings extemp'rally a woful ditty, [dote ;
 How love makes young men thrall, and old men
 How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty :
 Her heavy anthem still concludes in wo,
 And still the choir of echoes answer so.

Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
 For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short :
 If pleas'd themselves, others, they think, delight
 In such like circumstance, with such like sport :
 Their copious stories, oftentimes begun,
 End without audience, and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal,
 But idle sounds resembling parasites ;
 Like shrill-tongu'd tapsters answering every call,
 Soothing the humour of fantastic wits ?
 She says, 'tis so : they answer all, 'tis so ;
 And would say after her, if she said so.

Lo ! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
 From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,

And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast,
The Sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
That cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
O, thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son, that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other.

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'er-worn:
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds, and for his horn:
Anon she hears them chaunt it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,
Some twind about her thigh to make her stay;
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ake,
Hasting to feed her fawn hid in some brake.

By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereat she starts like one that spies an adder
Wreath'd up in fatal folds, just in his way,
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder;
Even so the umorous yelping of the bounds
Appals her senses, and her spright confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain court'ry, who shall coope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart;
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy,
Till, cheering up her senses sore dismay'd,
She tells them, 'tis a causeless fantasy,
And childish error, that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more;—
And with that word she spy'd the hunted boar;

Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires to rate the boar for murder.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreads again;
Her more than haste is mated with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain;
Full of respect, yet nought at all respecting:
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Here kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary caitiff for his master;
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster;
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks; and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceas'd his ill-reounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin vollieth out his voice;
Another and another answer him;
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amaz'd
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gaz'd,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies;
So she at these sad sighs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on death.

Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean,
Hateful divorce of love, (thus chides she death,)

Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou
To stifle beauty and to steal his breath, [mean,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set
Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?

If he be dead,—O, no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou should'st strike at it;—
O, yes, it may; thou hast no eyes to see,
But hatefully at random dost thou hit.
Thy mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
Mistakes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart

Hadst thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
And hearing him, thy power had lost his power,
The destinies will curse thee for this stroke;
They bid thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
Love's golden arrow at him should have fled,
And not death's ebony dart, to strike him dead.

Dost thou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weep-
What may a heavy groan advantage thee? [ing?
Why hast thou cast into eternal sleeping
Those eyes that taught all other eyes to see?
Now Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
Since her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.

Here overcome, as one full of despair,
She rail'd her eye-lids, who, like sluices, stopp'd
The crystal tide that from her two cheeks fall:
In the sweet channel of her bosom dropp'd;
But through the flood-gates breaks the silver rain,
And with his strong course opens them again.

O, how her eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
Her eyes seen in the tears, tears in her eye; [row;
Both crystals, where they view'd each other's sor-
Sorrow, that friendly sighs sought still to dry;
But like a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
Sighs dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

Variable passions throng her constant wo,
As striving who should best become her grief,
All entertain'd, each passion labours so,
That every present sorrow seemeth chief,
But none is best; then join they all together,
Like many clouds consulting for foul weather.

By this far off she hears some huntsman holla;
A nurse's song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well!
The dire imagination she did follow
This sound of hope doth labour to expel;
For now reviving joy bids her rejoice,
And flatters her, it is Adonis' voice.

Whereat her tears began to turn their tide,
Being prison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
Yet sometimes falls an orient drop beside,
Which her cheek melts, as scorching it should pass,
To wash the foul face of the sluttish ground,
Who is but drunken, when she seemeth drown'd.

O, hard-believing love, how strange it seems
Not to believe, and yet too credulous!

Thy weal and wo are both of them extremes;
Despair and hope make thee ridiculous:
The one doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
In likely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

Now she unweaves the web that she hath wrought;
Adonis lives, and death is not to blame;
It was not she that call'd him all to nought;
Now she adds honours to his hateful name;
She clothes him king of graves and grave for kings
Imperious supreme of all mortal things.

No, no, quoth she, sweet Death, I did but jest;
Yet pardon me, I felt a kind of fear.
When as I met the boar, that bloody beast,
Which knows no pity, but is still severe;
Then, gentle shadow, (truth I must confess,)
I rail'd on thee, fearing my love's decease.

'Tis not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue;
Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
'Tis he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
I did but act, he's author of thy slander:
Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet
Could rule them both, without ten women's wit.

Thus hoping that Adonis is alive,
Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;

And that his beauty may the better thrive,
With death she humbly doth insinuate :
Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs, and sterner,
His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

O, Jove, quoth she, how much a fool was I,
To be of such a weak and silly mind,
To wail his death, who lives, and must not die,
Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind !
For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear,
As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves ;
Trifles, unwatched with eye or ear,
Thy coward heart with false bothinings grieves.
Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
Whereat she leaps, that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure, away she flies ;
The grass stoops not, as she treads on it so light ;
And in her haste unfortunately spies
The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight ;
Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
And there, all smother'd up in shade doth sit,
Long after fearing to creep forth again ;
So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
Into the deep dark cabins of her head :

Where they resign their office and their light
To the disposing of her troubled brain ;
Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
And never worm the heart with looks again ;
Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes ;
As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound :
This mutiny each part doth so surprise,
That from their dark beds, once more leap her eyes ;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light,
Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
In his soft flank : whose wonted lily white
With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd :
No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth ;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head ;
Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth ;
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead :
Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow ;
Her eyes are mad, that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly,
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three ;
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be :
His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled ;
For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
And yet, quoth she, behold thou Adonis dead !
My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead :
Heavy heart's lead, melt at mine eyes' red fire !
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost !
What face remains alive that's worth the viewing ?
Whose tongue is music now ! what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or any thing ensuing ?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim,
But true-sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear !
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you :
Having no fair to lose, you need not fear ;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth hiss you :
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves, to rob him of his fair :

And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gandy sun would peep,

The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks ; then would Adonis weep :
And straight in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his

To see his face, the lion walk'd along
Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him :
To recreate himself when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame, and gently bear him ;
If he had spoke, the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

When he beheld his shadow in the brook,
The fishes spread on it their golden gills ;
When he was by, the birds such pleasure took
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe-red cherries,
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

But this foul, grim, and urchin-scounted boar,
Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beautiful livery that he wore :
Witness the entertainment that he gave :
If he did see his face, why then I know,
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

'Tis true, 'tis true ; thus was Adonis slain :
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there ;
And muzzling in his flank, the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, the tusk in his soft groin.

Had I been tooth'd like him, I must confess,
With kissing him I should have kill'd him first ;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his ; the more am I accurst.
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congealed blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale ;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold ;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woful words she told :
She lifts the coffin-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo ! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies :

Two glasses, where herself herself behold
A thousand times, and now no more reflect ;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty rebb'd of his effect :
Wonder of time, quoth she, this is my spite,
That, you being dead, the day should yet be light.

Since thou art dead, lo ! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend ;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but uneasy end ;
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low ;
That all love's pleasures shall not match his woe.

It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud ;
Bad and be blasted in a breathing-while ;
The bottom poison, and the top o'er-straw'd
With sweets, that shall the truest sight beguile :
The strongest body shall it make most weak ;
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

It shall be sparing and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures ;
The sturging ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures :
It shall be raging-mad, and silly-mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

It shall suspect, where is no cause of fear ;
It shall not fear, where it should most mistrust
It shall be merciful, and too severe,
And most deceiving, when it seems most just ;
Perverse it shall be, where it shows most toward ;
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

It shall be cause of war, and dire events,
And set dissension 'twixt the son and sire ;
Subject and servile to all discontents,
As dry combustious matter is to fire ;

1 'To tread the measures.—The measures was a very stately dance, and, therefore, was peculiarly suited to elders, if they engaged at all in such kind of amusement.—Malone.

Sith in his prime death doth my love destroy,
 They that love best, their loves shall not enjoy.
 By this the boy that by her side lay kill'd,
 Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
 And in his blood, that on the ground lay spill'd,
 A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white;
 Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
 Which in round drops upon their whiteness stood.
 She bows her head the new-sprung flower to smell,
 Comparing it to her Adonis' breath:
 And says within her bosom it shall dwell,
 Since he himself is rest from her by death.
 She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears
 Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.
 Poor flower, quoth she, this was thy father's guise,
 (Sweet issue of a more sweet-smelling sire,)

For every little grief to wet his eyes:
 To grow unto himself was his desire,
 And so 'tis thine; but know, it is as good
 To wither in my breast, as in his blood.
 Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast;
 Thou art the next of blood, and 'tis thy right:
 Lo! in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
 My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night!
 There shall not be one minute in an hour,
 Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower.
 Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
 And yokes her silver doves; by whose swift aid,
 Their mistress mounted through the empty skies
 In her light chariot quickly is convey'd;
 Holding their course to Paphos, where their queen
 Means to immure herself, and not be seen.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE

The Epistle.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLY,
Earl of Southampton and Baron of Tickfield.

THE love I dedicate to your lordship is without end; whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety. The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours; what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater, my duty would show greater; mean time, as it is, it is bound to your lordship, to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with happiness.

Your lordship's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

The Argument.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS, (for his extensive pride surnamed Superbus,) after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom; went, accompanied with his sons, and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege, the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom, Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending, by their secret and sudden arrival, to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife, (though it were late in the night,) spinning amongst her maids; the other ladies were all found dancing and revelling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time, Sextus Tarquinius, being inflamed with Lucretia's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was (according to his state) royally entertained and lodged by Lucretia at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealth into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucretia, in this lamentable plight, hastily despatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucretia attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent, they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bluer invective against the tyranny of the king: wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation, the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

From the besieged Ardea all in post,
 Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
 Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
 And to Collatium bears the lightest fire,
 Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire,
 And girdle with embracing flames the waist
 Of Collatine's fair love, Lucretia the chaste.

Haply that name of chaste unhappily set
 This baseless edge on his keen appetite;
 When Collatine unwisely did not let
 To praise the clear unmatched red and white
 Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight;
 Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
 With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For so the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
 Unlocked the treasure of his happy state:
 What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
 In the possession of his beauteous mate;
 Reckoning his fortune at such high-proud rate,
 That kings might be epoused to more fame,
 But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O, happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
 And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done
 As is the morning's silver-melting dew
 Against the golden splendour of the sun!
 An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun:
 Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
 Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apology be made,
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thievish ears, because it is his own?
Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting [vaunt
His high pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should
That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O, rash-false heat, wrapt in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, and ne'er grows old!

When at Collatine this false loss arriv'd
Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue striv'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame:
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame;
When beauty boasted blazes, in despite
Virtue would stain that o'er with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intitled,
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field;
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,—
When shame assail'd, the red should fence the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white.
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
The sovereignty of either being so great
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lilies and of roses,
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, fest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two armies, that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue,
(The niggard prodigal that prais'd her so,)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer
And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd:

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But, poorly rich, so wanteth in his store,
That cloy'd with much, he pineth still for more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parting looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books;
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks;
Nor could she moralize his wanton sight,
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory;
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And wordless so, greets heaven for his success
Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there;
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather,
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaulty prison stows the day.
For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night;
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight;
And every one to rest himself betakes, [wakes.
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that
As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sunny dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving. [ing:
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstain—
Despair to gain, doth traffic off for gaining;
And when great treasure is the meed propos'd,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death suppos'd.

Those that much covet, are with gain so fond,
That what they have set, that which they possess,
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age,
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour, in fell battle's rage;
Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and altogether lost.

So that in vent'ring ill, we leave to be
The things we are for that which we expect;
And this ambitious foul infirmity,
In having much, torments us with defect
Of that we have: so then we do neglect
The thing we have; and, all for want of wit,
Make something nothing, by augmenting it.

Such hazard now must doting Tarquin make,
Pawning his honour to obtain his lust;
And, for himself, himself he must forsake
Then where is truth, if there be no self-trust?
When shall he think to find a stranger just,
When he himself himself confounds, betrays
To slanderous tongues, and wretched hateful days?

Now stole upon the time the dead of night,
When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries:
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs; pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake, to stain and kill.

And now this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
Throwing his mantle rudely o'er his arm;
Is madly toss'd between desire and dread;
Th' one sweetly flatters, th' other seareth harm
But honest Fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charms
Doth too, too oft betake him to retire,
Beaten away by brain-sick rude Desire.

His falchion on a flint he softly smiteth,
That from the cold stone sparks of fire do fly,
Whereat a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye;
And to the flame thus speaks advic'dly:
As from this cold flint I enforc'd this fire,
So Lucrece must I force to my desire.

Here pale with fear he doth premeditate
The dangers of his loathsome enterprise,
And in his inward mind he doth debate
What following sorrow may on this arise :
Then looking scornfully, he doth despise
His naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust,
And justly thus controls his thoughts unjust.

Fair torch, burn out thy light, and lead it not
To darken her whose light excelleth thine !
And die, unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot
With your uncleanness that which is divine !
Offer pure incense to so pure a shrine :
Let fair humanity abhor the deed [wee'd.
That spots and stains love's modest snow-white

O shame to knighthood and to shining arms !
O foul dishonour to my household's grave !
O impious act, including all foul harms !
A martial man to be soft fancy's slave !
True valour still a true respect should have ;
Then my digression is so vile, so base,
That it will live engraven in my face.

Yea, though I die, the scandal will survive,
And be an eye-sore in my golden coat ;
Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive,¹
To cipher me, how fondly I did dote ;
That my posterity, sham'd with the note,
Shall curse my bones, and hold it for no sin
To wish that I their father had not been.

What win I, if I gain the thing I seek ?
A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy.
Who buys a minute's mirth, to wait a week ?
Or sells eternity, to get a toy ?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy ?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down ?

If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent ?
This siege that hath enrag'd his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame ?

O, what excuse can my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed ?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints shake ?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart bleed ?
The guilt being great, the fear doth still exceed ;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But coward-like with trembling terror die.

Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife ;
As in revenge or quittal of such strife :
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

*Shameful it is ;—*ay, if the fact be known :
*Hateful it is ;—*there is no hate in loving :
I'll beg her love ;—but she is not her own :
The worst is but denial, and reproving :
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing :
Who fears a sentence, or an old man's saw,
Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe.

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation,
T'ween frozen conscience and hot burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still ;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

¹ 'Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive.—
In the books of heraldry, a particular mark of disgrace is mentioned, by which the escutcheons of those persons were anciently distinguished, who 'discourteously used a widow, maid, or wife, against her will.'—Malone

Quoth he, she took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes ;
Fearing some hard news from the warlike band,
Where her beloved Collatinus lien.
O, how her fear did make her colour rise !
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.

And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd
Forc'd it to tremble with her loyal fear !
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear ;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

Why hunt I then for colour or excuses ?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth,
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses ;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth :
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth ;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay'd.

Then childish fear, avaunt ! debating, die !
Respect and reason, wait on wrinkled age !
My heart shall never countermand mine eye :
Sad pause and deep regard beseech the sage ;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage :
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize ;
Then who fears sinking, where such treasure
lies ?

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope, and full of fond mistrust ;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So once him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the self-same seat sits Collatine :
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits ;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline ;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted, takes the worse part ;

And therein heartens up his scurrilous powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocular show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours ;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucretia's bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him forc'd, retires his ward ;
But as they open, they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard :
The threshold grates the door to have him heard ;
Night-wandering weasels shriek, to see him there ;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unrolling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct in this case ;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch :

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks ;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies ;
And gripping it, the needle his finger pricks :
As who should say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inur'd ; return again in haste ;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him ;
Ho in the worst sense construes their denial :
The doors, the wind, the glove, that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial ;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial ;
Who with a ling'ring stay his course doth let,
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

So, so, quoth he, these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the snatched birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing; [sands,
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shoves, and
The merchant fears, are rich at home he lands.

Now is he come unto the chamber-door,
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,
Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought.
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heavens should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts:—quoth he, I must deslower;
The powers to whom I pray, abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?

Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution:
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight.

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide:
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch:
Thus treason works ere traitors be espy'd.
Who sees the lurking serpent, steps aside;
But eke, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,
And gazeth on her yet-unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eye-balls in his head:
By their high treason in his heart misled;
Which gives the watch-wood to his hand full soon,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, beraves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, her eyes began
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is, that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill!
Then Collatine again, by Lucrece' side,
In his clear bed might have reposed still:
But they must eye, this blessed league to kill;
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their right
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her bly hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who, therefore angry, seems to part in sunder,
Swelling on either side, to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head intomb'd is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admir'd of lowly unhallow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet: whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light;
And, canopied in darkness, sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her breath;
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death,
And death's dim look in life's mortality:
Each in her sleep themselves so beautify,
As if between them twain there were no strife,
But that life lieth in death, and death in life.

Her breasts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
A pair of maiden worlds unconquered,
Save of their lord, no bearing yoke they knew
And him by oath they truly honoured.
These worlds in Tarquin now ambition bred;
Who, like a foul usurper, went about
From this fair throne to heave the owner out.

What could he see, but mightily he noted?
What did he note, but strongly he desir'd?
What he beheld, on that he firmly doted,
And in his will his wilful eye he tir'd.
With more than admiration he admir'd
Her azure veins, her alabaster skin,
Her coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

As the grim lion fawneth o'er his prey,
Sharp hunger by the conquest satisfied,
So o'er this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
His rage of lust, by gazing qualified;
Slack'd, not suppress'd; for, standing by her side,
His eye, which late this motley restraints,
Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins:

And they, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
Obdurate vassals, sell exploits effecting,
In bloody death and ravishment delighting,
Nor children's tears, nor mothers' groans respecting,
Swell in their pride, the onset still expecting:
Anon his beating heart, alarum striking,
Gives the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye,
His eye commands the leading to his hand;
His hand, as proud of such a dignity,
Smoking with pride, march'd on to make his stand
On her bare breast, the heart of all her land;
Whose ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
Left their round towers destitute and pale.

They, mustering to the quiet cabinet
Where their dear governess and lady lies,
Do tell her she is dreadfully beset,
And fright her with confusion of their cries:
She, much amaz'd, breaks open her lock'd-up eyes,
Who, peeping forth this tumult to behold,
Are by his flaming torch dimm'd and controul'd.

Imagine her as one in dead of night
From forth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
That thinks she hath beheld some ghostly apparition,
Whose grim aspect sets every joint a shaking;
What terror 'tis! but she, in woeer taking,
From sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view
The night which makes supposed terror true.

Wrapp'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
Like to a mew-hill'd bird she trembling lies;
She dares not look; yet, winking, there appears
Quick-shifting antics, ugly in her eyes;
Such shadows are the weak brain's forgeries;
Who, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
In darkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

His hand, that yet remains upon her breast,
(Rude ram, to batter such an ivory wall!)
May feel her heart (poor citizen!) distress'd,
Wounding itself to death, rise up and fall,
Beating her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.
This moves in him more rage, and lessor pity,
To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
To sound a parley to his heartless foe;
Who, o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
The reason of this rash alarm to know,
Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show;
But she with vehement prayers urgeth still,
Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies: The colour in thy face,
(That even for anger makes the lily pale,
And the red rose blush at her own disgrace,)
Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale:
Under that colour am I come to scale
Thy never-conquer'd fort; the fault is thine,
For these thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide:
Thy beauty hath ensa'd' thee to this night,
Where thou with patience must my will abide;
My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
Which I to conquer sought with all my might.
But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

I see what crosses my attempt will bring;
I know what thorns the growing rose defends;
I think the honey guarded with a sting;
All this, beforehand, counsel comprehends:
But will is deaf, and hears no heedful friends;
Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

I have debated, even in my soul, [breed;
What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall
But nothing can affection's course control,
Or stop the headlong furl of his speed.
I know repentant tears ensue the deed;
Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity;
Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy.

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade,
Whose crooked beak threatens, if he mount he dies:
So under his insulting falchion lies Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells,
With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

Lucrece, quoth he, this night I must enjoy thee:
If thou deny, then force must work my way,
For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee;
That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
To kill thine honour with thy life's decay;
And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

So thy surviving husband shall remain
The scornful mark of every open eye;
Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy:
And thou, the author of their obloquy,
Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
And sung by children in succeeding times.

But if thou yield, I rest thy secret friend:
The fault unknown is as a thought unacted;
A little harm, done to a great good end,
For lawful policy remains enacted.
The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
In a pure compound; being so applied,
His venom in effect is purified.

Then for thy husband, and thy children's sake,
Tender my suit: bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot:
For marks desecr'd in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy.

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye,
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the grype's sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite.

Look, when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth thrust,

In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle dust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing:
So his unhallo'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his hold-fast foot the weak mouse panteth:
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining.

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place;
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin, ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim, before thy shoot be ended;
He is no wood-man that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
Myself a weakling, do not then ensnare me:
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me:
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave
thee.

If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans,

All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threat'ning heart,
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones disolv'd to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,
Melt at my tears and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee:
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me, [name,
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same,
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern every thing.

How will thy shame be seed'd in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring?
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not, when once thou art a king?
O, be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wip'd away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love:
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this, thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book.
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

And wilt thou be the school where Lust shalt learn?
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass, wherein it shall discern
Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
Thou black'st at reproach against long-lived land,
And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul Sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way?

Think but how vile a spectacle it were,
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother:
O, how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
That from their own misdeeds asakance their eyes.

To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to reducing lust, thy rash reliev;
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal;
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire:
His true respect will prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy dotting eyes,
That thou shalt see thy state, and pity mine.

Have done, quoth he; my uncontrolled tide
Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To thy salt sovereign, with their fresh falls' haste,
Add to his flow, but alter not his taste.

Thou art, quoth she, a sea, a sovereign king!
And lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is heard,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispers'd.

So shall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
Thou nobly base, they basely dignified;
Thou their fair life, and they thy fouler grave:
Thou loathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
The lesser thing should not the greater hide;
The cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
But low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

So let thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state—
No more, quoth he, by heaven, I will not hear thee;
Yield to my love; if not, enforced hate,
Instead of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee;
That done, despitefully I mean to bear thee
Unto the base bed of some rascal groom,
To be thy partner in this shameful doom.

This said, he sets his foot upon the light,
For light and lust are deadly enemies:
Shame folded up in blind concealing night,
When most unseen, then most doth tyrannise.
The wolf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries;
Till with her own white fleece her voice controll'd
Entombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

For with the nightly linen that she wears,
He pens her piteous clamours in her head;
Cooling his hot face in the chastest tears
That ever modest eyes with sorrow shed.
O, that prone lust should stain so pure a bed!
The spots whereof could weeping purify,
Her tears should drop on them perpetually.

But she hath lost a dearer thing than life,
And he hath won what he would lose again;
This forced league doth force a further strife;
This momentary joy breeds months of pain;
This hot desire converts to cold disdain:
Pure chastity is rifled of her store,
And lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

Look, as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk
The prey wherein by nature they delight;
So surfeit-taking Tarquin fares this night:
His taste delicious, in digestion souring,
Devours his will, that liv'd by foul devouring.

O, deeper sin than bottomless conceit
Can comprehend in still imagination!
Drunken Desire must vomit his receipt,
Ere he can see his own abomination.
While lust is in his pride, no exclamation
Can curb his heat, or rein his rash desire,
Till, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

And then with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
With heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
Feeble Desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
Like to a bankrupt beggar wails his case:
The flesh being proud, Desire doth fight with grace,
For there it revels; and when that decays,
The guilty rebel for remission prays.

So fares it with this faithful lord of Rome,
Who this accomplishment so hotly chaf'd;
For now against himself he sounds this doom,—
That through the length of times he stands disgrac'd
Besides, his soul's fair temple is defac'd;
To whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
To ask the spotted princess how she fares.

She says, her subjects with foul insurrection
Have batter'd down her consecrated wall,
And by their mortal fault brought in subjection
Her immortality, and made her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual:
Which in her prescience she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought, through the dark night he
A captive victor, that hath lost in gain; [stealth,
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain;
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burthen of a guilty mind.

He, like a thievish dog, creeps sadly thence,
She like a weary'd lamb lies pining there;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence,
She desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays, exclaiming on the direful night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loath'd delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite,
She there remains a hopeless cast-away:
He in his speed looks for the morning light,
She prays she never may behold the day:
For day, quoth she, night's scapes doth open lay;
And my true eyes have never practis'd how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel.

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest, to close so pure a mind.
Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night.

O, comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind muffled bawd! dark harbour for defame!
Grim cave of death, whispering conspirator
With close-tongu'd treason and the ravisher!

O, hateful, vaporous, and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my curdled crime,
Must'ring thy mist to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time!
Or, if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

With rotten damps ravish the morning air;
Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make such
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noon-tide prick;
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smother'd light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child,
The silver-shining queen he would disdain;
Her twinkling handmaids, too, by him defil'd,
Through night's black bosom should not peep again:
So should I have copartners in my pain:
And fellowship in woe doth wo assuage,
As palmers' chat make short their pilgrimage.

Where now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infamy ;
But I alone, alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine ;
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

O night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak
Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace !
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults which in thy reign are made,
May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade !

Make me not object to the tell-tale day !
The light will show, character'd in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow :
Yea, the illiterate that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote my loathsome trespass in my looks.

The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name ;
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame :
Feast-finding minstrels,¹ tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I, Collatine.

Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted ;
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
That is as clear from this attain of mine,
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

O, unseen shame ! invisible disgrace !
O, unfelt sore ! crest-wounding, private scar !
Reproach is stamp'd on Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows, [knows !
Which not themselves, but he that gives them,
If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft :
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

Yet am I guiltless of thy honour's wreck ;
Yet for thy honour did I entertain him ;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him :
Besides of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue :—O, unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil !

Why should the worm intrude the maiden bud ?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests ?
Or toads infect fair founts with venom mud ?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts ?
Or kings be breakers of their own behests ?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

The aged man that coffers up his gold,
Is plagu'd with cramps, and gout, and painful fits ;
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless burns the harvest of his wits ;
Having no other pleasure of his gain,
But torment that it cannot cure his pain.

So then he lath it, when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young ;
Who in their pride do presently abuse it :
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their cursed-blessed fortune long,
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sour,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring ;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers ;
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing ;
What virtue breeds, iniquity devours :
We have no good that we can say is ours,
But ill annexed opportunity,
Or kills his life, or else his quality.

O, Opportunity ! thy guilt is great :
'Tis thou that execut'st the traitor's treason ;
Thou set'st the wolf where he the lamb may get ;
Whoever plots the sin, thou 'point'st the season ;
'Tis thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason ;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath :
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd ;
Thou smother'st honesty, thou murder'st troth ;
Thou foul abettor ! thou notorious bawd !
Thou plantest scandal, and displacest laud :
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief !

Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast ;
Thy smoothing titles to a ragged name ;
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste :
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it, then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such summers seek for thee ?

When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd ?
When wilt thou sort an hour great strifes to end ?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chain'd ?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd ?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee ;
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

The patient dies while the physician sleeps ;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds ;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps ;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds ;
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds :
Wrath, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
Thy heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

When Truth and Virtue have to do with thee,
A thousand crosses keep them from thy aid ;
They buy thy help : but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
He gratis comes ; and thou art well appay'd,
As well to hear as grant what he hath said.
My Collatine would else have come to me
When Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

Guilt thou art of murder and of theft ;
Guilty of perjury and subornation ;
Guilty of treason, forgery, and shift ;
Guilty of incest, that abomination :
An accessory by thine inclination
To all sins past, and all that are to come,
From the creation to the general doom.

Misshapen Time, copesmate of ugly night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care ;
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight, [snare ;
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's
Thou nursest all, and murderest all that are.
O, hear me then, injurious, shifting Time !
Be guilty of my death, since of my crime.

Why hath thy servant, Opportunity,
Betray'd the hours thou gav'st me to repose ?
Cancel'd my fortunes, and enchained me
To endless date of never-ending woes ?
Time's office is, to fine the rate of foes ;
To eat up errors by opinion bred,
Not spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn, and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till he render right ;
To ruin proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden towers :

To fill with worm-holes stately monuments,
To feed oblivion with decay of things,
To blot old books, and alter their contents,
To pluck the quills from ancient ravens' wings;
To dry the old oak's sap, and cherish springs;
To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel,
And turn the giddy round of fortune's wheel:

To show the beldame daughters of her daughter,
To make the child a man, the man a child,
To slay the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
To tame the unicorn and lion wild;
To mock the subtle, in themselves beguild;
To cheer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
And waste huge stones with little water-drops.

Why work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
Unless thou could'st return to make amends?
One poor retiring minute in an age
Would purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
Lending him wit, that to bad debtors lends: [back,
O, this dread night, would'st thou one hour come
I could prevent this storm, and shun thy wrack!

Thou ceaseless lackey to eternity,
With some mischance cross Tarquin in his flight:
Devise extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this cursed crimeful night:
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright;
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him moan; but pity not his moans;
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones;
And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
Wildier to him than tigers in their wildness.

Let him have time to tear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave;
And time to see one that by alms doth live,
Disdain to him disdained scraps to give.

Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort:
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly, and his time of sport:
And ever let his unrecalling crime
Have time to wait the abasing of his time.

O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill!
At his own shadow let the thief run mad,
Himself, himself seek every hour to kill! [spill:
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should
For who so base would such an office have,
As slanderous death's-man to so base a slave?

The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded, presently is mis'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unperceiv'd fly with the filth away;
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day;
Gnats are unnoted wheresoe'er they fly,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

1 'To spoil antiquities of hammer'd steel.'—An allusion to the costly monuments of our ancient kings and nobles, which were frequently made of iron or copper, wrought with great nicety, many of which, even in Shakespeare's time, had begun to decay. There are scraps of these monuments still to be seen in Westminster-abbey, and other old cathedrals.—Malone.

Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools!
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators!
Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools;
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters;
To trembling clients be you mediators:
For me, I force not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

In vain I rail at opportunity,
At time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night;
In vain I cavil with mine infamy,
In vain I spurn at my condemn'd despite:
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right,
The remedy indeed to do me good,
Is to let forth my foul, defiled blood.

Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame;
For if I die, my honour lives in thee,
But if I live, thou liv'st in my defame;
Since thou could'st not defend thy loyal dame,
And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
Kill both thyself and her for yielding so.

This said, from her betumbled couch she starteth,
To find some desperate instrument of death:
But this no slaughter-house no tool imparteth,
To make more vent for passage of her breath;
Which, thronging through her lips, so varieth,
As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

In vain, quoth she, I live, and seek in vain
Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
I fear'd by Tarquin's falchion to be slain,
Yet for the self-same purpose seek a knife:
But when I fear'd, I was a loyal wife;
So am I now:—O no, that cannot be;
Of that true type hath Tarquin rid me.

O! that is gone, for which I sought to live,
And therefore now I need not fear to die.
To clear this spot by death, at least I give
A badge of fame to slander's ivory;
A dying life to living infamy:
Poor helpless help, the treasure ste'n away,
To burn the guiltless casket where it lay!

Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
The stained taste of violated troth;
I will not wrong thy true affection so,
To flatter thee with an infring'd oath;
This bastard graft shall never come to growth:
He shall not boast, who did thy stock pollute,
That thou art dotting father of his fruit.

Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
Nor laugh with his companions at thy state;
But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought,
Basely with gold, but stol'n from forth thy gate.
For me, I am the mistress of my fate;
And with my trespass never will dispare,
Till life to death acquit my forc'd offence.

I will not poison thee with my attainst,
Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses;
My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
To hide the truth of this false night's abuses:
My tongue shall utter all; mine eyes, like sluices,
As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale.

By this lamenting Philomel had ended
The well-tun'd warble of her nightly sorrow,
And solemn night with slow-sad gait descended
To ugly hell; when lo, the blushing morrow
Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow;
But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranny spies,
And seems to point her out where she sits weeping;
To whom she sobbing speaks: O, eye of eyes,
Why pry'st thou through my window? leave thy peeping: [ing:
Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleep-
Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
For day hath nought to do what's done by night.

Thus evils she with every thing she sees :
True grief is fond and teasy as a child,
Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees.
Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild ;
Continuance tames the one ; the other wild,
Like an unpractic'd swimmer plunging still,
With too much labour drowns for want of skill.

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
Holds disputation with each thing she views,
And to herself all sorrow doth compare ;
No object but her passions strength renews ;
And as one shifts, another straight ensues :
Sometime her grief is dumb, and hath no words ;
Sometime 'tis mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy,
Make her moans mad with their sweet melody :
For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy ;
Sad souls are slain in merry company ;
Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society :
True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd,
When with like semblance it is sympathiz'd.

'Tis double death to drown in ken of shore ;
He ten times pines, that pines beholding food ;
To see the saline doth make the wound ake more ;
Great grief grieves most at that would do it good :
Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks o'erflows ;
Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows.

You mocking birds, quoth she, your tunes entomb
Within your hollow-swelling feather'd breasts !
And in my hearing be you mute and dumb !
(My restless discord knows no stops nor rests ;
A woful hostess brooks not merry guests :)
Relish your sible notes to pleasing ears ;
Distress likes dumps when time is kept with tears.

Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
Make thy sad grove in my disherv'd hair.
As the dark earth weeps at thy languishment,
So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
And with deep groans the disapon bear :
For burthen-wise I'll hum on Tarquin still,
While thou on Tereus descant'st, better skill.

And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
To imitate thee well, against my heart
Will fix a sharp knife, to affright my eye :
Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
These means, as frets upon an instrument,
Shall tune our heart-strings to true languishment.

And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
As shaming any eye should thee behold,
Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
That knows not parching heat nor freezing cold,
Will we find out ; and there we will unfold
To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kinds ;
Since men prove beasts, let beasts bear gentle minds.

As the poor frighted deer, that stands at gaze,
Wildly determining which way to fly ;
Or one incompass'd with a winding maze,
That cannot tread the way out readily ;
So with herself is she in mutiny,
To live or die which of the twin were better,
When life is sham'd, and death reproaches debtor.

To kill myself, quoth she, alack ! what were it,
But with my body my poor soul's pollution ?
They that lose half, with greater patience bear it,
Than they whose whole is swallow'd in confusion.
That mother tries a merciless conclusion,
Who having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
Will slay the other, and be nurse to none.

My body or my soul, which was the dearer ?
When the one pure, the other made divine,
Whose love of either to myself was nearer ?
When both were kept for heaven and Collatine.
Ah me ! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
His leaves will wither, and his sap decay ;
So must my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

Her house is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
Her mansion batter'd by the enemy ;
Her sacred table spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
Grossly engirt with daring infamy :
Then let it not be call'd impiety,
If in this blemish'd fort I make some hole,
Through which I may convey this troubled soul.

Yet die I will not, till my Collatine
Have heard the cause of my untimely death ;
That he may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
Revenge on him that made me stop my breath.
My stained blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
Which by him tainted, shall for him be spent,
And as his due, writ in my testament.

My honour I'll bequeath unto the knife
That wounds my body so dishonoured.
'Tis honour to deprive dishonour'd life ;
The one will live, the other being dead :
So of shame's ashes shall my fame be bred ;
For in my death I murder shameful scorn :
My shame so dead, mine honour is new-born.

Dear lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
What legacy shall I bequeath to thee ;
My resolution, love, shall be thy boast.
By whose example thou reveng'd may'st be.
How Tarquin must be us'd, read it in me :
Myself, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
And, for my sake, serve thou false Tarquin so.

This brief abridgment of my will I make :
My soul and body to the skies and ground ;
My resolution, husband, do thou take ;
Mine honour be the knife's, that makes my wound ;
My shame be his that did my fame confound ;
And all my fame that lives, disbursed be
To those that live, and think no shame of me.

Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this Will :
How was I overseen that thou shalt see it !
My blood shall wash the slander of mine ill ;
My life's foul deed, my life's fair end shall free it.
Faint not, faint heart, but stoutly say, so be it.
Yield to my hand ; my hand shall conquer thee ;
Thou dead, both die, and both shall victors be.

This plot of death when sadly she had laid,
And wip'd the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
With untun'd tongue she hoarsely call'd her maid,
Whose swift obedience to her mistress hies ;
For fleet-wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
Poor Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so
As winter meads, when sun doth melt their snow.

Her mistress she doth give demure good-morrow ;
With soft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty ;
And sorts a sad look to her lady's sorrow,
(For why ? her face wore sorrow's livery :)
But durst not ask of her audaciously
Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with wo.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye ;
Even so the maid with swelling drops 'gan wet
Her circled eye, enforc'd by sympathy
Of those fair suns, set in her mistress' sky,
Who in a salt-war'd ocean quench their light,
Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling :
One justly weeps ; the other takes in hand
No cause, but company, of her drops spilling :
Their gentle sex to weep are often willing ;
Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts ;
And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen, minds,
And therefore are they formed as marble will ;

1 'Thou, Collatine, shalt oversee this will.'—The overseer of a will was designed as a check upon the executor. Our author appoints John Hall and his wife for his executors, and Thomas Russel and Francis Celline as his overseers.—Steevens.

The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill :
Then call them not the authors of their ill,
No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain,
Lays open all the little worms that creep ;
In me, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep :
Through crystal walls each little mote will peep :
Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd !
Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour,
Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hid
Poor women's faults, that they are so fulfill'd
With men's abuses : those proud lords, to blame,
Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
Assail'd by night, with circumstances strong
Of present death, and shame that might ensue
By that her death, to do her husband wrong ;
Such danger to resistance did belong,
That dying fear through all her body spread ;
And who cannot abuse a body dead ?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
To the poor counterfeit of her complaining ;
My girl, quoth she, on what occasion break
Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are
If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining, [raining ?
Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood :
If tears could help, mine own would do me good.

But tell me, girl, when went—(and there she stay'd Till after a deep groan) Tarquin from hence ?
Madam, ere I was up, reply'd the maid,
The more to blame my sluggish negligence :
Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense ;
Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

But lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness.
O peace ! quoth Lucrece ; if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less ;
For more it is than I can well express :
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen,—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say ?—One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear ;
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it :
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ.

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill :
Consent and grief an eager combat fight ;
What wit sets down, is blotted straight with will ;
This is too curious good, this blunt and ill :
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall go before.

At last she thus begins : " Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person ! next vouchsafe t' afford,
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see,)
Some present speed, to come and visit me :
So I commend me from our house in grief ;
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Here folds she up the tenor of her wo,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality :
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own groes abuse,
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.
Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her ;

When sighs and groans and tears may grace the
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her [fashion
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told ;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that is doth behold,
When every part a part of wo doth bear,
'Tis but a part of sorrow that we hear :
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords,
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
At Ardea to my lord, with more than haste :
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to his as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast.
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems :
Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villain courtesies to her low ;
And blushing on her, with a steadfast eye,
Receives the scroll, without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie,
Imagine every eye beholds their blame ;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame.

When, silly groom ! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect
To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely.
Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
Pawn'd honest looks, but lay'd no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blas'd ;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wisely on him gas'd ;
Her earnest eye did make him more amas'd :
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spy'd in her some blemish.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 'tis stale to sigh, to weep, and groan :
So wo hath wearied wo, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy ;
Before the which is drawn the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threatening cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy ;
Which the conceited painter drew so proud,
As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of nature, art gave lifeless life :
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife :
The red blood reek'd, to show the painter's strife ;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrin'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust ;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loop-holes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust :
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.
In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces ;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity ;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pala cowards, marching on with trembling paces ;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble

I At Ardea, to my lord, with more than haste.—
About a century and a half ago, all our letters that required speed were superscribed, With post post haste.
—Malone.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O, what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent,
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 'twere encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand,
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard, all silver white,
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly
Thin winding breath, which pur'l'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly list'n'ing, but with several graces,
As if some mermaid did their ears entice;
Some high, some low; the painter was so nice,
The scalps of many almost hid behind,
To jump up higher seem'd, to mock the mind.

Here one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
His nose being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear;
Here one, being throng'd, bears back, all boll'n and Another, smother'd, seems to pelt and swear; [red;
And in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
As, but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
It seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

For much imaginary work was there;
Conceit deceitful, so compact, so kind,
That for Achilles' image stood his spear,
Grip'd in an armed hand; himself, behind,
Was left unseen, save to the eye of mind:
A hand, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
Stood for the whole to be imagined.

And from the walls of strong-besieged Troy
When their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to Stood many Trojan mothers, sharing joy [field,
To see their youthful sons bright weapons wield;
And to their hope they such odd action yield,
That, through their light joy, seemed to appear (Like bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

And, from the strand of Dardan where they fought,
To Simois' reedy banks the red blood ran,
Whose waves to imitate the battle sought
With swelling ridges; and their ranks began
To break upon the galled shore, and then Retire again, till meeting greater ranks,
They join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

To this well-painted piece is Lucrece come,
To find a face where all distress is stel'd.
Many she sees, where cares have carved some,
But none where all distress and dolour dwell'd,
Till she despairing Hecuba beheld,
Staring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
Which bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

In her the painter had anatomiz'd
Time's ruin, beauty's wreck, and grim care's reign;
Her cheeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd;
Of what she was, no semblance did remain:
Her blue blood chang'd to black in every vein,
Wanting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed,
Show'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

On this sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
And shapes her sorrow to the beldame's woes,
Who nothing wants to answer her but cries,
And bitter words, to ban her cruel foes:
The painter was no god to lend her those;
And therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
To give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

Poor instrument, quoth she, without a sound,
I'll tune thy woes with my lamenting tongue:
And drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound,
And rail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
And with my tears quench Troy, that burns so long;
And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here:
And here, in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter, die.

Why should the private pleasure of some one
Become the public plague of many more?
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so;
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe:
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general?

Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus wounds;
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds:
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire.

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes:
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell;
So Lucrece, set a-work, sad tales doth tell
To pencil'd peniveness and colour'd sorrow; [row.
She lends them words, and she their looks doth borrow.

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn, she doth lament:
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent;
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild, that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show,
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes waiting still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe;
Cheeks, neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconced his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust,
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew
For perjur'd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew;
Whose words, like wild-fire, burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilium, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places, [faces.
When their glass fell, wherein they view'd their

This picture she advis'dly perus'd,
And chid the painter for his wond'rous skill;
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abus'd,
So fair a form lodg'd not a mind so ill;
And still on him she gaz'd; and gazing still,
Such signs of truth in his plain face she spy'd,
That she concludes the picture was bely'd.

It cannot be, quoth she, that so much guile—
(She would have said) can lurk in such a look;
But Tarquin's shape came in her mind the while,
And from her tongue, can lurk from cannot took;
It cannot be she in that sense forsook,
And turn'd it thus: 'It cannot be, I find,
But such a face should bear a wicked mind.'

For even as subtle Sinon here is painted,
So sober-sad, so weary, and so mild,
(As if with grief or travail he had faint'd,)
To me came Tarquin armed; so beguil'd
With outward honesty, but yet defil'd
With inward vice: as Priam him did cherish,
So did I Tarquin; so my Troy did perish.

Look, look, how listening Priam wets his eyes,
To see those borrow'd tears that Sinon sheds.
Priam, why art thou old, and yet not wise?
For every tear he falls, a Trojan bleeds;
His eye drops fire, no water thence proceeds:
Those round clear pearls of his, that move thy pity,
Are balls of quenchless fire to burn thy city.
Such devils steal effects from lightless hell;
For Sinon in his fire doth quake with cold,
And in that cold, hot-burning fire doth dwell;
These contraries such unity do hold,
Only to flatter fools, and make them bold:
So Priam's trust false Sinon's tears doth flatter,
That he finds means to burn his Troy with water.

Here, all enrag'd, such passion her assails,
That patience is quite beaten from her breast.
She tears the senseless Sinon with her nails,
Comparing him to that unhappy guest,
Whose deed hath made herself, herself detest:
At last she smilingly with this gives o'er;
Fool! fool! quoth she, his wounds will not be sore.

Thus ebb and flows the current of her sorrow,
And time doth weary time with her complaining.
She looks for night, and then she longs for morrow,
And both she thinks too long with her remaining:
Short time seems long in sorrow's sharp sustaining.
Though wo be heavy, yet it seldom sleeps;
And they that watch, see time how slow it creeps.

Which all this time hath overslipp'd her thought,
That she with painted images hath spent;
Being from the feeling of her own grief brought
By deep surmise of others detriment;
Losing her woes in shows of discontent.
It easeth some, though none it ever cur'd,
To think their dolor others have endur'd.

But now the mindful messenger, come back,
Brings home his lord and other company;
Who finds his Lucrece clad in mourning black:
And round about her tear-distained eye
Blue circles stream'd, like rainbows in the sky;
These water galls in her dim element
Foretell new storms to those already spent.

Which when her sad-beholding husband saw,
Amazedly in her sad face he stares:
Her eyes, though sod in tears, look'd red and raw,
Her lively colour kill'd with deadly cares.
He hath no power to ask her how she fares;
But stood, like old acquaintance in a trance,
Met far from home, wondering each other's chance.

At last he takes her by the bloodless hand,
And thus begins: What uncouth ill event
Hath thee befall'n, that thou dost trembling stand?
Sweet love, what spite hath thy fair colour spent?
Why art thou thus attir'd in discontent?
Unmask, dear dear, this moody heaviness,
And tell thy grief, that we may give redress.

Three times with sighs she gives her sorrow fire,
Ere once she can discharge one word of woe:
At length address'd to answer his desire,
She modestly prepares to let them know
Her honour is taken prisoner by the foe;
While Collatine and his consorted lords
With sad attention long to hear her words.

And now this pale swan in her watery nest
Begins the sad dirge of her certain ending:
Few words, quoth she, shall fit the trespass best,
Where no excuse can give the fault amending:
In me more woes than words are now depending;
And my laments would be drawn out too long,
To tell them all with one poor tired tongue.

Then be this all the task it hath to say:
Dear husband, in the interest of thy bed
A stranger came, and on that pillow lay
Where thou wast wont to rest thy weary head;
And what wrong else may be imagined
By foul enforcement might be done to me,
From that, alas! thy Lucrece is not free.

For in the dreadful dead of dark midnight,
With shining falchion in my chamber came
A creeping creature, with a flaming light,
And softly cry'd, Awake, thou Roman dame,
And entertain my love; else lasting shame
On thee and thine this night I will inflict,
If thou my love's desire do contradict.

For some hard-favour'd groom of thine, quoth he Unless thou yoke thy liking to my will,
I'll murder straight, and then I'll slaughter thee,
And swear I found you where you did fulfil
The loathsome act of lust, and so did kill
The lechers in their deed: this act will be
My fame, and thy perpetual infamy.

With this I did begin to start and cry,
And then against my heart he set his sword;
Swearing, unless I took all patiently,
I should not live to speak another word:
So should my shame still rest upon record;
And never be forgot in mighty Rome
The adulterate death of Lucrece and her groom.

Mine enemy was strong, my poor self weak,
And far the weaker with so strong a fear:
My bloody judge forbade my tongue to speak;
No rightful plea might plead for justice there:
His scarlet lust came evidence to swear
That my poor beauty had purkin'd his eyes,
And when the judge is rob'd, the prisoner dies.

O, teach me how to make mine own excuse!
Or, at the least, this refuge let me find;
Though my gross blood be stain'd with this abuse,
Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; that never was inclin'd
To accessory yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Lo, here, the hopeless merchant of this loss,
With head declin'd, and voice damm'd up with woe,
With sad-set eyes, and wretched arms across,
From lips new-waxen pale begins to blow
The grief away, that stops his answer so:
But wretched as he is, he strives in vain;
What he breathes out, his breath drinks up again.

As through an arch the violent roaring tide
Out-runs the eye that doth behold his haste,
Yet in the eddy boundeth in his pride
Back to the strait that forc'd him on so fast;
In rage sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
Even so his sighs, his sorrows, make a saw,
To push grief on, and back the same grief draw.

Which speechless wo of his, poor else attendeth,
And his untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
Dear lord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth
Another power, no flood by raining slaketh.
My wo too sensible thy passion maketh
More feeling-painful: let it then suffice
To drown one wo, one pair of weeping eyes.

And for my sake, when I might charm thee so,
For she that was thy Lucrece,—now attend me;
Be suddenly revenged on my foe,
Thine, mine, his own; suppose thou dost defend me
From what is past; the help that thou shalt lend me
Comes all too late, yet let the traitor die:
For sparing justice feeds iniquity.

But ere I name him, you fair lords, quoth she,
(Speaking to those, that came with Collatine,
Shall plight your honourable faiths to me,
With swift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine:
For 'tis a meritorious fair design,
To chase injustice with revengeful arms: [harmes.
Knights, by their oaths, should right poor ladies'

At this request, with noble disposition
Each present lord began to promise aid,
As bound in knighthood to her importunities,
Longing to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
But she, that yet her sad task hath not said,
The protestation stops. O, speak, quoth she,
How may this forced stain be wip'd from me?

What is the quality of name offence,
Being constrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
May my pure mind with the foul act dispense,
My low-declined honour to advance?
May any terms acquit me from this chance?
The poison'd fountain clears itself again;
And why not I from this compell'd stain?

With this they all at once began to say,
Her body's stain her mind untainted clears;
While with a joyless smile she turns away
The face, that map which deep impression bears
Of hard misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
No, no, quoth she, no dame, hereafter living,
By my excuse shall claim excuse's giving.

Here with a sigh, as if her heart would break,
She throws forth Tarquin's name: He, he, she says,
But more than he her poor tongue could not speak;
Till after many accents and delays,
Untimely breathings, sick and short assays,
She utters this: He, he, fair lords, 'tis he,
That guides this hand to give this wound to me.

Even here she heathen in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheath'd:
That blow did hail it from the deep unrest
Of that polluted prison where it breath'd:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lasting date from cancel'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece' father that beholds her bleed,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly stood,
Bare and unpeopled, in this fearful flood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood, a wat'ry rigol goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is no putrid'd.

Daughter, dear daughter, old Lucretius cries,
That life was mine, which thou hast here depriv'd.
If in the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live, now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me deriv'd.
If children pre-decease progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new-born;
But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a bare-bon'd death by time out-worn;
O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn!
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was.

O time, cease thou thy course, and last no longer,
If thy succour to be, that should survive,
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger,
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again, and see
Thy father die, and not thy father thee!

By this starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold Lucrece' bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfeits to die with her a space;
Till vainly shame bids him possess his breath,
And live to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come, in his poor heart's aid,
That no man could distinguish what he said.

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er;
Then son and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, she's mine: O, mine she is,
Replies the husband: Do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine.

O, quoth Lucretius, I did give that life,
Which she too early and too late hath spill'd.
Wo, wo, quoth Collatine, she was my wife,
I ow'd her, and 'tis mine that she hath kill'd,
My daughter and my wife with clamours fill'd
The dispers'd air, who holding Lucrece' life,
Answer'd their cries, my daughter and my wife.

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece' side,
Seeing such emulation in their wo,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly-jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things.

But now he throws that shallow habit by,
Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
Thou wronged lord of Rome, quoth he, arise;
Let my unsounded self, suppos'd a fool,
Now set thy long-experienc'd wit to school.

Why, Collatine, is wo the cure for wo? [deeds?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow,
For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds;
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations:
But kneel with me, and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
Since Rome herself in them doth stand disgrac'd,
By our strong arms from forth her fair streets chas'd.

Now by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun, that breeds the fat earth's store
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece' soul, that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife.

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife, to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
Who wondering at him, did his words allow:
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

SONNETS.

TO THE ONLY BEGETTER OF THESE ENSUING SONNETS,

MR. W. H.

ALL HAPPINESS, AND THAT ETERNITY PROMISED BY OUR EVER-LIVING POET, WISHERETH THE

WELL-WISHING ADVENTURER IN SETTING FORTH,

T. T.*

I.

FROM fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die,
But as the ripper should by time decaace,
His tender heir might bear his memory :
But thou, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
Feed'st thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel.
Making a famine where abundance lies,
Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel,
Thou that art now the world's fresh ornament,
And only herald to the gaudy spring,
Within thine own bud buriest thy content,
And, tender churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
Pity the world, or else this glutton be,
To eat the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.

When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now,
Will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held :
Then, being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
Where all the treasure of thy lusty days ;
To say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
Were an all-eating shame, and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's use,
If thou could'st answer—" This fair child of mine Shall sum my count, and make my old excuse,"—
Proving his beauty by succession time.
This were to be new made, when thou art old,
And see thy blood warm, when thou feel'st it cold.

III.

Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
Now is the time that face should form another ;
Whose fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
Thou dost beguile the world, unless some mother.
For where is she so fair, whose un-carr'd womb
Disdains the tillage of thy husbandry ?
Or who is he so fond, will be the tomb
Of his self-love, to stop posterity ?
Thou art thy mother's glass, and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime :
So thou through windows of thine age shalt see,
Despite of wrinkles, this the golden time.
But if thou live, remember'd not to be,
Die single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Unthrifty loveliness, why dost thou spend
Upon thyself thy beauty's legacy ?
Nature's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend ;
And being frank, she lends to those are free.
Then, bounteous niggard, why dost thou abuse
The bounteous largess given thee to give ?
Profless usurer, why dost thou use
So great a sum of sums, yet canst not live ?
For having traffic with thyself alone,
Thou of thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
Then how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
What acceptable audit canst thou leave ?

Thy unwar'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
Which, used, lives thy executor to be.

V.

Those hours, that with gentle work did frame,
The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
Will play the tyrants to the very same,
And that unfair, which fairly doth excel ;
For never-resting time leads summer on
To hideous winter and confounds him there ;
Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves quite gone,
Beauty o'er-snow'd, and bareness every where :
Then, were not summer's distillation left,
A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was :
But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet,
Lose but their show ; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
In thee thy summer, ere thou be disill'd :
Make sweet some phial, treasure thou some place
With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
That use is not forbidden usury,
Which happens those that pay the willing loan ;
That's for thyself to breed another thee,
Or ten times happier, be it ten for one ;
Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee :
Then what could death do, if thou should'st depart,
Leaving thee living in posterity ?
Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
To be death's conquest, and make worms thine heir.

VII.

Lo, in the orient when the gracious light
Lifts up his burning head, each under eye
Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
Serving with looks his sacred majesty ;
And having climbd the steep-up heavenly hill,
Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
Attending on his golden pilgrimage ;
But when from high-most pitch, with weary car,
Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
The eyes, fore-duteous, now converted are
From his low tract, and look another way :
So thou, thyself out-going in thy noon,
Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly ?
Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
Why lov'st thou that which thou receiv'st not gladly ?
Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy ?
If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
By unions married, do offend thine ear,
They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
In singleness the parts that thou should'st bear.

* I. e. Thomas Thorpe, in whose name the Sonnets were first entered in Stationers' Hall.

Mark, how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each, by mutual ordering;
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee, "thou single wilt prove none."

IX.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye,
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shall hap to die,
The world will wait thee, like a makeless wife;
The world will be thy widow, and still weep,
That thou no form of these hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an unthrif in the world doth spend,
Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste hath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.
No love towards others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

X.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant if thou wilt, thou art below'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st, is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire;
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O, change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove:
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

XI.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou may'st call thine, when thou from youth con-
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase; [vertest.
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay:
If all were minded so, the times should cease,
And threescore years would make the world away.
Let those whom nature hath not made for store,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look, whom she best endow'd, she gave thee more;
Which bounteous gift thou should'st in bounty cherish:
She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby
Thou should'st print more, nor let that copy die.

XII.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls, all silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;
And nothing 'gainst time's scythe can make defence,
Save breed, to brave him, when he takes thee hence.

XIII.

O, that you were yourself! but, love, you are
No longer yours, than you yourself here live:
Against this coming end you should prepare,
And your sweet semblance to some other give.
So should that beauty which you hold in lease,
Find no determination: then you were Yourself again, after yourself's decease,
When your sweet issue your sweet form should bear.

Who lets so fair a house fall to decay,
Which husbandry in honour might uphold,
Against the stormy gusts of winter's day,
And barren rage of death's eternal cold?
O! none but unthrif:—Dear my love, you know
You had a father; let your son say so.

XIV.

Not from the stars do I my judgment pluck;
And yet methinks I have astronomy;
But not to tell of good, or evil luck,
Of plagues, of dearths, or season's quality:
Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell,
Pointing to each his thunder, rain, and wind;
Or say, with princes if it shall go well,
By oft predict that I in heaven find:
But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive,
And (constant stars) in them I read such art,
As truth and beauty shall together thrive,
If from thyself to store thou would'st convert:
Or else of thee this I prognosticate,
Thy end is truth's and beauty's doom and date.

XV.

When I consider every thing that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment;
That this huge state presenteth nought but shows
Whereon the stars in secret influence comment;
When I perceive that men as plants increase,
Cheered and check'd even by the self-same sky,
Vault in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
And wear their brave state out of memory;
Then the conceit of this inconstant stay
Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
Where wasteful time debateth with decay,
To change your day of youth to sullied night;
And, all in war with time, for love of you,
As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

XVI.

But wherefore do not you a mightier way
Make war upon this bloody tyrant, Time?
And fortify yourself in your decay
With means more blessed than my barren rhyme?
Now stand you on the top of happy hours;
And many maiden gardens, yet unset,
With virtuous wish would bear you living flowers,
Much liker than your painted counterfeit:
So should the lines of life that life repair,
Which this, Time's pencil, or my pupil pen,
Neither in inward worth, nor outward fair,
Can make you live yourself in eyes of men.
To give away yourself, keeps yourself still;
And you must live, drawn by your own sweet skill.

XVII.

Who will believe my verse in time to come,
If it were fill'd with your most high deserts?
Though yet heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
Which hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, this poet lies,
Such heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.
So should my papers, yellow'd with their age,
Be scorn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue;
And your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
And stretched metre of an antique song:
But were some child of yours alive that time,
You should live twice;—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
Thou art more lovely and more temperate.
Rough winds do shake the darling buds of May,
And summer's lease hath all too short a date:
Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
And often is his gold complexion dimm'd;
And every fair from fair sometime declines,
By chance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd;

But thy eternal summer shall not fade,
Nor lose possession of that fair thou owest ;
Nor shall death brag thou wander'st in his shade,
When in eternal lines to time thou growest :
So long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
So long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

XIX.

Devouring Time, blunt thou the lion's paw,
And make the earth devour her own sweet brood ;
Pluck the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
And burn the long-liv'd phoenix in her blood ;
Make glad and sorry seasons as thou fleet'st,
And do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
To the wide world, and all her fading sweets ;
But I forbid thee one most heinous crime :
O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen ;
Him in thy course unstained do allow,
For beauty's pattern to succeeding men.
Yet, do thy worst, old Time : despite thy wrong,
My love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted,
Hast thou, the master-mistress of my passion ;
A woman's gentle heart, but not acquainted
With shifting change, as is false women's fashion ;
An eye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
Gilding the object whereupon it gazeth ;
A man in hue all hues in his controlling, [seeth.
Which steals men's eyes, and women's souls amaze.
And for a woman wert thou first created ;
Till nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
And by addition me of thee defeated,
By adding one thing to my purpose nothing,
But since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
Mine be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

XXI.

So is it not with me, as with that muse
Stirr'd by a painted beauty to his verse ;
Who heaven itself for ornament doth use,
And every fair with his fair doth rehearse ;
Making a complement of proud compare,
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
With April's first-born flowers, and all things rare
That heaven's air in this huge roundure bears.
O let me, true in love, but truly write,
And then believe me, my love is as fair
As any mother's child, though not so bright
As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air :
Let them say more that like of beauty well ;
I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
So long as youth and thou are of one date ;
But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
Then look I death my days should expiate.
For all that beauty that doth cover thee,
Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me ;
How can I then be elder than thou art ?
O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
As I not for myself but for thee will ;
Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
Presume not on thy heart, when mine is slain ;
Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an imperfect actor on the stage,
Who with his fear is put besides his part,
Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
Whose strength's abundance weakens his own
So I, for fear of trust, forget to say [heart ;
The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
And in mine own love's strength seem to decay.
O'er-charg'd with burthen of mine own love's might,
O, let my books be then the eloquence
And dumb presagers of my speaking breast ;

Who plead for love, and look for recompense,
More than that tongue that more hath more ex-press'd.

O, learn to read what silent love hath writ :
To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

XXIV.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath steel'd
Thy beauty's form in table of my heart ;
My body is the frame wherein 'tis held,
And perspective it is best painter's art.
For through the painter must you see his skill,
To find where your true image pictur'd lies ;
Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
That bath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done ;
Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee ;
Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XXV.

Let those who are in favour with their stars,
Of public honour and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread,
But as the marigold at the sun's eye ;
And in themselves their pride lies buried,
For at a frown they in their glory die.
The painful warrior famoused for fight,
After a thousand victories once foil'd ;
Is from the beck of honour razed quite,
And all the rest forget for which he toil'd.
Then happy I, that love and am beloved,
Where I may not remove, nor be remov'd.

XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit ;
To thee I send this written embassy,
To witness duty, not to show my wit :
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it ;
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it :
Till whatsoever star that guides my moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect :
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee ; [me.
Till then, not show my head where thou may'st prove

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel thr'd ;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expir'd :
For then my thoughts (from far where I abide)
Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eye-lids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see :
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beautiful, and her old face new.
Lo thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for my self, no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debar'd the benefit of rest ?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night, and night by day, oppress'd ?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me ;
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven.
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night
When sparkling stars twine not, thou gild'st the even

But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

XXIX.

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my out-cast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Feaster'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee,—and then my state
(Like to the lark at break of day arising
From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate :)
For thy sweet love remember'd, such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:
Then can I drown an eye, unush'd to flow.
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since-cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd night.
Then can I grieve at grievances fore-gone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoan'd moan.
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love, and all love's loving parts,
And all those riches which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stol'n from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth live,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That due of many now is thine alone:
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou (all they) hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day, [cover:
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall
And shak't by fortune once more re-survey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And, though they be out-stripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men.
O, then vouchsafe me but this loving thought!
*Had my friend's sense grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought,
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love.*

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine,
With all triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out, alack! he was but one hour mine,
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.

Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth;
Sum of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,
To let base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
Hiding thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
'Tis not enough that through the cloud thou break,
To dry the rain on my storm-beaten face,
For no man well of such a salve can speak,
That heals the wound, and cures not the disgrace:
Nor can thy shame give physic to my grief;
Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
The offender's sorrow lends but weak relief
To him that bears the strong offence's cross.
Ah! but those tears are pearl, which thy love sheds,
And they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

No more be griev'd at that which thou hast done:
Roses have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
Clouds and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
And loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
All men make faults, and even I in this,
Authorizing thy trespass with compare;
Myself corrupting, saving thy amias,
Excusing thy sins more than thy sins are:
For to thy sensual fault I bring in sense,
(Thy adverse party is thy advocate,)
And 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence;
Such civil war is in my love and hate,
That I an accessory needs must be
To that sweet thief, which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.

Let me confess that we two must be twain,
Although our undivided loves are one:
So shall those blots that do with me remain,
Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
In our two loves there is but one respect,
Though in our lives a separable spite,
Which though it alter not love's sole effect,
Yet doth it steal sweet hours from love's delight.
I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame;
Nor thou with public kindness honour me,
Unless thou take that honour from thy name:
But do not so; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth;
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store:
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give,
That I in thy abundance am sufficed,
And by a part of all thy glory live.
Look what is best, that best I wish in thee;
This wish I have; then ten times happy me.

XXXVIII.

How can my muse want subject to invent,
While thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
O, give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
Worthy perusal stand against thy sight;
For who's so dumb that cannot write to thee,
When thou thyself dost give invention light?
Be thou the tenth muse, ten times more in worth
Than those old nine, which rhymers invocates;
And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
Eternal numbers to out-live long date,
If my slight muse do please these curious days,
The pain be mine but thine shall be the praise

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
 When thou art all the better part of me?
 What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
 And what is't but mine own, when I praise thee?
 Even for this let us divided live,
 And our dear love lose name of single one;
 That by this separation I may give
 That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
 O absence, what a torment would'st thou prove,
 Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
 To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
 (Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,)
 And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
 By praising him here, who doth hence remain.

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
 What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
 No love, my love, that thou may'st true love call;
 All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
 Then, if for my love thou my love receivest,
 I cannot blame thee, for my love thou usest;
 But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
 By wilful taste of what thyself refusest.
 I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
 Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
 And yet love knows, it is a greater grief
 To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
 Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
 Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits,
 When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
 Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
 For still temptation follows where thou art.
 Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
 Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assail'd;
 And when a woman woos, what woman's son
 Will sourly leave her till she have prevail'd.
 Ah me! but yet thou might'st, my sweet, forbear,
 And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
 Who lead thee in their riot even there
 Where thou art forc'd to break a two-fold truth:
 Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
 Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
 And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
 That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
 A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
 Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:—
 Thou dost love her, because thou knew'st I love her;
 And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
 Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her;
 If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
 And, losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
 Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
 And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
 But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
 Sweet flattery!—then she loves but me alone.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
 For all the day they view things unrespected;
 But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
 And darkly bright, are bright in dark directed,
 Then thou, whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
 How would thy shadow's form form happy show
 To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
 When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so?
 How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
 By looking on thee in the living day,
 When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
 Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?
 All days are nights to see, till I see thee, [me.
 And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
 Injurious distance should not stop my way;
 For then, despite of space, I would be brought
 From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
 No matter, then, although my foot did stand
 Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee,
 For nimble thought can jump both sea and land,
 As soon as think the place where he would be.
 But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought,
 To leap large lengths of miles, when thou art gone,
 But that so much of earth and water wrought,
 I must attend time's leisure with my moan;
 Receiving nought by elements so slow
 But heavy tears, badges of either's woe:

XLV.

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
 Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
 The first my thought, the other my desire,
 These present-absent with swift motion slide
 For when these quicker elements are gone
 In tender embassy of love to thee,
 My life, being made of four, with two alone
 Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
 Until life's composition be recur'd
 By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
 Who even but now come back again, assur'd
 Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
 This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
 I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
 How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
 Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
 Mine heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
 My heart doth plead, that thou in him dost lie,
 (A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes,)—
 But the defendant doth that plea deny,
 And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
 To 'cide this title is impannelled
 A quest of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
 And by their verdict is determined
 The clear eye's moiety, and the dear heart's part:
 As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part,
 And my heart's right thine inward love of heart.

XLVII.

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
 And each doth good turns now unto the other;
 When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
 Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
 With my love's picture then my eye doth feast,
 And to the painted banquet bids my heart:
 Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
 And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
 So, either by thy picture or my love,
 Thyself away, art present still with me;
 For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move,
 And I am still with them, and they with thee;
 Or, if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
 Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.

How careful was I, when I took my way,
 Each trifle under truest bars to thrust;
 That, to my use, it might unused stay
 From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust!
 But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
 Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
 Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care,
 Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
 Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
 Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
 Within the gentle closure of my breast, [part;
 From whence at pleasure thou may'st come and
 And even thence thou wilt be stolen, I fear,
 For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
When as thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects ;
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely pass,
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye ;
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reason find of settled gravity ;
Against that time do I ensconce me here,
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part :
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L.

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek,—my weary travel's end,—
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
Thus far the miles are measur'd from thy friend !
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from thee :
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide ;
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side ;
For that same groan doth put this in my mind,—
My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI.

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed :
From where thou art why should I haste me thence ?
Till I return, of posting is no need.
O, what excuse will my poor beast then find,
When swift extremity can seem but slow ?
Then should I spur, though mounted on the wind ?
In winged speed no motion shall I know :
Then can no horse with my desire keep pace ;
Therefore desire, of perfect love being made,
Shall neigh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race ;
But love, for love, thus shall excuse my jade ;
Since from thee going he went wilful-slow,
Towards thee I'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet up-locked treasure,
The which he will not every hour survey,
For blunting the fine point of seldom pleasure,
Therefore are feasts so solemn and so rare,
Since seldom coming, in the long year set,
Like stones of worth they thinly placed are,
Or captain jewels in the carcanet.
So is the time that keeps you, as my chest,
Or as the wardrobe, which the robe doth hide,
To make some special instant special-blest,
By new unfolding his imprison'd pride.
Blessed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
Being had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.

What is your substance, whereof are you made,
That millions of strange shadows on you tend ?
Since every one hath, every one, one shade,
And you, but one, can every shadow lead.
Describe Adonia, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you ;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian tires are painted new :
Speak of the spring, and foison of the year ;
The one doth shadow of your beauty show,
The other as your bounty doth appear ;
And you in every blessed shape we know.
In all external grace you have some part,
But you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.

O, how much more doth beautyauteous seem,
By that sweet ornament which truth doth give !
The rose looks fair, but fairer we it deem
For that sweet odour which doth in it live.
The canker-blooms have full as deep a dye,
As the perfumed tincture of the roses ;
Hang on such thorns, and play as wantonly
When summer's breath their masked buds discloses ;
But, for their virtue only is their show,
They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade ;
Die to themselves ; Sweet roses do not so ;
Of their sweet deaths are sweetest odours made ;
And so of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
When that shall fade, my verse distills your truth.

LV.

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall out-live this powerful rhyme ;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept stone, besmear'd with sluttish time.
When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity [room
Shall you pace forth ; your praise shall still find
Even in the eyes of all posterity,
That wear this world out to the ending doom.
So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force ; be it not said,
Thy edge should blunter be than appetite ;
Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might :
So, love, be thou ; although to-day thou fill
Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
To-morrow see again, and do not kill
The spirit of love with a perpetual dullness.
Let this sad interim like the ocean be
Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see
Return of love, more blest may be the view ;
Or call it winter, which being full of care, [rare
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire ?
I have no precious time at all to spend
Nor services to do, till you require.
Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour,
Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
When you have bid your servant once adieu ;
Nor dare I question with my jealous thought,
Where you may be, or your affairs suppose ;
But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought,
Save, where you are, how happy you make those :
So true a fool is love, that in your will (Though you do any thing) he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure !
O, let me suffer (being at your beck)
The imprison'd absence of your liberty
And patience, tame to sufferance, hide each check,
Without accusing you of injury.
Be where you list ; your charter is so strong,
That you yourself may privilege your time :
Do what you will, to you it doth belong
Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
I am to wait, though waiting so be hell ;
Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that, which is,
Hath been before, how are our brains begu'd,
Which, labouring for invention, bear a mass
The second burthen of a former child?
O, that record could with a backward look,
Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
Show me your image in some antique book,¹
Since mind at first in character was done!
That I might see what the old world could say
To this composed wonder of your frame;
Whether we are mended, or wher better they,
Or whether revolution be the same.
O! sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

LX.

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore,
So do our minutes hasten to their end;
Each changing place with that which goes before;
In sequent toil all forwards do contend.
Nativity once in the main of light,
Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crown'd,
Crook'd eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,
And time that gave, doth now his gift confound.
Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth,
And delves the parallels in beauty's brow;
Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,
And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow:
And yet, to time in hope, my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

LXI.

Is it thy will, thy image should keep open
My heavy eye-lids to the weary night?
Dost thou desire my slumbers should be broken,
While shadows, like to thee, do mock my sight?
Is it thy spirit that thou send'st from thee
So far from home, into my deeds to pry;
To find out shames and idle hours in me,
The scope and tenor of thy jealousy?
O no! thy love, though much, is not so great;
It is my love that keeps mine eye awake;
Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat,
To play the watchman ever for thy sake:
For thee watch I, whilst thou dost wake elsewhere
From me far off, with others all too near.

LXII.

Sin of self-love possessed all mine eye,
And all my soul, and all my every part;
And for this sin there is no remedy,
It is so grounded inward in my heart.
Methinks no face so gracious is as mine,
No shape so true, no truth of such account;
And for myself mine own worth do define,
As I all other in all worths surmount.
But when my glass shows me myself indeed,
Beated and chopp'd with tann'd antiquity,
Mine own self-love quite contrary I read,
Self so self-loving were iniquity.
'Tis thee (myself) that for myself I praise,
Painting my age with beauty of thy days.

LXIII.

Against my love shall be, as I am now,
With time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworn;
When hours have drain'd his blood, and fill'd his brow
With lines and wrinkles; when his youthful morn
Hath travell'd on to age's steepy night;
And all those beauties, whereof now he's king,
Are vanishing or vanish'd out of sight,
Stealing away the treasure of his spring;
For such a time do I now fortify
Against confounding age's cruel knife,
That he shall never cut from memory
My sweet love's beauty, though my lover's life:
His beauty shall in these black lines be seen,
And they shall live, and he in them still green.

¹ 'Show me your image in some antique book.—It was an ancient custom to insert real portraits among the ornaments of illuminated manuscripts, with inscriptions under them.—Steevens.

LXIV.

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defac'd
The rich-proud cost of out-worn bury'd age;
When sometime lofty towers I see down-ras'd,
And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss, and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state itself confounded to decay;
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate—
That time will come, and take my love away.
This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

LXV.

Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea,
But sad mortality o'er-aways their power,
How with this rage shall beauty hold a plea,
Whose action is no stronger than a flower?
O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out
Against the wreckful siege of battering days,
When rocks impregnable are not so stout,
Nor gates of steel so strong, but time decays?
O, fearful meditation! where, alack,
Shall times's best jewel from time's chest lie hid?
Or what strong hand can hold his swift foot back?
Or who his spoil of beauty can forbid?
O none, unless this miracle have might,
That in black ink my love may still shine bright.

LXVI.

Tir'd with all these, for restful death I cry,—
As, to behold desert a beggar born,
And needy nothing trimm'd in jollity,
And poor fault unhappy forever,
And gilded honour shamefully mimic'd,
And maiden virtue rudely strumpetted,
And right perfection wrongfully disgrac'd,
And strength by limping way disabled,
And art made tongue-ty'd by authority,
And folly (doctor-like) controlling skill,
And simple truth miscall'd simplicity,
And captive good attending captain ill:
Tir'd with all these, from these would I be gone,
Save that, to die, I leave my love alone.

LXVII.

Ah! wherefore with infection should he live,
And with his presence grace impiety,
That sin by him advantage should achieve,
And lace itself with his society?
Why should false painting imitate his cheek,
And steal dead seeming of his living hue?
Why should poor beauty indirectly seek Roses of shadow, since his rose is true?
Why should he live, now nature bankrupt is,
Beggard of blood to blush through lively veins?
For she hath no exchequer now but his,
And, proud of many, lives upon his gains.
O, him she stores, to show what wealth she had,
In days long since, before these last so bad.

LXVIII.

Thus is his cheek the map of days out-worn,
When beauty liv'd and died, as flowers do now,
Before these bastard signs of fair were born,
Or durst inhabit on a living brow;
Before the golden tresses of the dead,
The right of sepulchres, were shorn away,
To live a second life on second head;¹
Ere beauty's dead fleece made another gay:
In him those holy antique hours are seen,
Without all ornament, itself, and true,
Making no summer of another's green,
Robbing no old to dress his beauty new;
And him as for a map doth nature store,
To show false art what beauty was of yore.

¹ 'Before the golden tresses of the dead, The right of sepulchres, were shorn away, To live a second life on second head.'

In our author's time, the false hair, usually worn perhaps in compliment to the queen, was of a sandy colour. Hence the epithet, golden.—Mabius.

LXX.

Those parts of thee that the world's eye doth view,
Want nothing that the thought of hearts can mend;
All tongues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,
Uttering bare truth, even so as foes commend.
Thine outward thus with outward praise is crown'd;
But those same tongues that give thee so thine own,
In other accents do this praise confound,
By seeing farther than the eye hath shown.
They look into the beauty of thy mind,
And that, in guess, they measure by thy deeds;
Then (churls) their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,

To thy fair flower add the rank smell of weeds:
But why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
The solve is this,—that thou dost common grow.

LXXI.

That thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So thou be good, slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being wou'd of time;
For canker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
And thou present'st a pure unstained prime.
Thou hast pass'd by the ambush of young days,
Either not assail'd, or victor being charg'd;
Yet this thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
To tie up envy evermore enlarg'd:
If some suspect of ill mask'd not thy show,
Then thou alone kingdoms of hearts should'st owe.

LXXII.

No longer mourn for me when I am dead,
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell:
Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it: for I love you so,
That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O if (I say) you look upon this verse,
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse;
But let your love even with my life decay:
Lest the wise world should look into your mean,
And mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXIII.

O, lest the world should task you to recite
What merit liv'd in me, that you should love
After my death,—dear love, forget me quite,
For you in me can nothing worthy prove;
Unless you would devise some virtuous lie,
To do more for me than mine own desert,
And hang more praise upon deceased I,
Than niggard truth would willingly impart:
O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
That you for love speak well of me untrue,
My name be buried where my body is,
And live as mine to shame nor me nor you.
For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIV.

That time of year thou may'st in me behold,
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang
Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west;
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire,
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie;
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.
This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more
strong,
To love that wall, which thou must leave ere long:

LXXV.

But be contented: when that fell arrest
Without all bail shall carry me away,
My life hath in this line some interest,
Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
The very part was consecrate to thee.
The earth can have but earth, which is his due:
My spirit is thine, the better part of me:
So thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
The prey of worms, my body being dead;
The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
Too base of thee to be remembered.
The worth of that, is that which it contains,
And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXVI.

So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground,
And for the peace of you I hold such strife
As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found;
Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
Doubting the flching age will steal his treasure:
Now counting best to be with you alone,
Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure:
Some time all full with feasting on your sight,
And by and by clean starved for a look
Possessing or pursuing no delight,
Sate what is had or must from you be took,
Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVII.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride?
So far from variation or quick change?
Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
Why write I still all one, ever the same,
And keep invention in a noted weed,
That every word doth almost tell my name;
Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
And you and love are still my argument;
So all my best is dressing old words new,
Spending again what is already spent
For as the sun is daily new and old,
So is my love still telling what is told.

LXXVIII.

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
And of this book this learning may'st thou taste.
The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show,
Of mouthed graves will give thee memory;
Thou by thy dial's shady stealth may'st know
Time's thievish progress to eternity.
Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
Those children nurs'd, deliver'd from thy brain,
To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
These offices, so oft as thou wilt look,
Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXIX.

So oft have I invoc'd thee for my muse,
And found such fair assistance in my verse,
As every alien pen hath got my use,
And under thee their poesy disperse.
Thine eyes, that taught the dumb, on high to sing,
And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
And given grace a double majesty.
Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
Whose influence is thine, and born of thee:
In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
And arts with thy sweet graces graced be;
But thou art all my art, and dost advance
As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXX.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
My verse alone had all thy gentle grace ;
But now my gracious numbers are decay'd,
And my sick muse doth give another place.
I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
Deserves the travail of a worthier pen ;
Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.
He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
From thy behaviour ; beauty doth he give,
And found it in thy cheek ; he can afford
No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXXI.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
To make me tongue-ty'd, speaking of your fame ?
But since your worth, (wide, as the ocean is,)
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride ;
Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building, and of goodly pride :
Then if he thrive, and I be cast away,
The worst was this ;—my love was my decay.

LXXXII.

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten ;
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
Though I, once gone, to all the world must die :
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read ;
And tongues to be, your being shall rehearse,
When all the breathers of this world are dead ;
You still shall live, (such virtue hath my pen,) (men.)
Where breath most breathes—even in the mouths of LXXXIII.

I grant thou wert not married to my muse,
And therefore may'st without attainit o'er-look
The dedicated words which writers use
Of their fair subject blessing every book.
Thou art as fair in knowledge as in hue,
Finding thy worth a limit past my praise ;
And therefore art enforc'd to seek anew
Some fresher stamp of the time-bettering days.
And do so, love ; yet when they have devis'd
What strained touches rhetoric can lend,
Thou truly fair wert truly sympathiz'd
In true plain words, by thy true telling friend ;
And their gross painting might be better us'd
Where cheeks need blood ; in thee it is abus'd.

LXXXIV.

I never saw that you did painting need,
And therefore to your fair no painting set ;
I found, or thought I found you did exceed
The barren tender of a poet's debt :
And therefore have I slept in your report,
That you yourself, being extant, well might show
How far a modern quill doth come too short,
Speaking of worth, what worth in you doth grow.
This silence for my sin you did impute,
Which shall be most my glory, being dumb ;
For I impair not beauty, being mute,
When others would give life, and bring a tomb.
There lives more life in one of your fair eyes,
Than both your poets can in praise devise.

LXXXV.

Who is it that says most ? which can say more,
Than this rich praise—that you alone are you ?
In whose confine immured is the store,
Which should example where your equal grow.
Lean penury within that pen doth dwell,
That to his subject lends not some small glory ;
But he that writes of you, if he can tell
That you are you, so dignifies his story,
Let him but copy what in you is writ,
Not making worse what nature made so clear,
And such a counterpart shall fame his wit,
Making his style admired every where.
You to your beauteous blessings add a curse,
Being fond on praise, which makes your praises worse.

LXXXVI.

My tongue-ty'd muse in manners holds her still,
While comments of your praise, richly compil'd,
Reserve their character with golden quill,
And precious phrase by all the muses fil'd.
I think good thoughts whilst others write good words,
And, like unletter'd clerk, still cry Amen
To every hymn that able spirit affords,
In polish'd form of well-refined pen.
Hearing you prais'd, I say, 'tis so, 'tis true,
And to the most of praise add something more ;
But that is in my thought, whose love to you,
Though words come hindmost, holds his rank before.
Then others for the breath of words respect,
Me for my dumb thoughts, speaking in effect.

LXXXVII.

Was it the proud full sail of his great verse,
Bound for the prize of all-too-precious you,
That did my ripe thoughts in my brain inhere,
Making their tomb the womb wherein they grew ?
Was it his spirit, by spirits taught to write
Above a mortal pitch, that struck me dead ?
No, neither he, nor his compeers by night
Giving him aid, my verse astonished.
He, nor that affable familiar ghost,
Which nightly gulls him with intelligence ;
As victors, of my silence cannot boast ;
I was not sick of any fear from thence ;
But when your countenance fill'd up his line,
Then lack'd I matter ; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVIII.

Farewell ! thou art too dear for my possessing,
And like enough thou know'st thy estimate ;
The charter of thy worth gives thee releasing ;
My bonds in thee are all determinate.
For how do I hold thee but by thy granting ?
And for that riches where is my deserving ?
The cause of this fair gift in me is wanting,
And so my patent back again is swerving.
Thyself thou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
Or me, to whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking ;
So thy great gift, upon misprision growing,
Comes home again, on better judgment making.
Thou have I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
In sleep a king, but waking, no such matter.

LXXXIX.

When thou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
And place my merit in the eye of Scorn,
Upon thy side against myself I'll fight,
And prove thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn.
With mine own weakness being best acquainted,
Upon thy part I can set down a story
Of faults conceal'd, wherein I am attained ;
That thou, in losing me, shalt win much glory ;
And I by this will be a gainer too ;
For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do,
Doing thee vantage, double-vantage me.
Such is my love, to thee I so belong,
That for thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence :
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt,
Against thy reasons making no defence.
Thou canst not, love, disgrace me half so ill,
To set a form upon desired change,
As I'll myself disgrace : knowing thy will,
I will acquaintance strangle, and look strange ;
Be absent from thy walks ; and in my tongue
Thy sweet-beloved name no more shall dwell ;
Lest I (too much profane) should do it wrong,
And haply of our old acquaintance tell.
For thee, against myself I'll vow debate,
For I must ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

Then hate me when thou wilt ; if ever, now :
Now while the world is bent my deeds to cross,
Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in, for an after-loss :
Ah ! do not, when my heart hath escap'd this sorrow,
Come in the rearward of a conquer'd wo ;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purpos'd overthrow.
If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their spite,
But in the onset come ; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might ;
And other strains of wo, which now seem wo,
Compar'd with loss of thee, will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
Some in their wealth, some in their body's force ;
Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill ;
Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse ;
And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
Wherein it finds a joy above the rest ;
But these particulars are not my measure,
All these I better in one general best.
Thy love is better than high birth to me,
Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
Of more delight than hawks or horses be ;
And having thee, of all men's pride I boast.
Wretched in this alone, that thou may'st take
All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
For term of life thou art assured mine ;
And life no longer than thy love will stay,
For it depends upon that love of thine.
Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
When in the least of them my life hath end.
I see a better state to me belongs
Than that which on thy humour doth depend :
Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
O, what a happy title do I find,
Happy to have thy love, happy to die !
But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot ?
Thou may'st be false, and yet I know it not :

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
Like a deceived husband ; so love's face
May still seem love to me, though alter'd new ;
Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place :
For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
In many's looks the false heart's history
Is writ, in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange ;
But heaven in thy creation did decree,
That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell ;
Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show !

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
That do not do the thing they most do show,
Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow ;
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces,
And husband nature's riches from expense ;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.
The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die ;
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity :
For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds ;
Lilies that fester, smell far worse than weeds

XCV.

How sweet and lovely dost thou make the shame,
Which, like a canker in the fragrant rose,
Doth spot the beauty of thy budding name ?
O, in what sweets dost thou thy sins enclose !
That tongue that tells the story of thy days,
Making lascivious comments on thy sport,
Cannot dispraise but in a kind of praise ;
Naming thy name blesses an ill report.
O, what a mansion have those vices got,
Which for thy habitation chose out thee ?
Where beauty's veil doth cover every blot,
And all things turn to fair that eyes can see !
Take heed, dear heart, of this large privilege ;
The hardest knife ill-us'd doth lose his edge.

XCVI.

Some say, thy fault is youth, some wantonness ;
Some say, thy grace is youth, and gentle sport ;
Both grace and faults are lov'd of more and less :
Thou mak'st faults graces that to thee resort.
As on the finger of a throned queen
The basest jewel will be well esteem'd ;
So are those errors that in thee are seen,
To truths translated, and for true things deem'd.
How many lambs might the stern wolf betray,
If like a lamb he could his looks translate !
How many gazers might'st thou lead away,
If thou would'st use the strength of all thy state !
But do not so ; I love thee in such sort,
As thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

XCVII.

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year !
What freezings have I felt, what dark days seen ?
What old December's bareness every where !
And yet this time remov'd ! was summer's time ;
The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,
Like widow'd wombs after their lords' decease :
Yet this abundant issue seem'd to me
But hope of orphans, and unfather'd fruit ;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute ;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer,
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

XCVIII.

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied April, dress'd in all his trim,
Hath put a spirit of youth in every thing ;
That heavy Saturn laugh'd and leap'd with him.
Yet nor the lays of birds, nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in odour and in hue,
Could make me any summer's story tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew.
Nor did I wonder at the lilies white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose ;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight,
Drawn after you ; you pattern of all those.
Yet seem'd it winter still, and, you away,
As with your shadow I with these did play :

XCII.

The forward violet thus did I chide:— [smells,
Sweet thief, whence dost thou steal thy sweet that
If not from my love's breath? The purple pride
Which on thy soft cheek for complexion dwells,
In my love's veins thou hast too grossly dy'd.
The lily I condemned for thy band,
And buds of marjoram had stolen thy hair:
The roses fearfully on thorns did stand,
One blushing shame, another white despair;
A third, nor red nor white, had stolen of both,
And to his robbery had annex'd thy breath;
But, for his theft, in pride of all his growth
A vengeful canker eat him up to death.
More flowers I noted, yet I none could see,
But sweet or colour it had stolen from thee.

C.

Where art thou, Muse, that thou forget'st so long
To speak of that which gives thee all thy might?
Spend'st thou thy fury on some worthless song,
Darkening thy power, to lend base subjects light?
Return, forgetful Muse, and straight redeem
In gentle numbers time so idly spent;
Sing to the ear that doth thy lays esteem,
And gives thy pen both skill and argument.
Rise, restive Muse, my love's sweet face survey,
If Time have any wrinkle graven there;
If any, be a satire to decay,
And make Time's spoils despised every where.
Give my love fame faster than Time wastes life;
So thou prevent'st his scythe, and crooked knife.

CI.

O truant Muse, what shall be thy amends,
For thy neglect of truth in beauty dy'd?
Both truth and beauty on my love depends;
So dost thou, too, and therein dignify'd.
Make answer, Muse: wilt thou not hastily say,
Truth needs no colour, with his colour fled;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth no lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd?
Because he needs no praise, wilt thou be dumb?
Excuse not silence so; for it lies in thee
To make him much outlive a gilded tomb,
And to be prais'd of ages yet to be.
Then do thy office, Muse; I teach thee how
To make him seem long hence as he shows now.

CII.

My love is strengthen'd, though mine weak in seem-
I love not less, though less the show appear: [ing;
That love is merchantis'd, whose rich esteeming
The owner's tongue doth publish every where.
Our love was new, and then but in the spring,
When I was wont to greet it with my lays;
As Philomel in summer's front doth sing,
And steps his pipe in growth of ripper days;
Not that the summer is less pleasant now
Than when her mournful hymns did hush the night,
But that wild music burdens every bough,
And sweets grown common lose their dear delight.
Therefore, like her, I sometime hold my tongue,
Because I would not dull you with my song.

CIII.

Alack! what poverty my muse brings forth,
That having such a scope to show her pride,
The argument, all here, is of more worth,
Than when it hath my added praise beside.
O, blame me not, if I no more can write!
Look in your glass, and there appears a face,
That over-goes my blunt invention quite,
Dulling my lines, and doing me disgrace.
Were it not sinful, then, striving to mend,
To mar the subject that before was well?
For to no other pass my verses tend,
Than of your graces and your gifts to tell;
And more, much more, than in my verse can sit,
Your own glass shows you, when you look in it.

CIV.

To me, fair friend, you never can be old,
For as you were, when first your eye I ey'd,
Such seems your beauty still. Three winters cold
Have from the forests shook three summers' pride;
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turn'd,
In process of the seasons have I seen;
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
Ah! yet doth beauty, like a dial hand,
Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd;
So your sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
Hath motion, and mine eye may be deceiv'd:
For fear of which, hear this, thou age unbred,—
Ere you were born, was beauty's summer dead.

CV.

Let not my love be call'd idolatry,
Nor my beloved as an idol show,
Since all alike my songs and praises be,
To one, of one, still such, and ever so.
Kind is my love to-day, to-morrow kind,
Still constant in a wondrous excellence;
Therefore my verse to constancy confin'd,
One thing expressing, leaves out difference.
Fair, kind, and true, is all my argument,
Fair, kind, and true, varying to other words,
And in this change is my invention spent,
Three themes in one, which wondrous scope afford.
Fair, kind, and true, have often liv'd alone,
Which three, till now, never kept seat in one.

CVI.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme,
In praise of ladies dead, and lovely knights,
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of eye, of brow, of brow,
I see the antique pen would have express'd
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And for they look'd but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come,
Can yet the lease of my true love control,
Suppos'd as forfeit to a censur'd doom.
The mortal moon hath her eclipse eadur'd,
And the sad augurs mock their own presage;
Uncertainties now crown themselves assur'd,
And peace proclaims olives of endless age.
Now with the drops of this most balmy time
My love looks fresh, and death to me subscribes
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes;
And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

What's in the brain that ink may character,
Which hath not figur'd to thee my true spirit?
What's new to speak, what now to register,
That may express my love, or thy dear merit?
Nothing, sweet boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
I must each day say o'er the very same;
Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
So that eternal love in love's free case
Weights not the dust and injury of age,
Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
But makes antiquity for aye his page;
Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CXL.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify.
As easy might I from myself depart,
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie :
That is my home of love : if I have rang'd,
Like him that travels, I return again ;
Just to the time, not with the time chang'd,—
So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good ;
For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose ; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 'tis true, I have gone here and there,
And made myself a motley to the view ;
God's mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most
Made old offences of affections new : [dear,
Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
Alike and strangely ; but, by all above,
These blenches gave my heart another youth,
And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
Now all is done, save what shall have no end :
Mine appetite I never more will grind
On newer proof, to try an older friend,
A god in love, to whom I am confin'd.
Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
Even to thy pure and most, most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake, do you with fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means, which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand ;
And almost thence my nature is subdu'd
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand :
Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd ;
Whilst like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eyewill, 'gainst my strong infection ;
No bitterness that I will bitter think,
Nor double penance to correct correction.
Pity me, then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow ;
For what care I who calls me well or ill,
So you o'er-green my bad, my good allow ?
You are my all-the-world, and I must strive
To know my shames and praises from your tongue ;
None else to me, nor I to none alive,
That my steel'd sense or changes, right or wrong.
In so profound abyss I throw all care
Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
To critic and to flatterer stopped are.
Mark how with my neglect I do dispense :—
You are so strongly in my purpose bred,
That all the world besides methinks they are dead.

CXIII.

Since I left you, mine eye is in my mind ;
And that which governs me to go about,
Doth part his function, and is partly blind,
Seems seeing, but effectually is out :
For it no form delivers to the heart
Of bird, of flower, or shape, which it doth latch ;
Of his quick objects hath the mind no part,
Nor his own vision holds what it doth catch ;
For if it see the rude'st or gentlest sight,
The most sweet favour, or deformed'st creature,
The mountain or the sea, the day or night,
The crow or dove, it shapes them to your feature :
Incapable of more, replete with you,
My most true m'n'l thus maketh mine untrue.

CXIV.

Or whether doth my mind, being crown'd with you,
Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattery,
Or whether shall I say, mine eye saith true,
And that your love taught it this alchymy,
To make, of monsters and things indigest,
Such cherubims as your sweet self resemble ;
Creating every bad a perfect best,
As fast as objects to his beams assemble ?
O, 'tis the first ; 'tis flattery in my seeing,
And my great mind most kingly drinks it up :
Mine eye well knows what with his gust is 'greeing,
And to his palate doth prepare the cup :
If it be poison'd, 'tis the lesser sin
That mine eye loves it, and doth first begin.

CXV.

These lines that I before have writ do lie,
E'en those that said I could not love you dearer ;
Yet then my judgment knew no reason why
My most full flame should afterwards burn clearer.
But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows, and change decrees of kings ;
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharp'st intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things ;
Alas ! why, fearing of time's tyranny,
Might I not then say, now I love you best,
When I was certain o'er uncertainty,
Crowning the present, doubting of the rest ;
Love is a babe : then might I not say so,
To give full growth to that which still doth grow ?

CXVI.

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
Admit impediments. Love is not love
Which alters when it alteration finds,
Or bends with the remover to remove :
O no ! it is an ever-fixed mark,
That looks on tempests, and is never shaken ;
It is the star to every wandering bark, [taken.
Whose worth's unknown, although his height be Love's not Time's fool, though rosy lips and cheeks
Within his bending sickle's compass come ;
Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,
But bears it out e'en to the edge of doom.
If this be error, and upon me prov'd,
I never writ, nor no man ever lov'd.

CXVII.

Accuse me thus ; that I have scantied all
Wherein I should your great deserts repay ;
Forgot upon your dearest love to call,
Whereto all bonds do tie me day by day ;
That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to time your own dear purchas'd right ;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds
Which should transport me farthest from your sight.
Book both my wilfulness and errors down,
And on just proof, surmise accumulate,
Bring me within the level of your frown,
But shoot not at me in your waken'd hate :
Since my appeal says, I did strive to prove
The constancy and virtue of your love.

CXVIII.

Like as, to make our appetites more keen,
With eager compounds we our palate urge ;
As, to prevent our maladies unseen,
We sicken to shun sickness, when we purge ;
E'en so, being full of your no'er cloying sweetness,
To bitter sauces did I frame my feeding,
And, sick of welfare, found a kind of meanness
To be diseas'd, ere that there was true needings.
Thus policy in love, to anticipate
The ills that were not, grew to faults assured,
And brought to medicine a healthful state,
Which, rank of goodness, would by ill be cured,
But thence I learn, and find the lesson true,
Drugs poison him that so fell sick of you.

CXXII.

What potions have I drunk of Syren tears,
 Distill'd from limbeck's foul as hell within,
 Applying fears to hopes, and hopes to fears,
 Still losing when I saw myself to win!
 What wretched errors hath my heart committed,
 Whilst it hath thought itself so blessed never!
 How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,
 In the distraction of this maddening fever!
 O benefit of ill! now I find true
 That better is by evil still made better;
 And ruin'd love, when it is built anew,
 Grows fairer than at first, more strong, far greater.
 So I return rebuk'd to my content,
 And gain by ill thrice more than I have spent.

CXXIII.

That you were once unkind, befriends me now,
 And for that sorrow, which I then did feel,
 Needs must I under my transgression bow,
 Unless my nerves were brass or hammer'd steel.
 For if you were by my unkindness shaken,
 As I by yours, you've pass'd a hell of time;
 And I, a tyrant, have no leisure taken
 To weigh how once I suffer'd in your crime.
 O that our night of woe might have remember'd
 My deepest sense, how hard true sorrow hits,
 And soon to you, as you to me, then tender'd
 The humble salve which wounded bosoms fit!
 But that your trespass now becomes a fee;
 Mine ransoms yours, and yours must ransom me.

CXXIV.

'Tis better to be vile, than vile esteem'd,
 When not to be receives reproach of being,
 And the just pleasure lost, which is so deem'd
 Not by our feeling, but by others' seeing.
 For why should others' false adulterate eyes
 Give salutation to my sportive blood?
 Or on my frailties why are frailer spies,
 Which in their wills count bad what I think good?
 No,—I am that I am; and they that level
 At my abuses, reckon up their own:
 I may be straight, though they themselves be bevel;
 By their rank thoughts my deeds must not be shown;
 Unless this general evil they maintain,
 All men are bad, and in their badness reign.

CXXV.

Thy gift, thy tables, are within my brain
 Full character'd with lasting memory,
 Which shall above that idle rank remain,
 Beyond all date, even to eternity:
 Or at the least so long as brain and heart
 Have faculty by nature to subsist:
 Till each to razed oblivion yield his part
 Of thee, thy record never can be miss'd.
 That poor retention could not so much hold,
 Nor need I tallies, thy dear love to score;
 Therefore to give them from me was I bold,
 To trust those tables that receive thee more:
 To keep an adjunct to remember thee,
 Were to import forgetfulness in me.

CXXVI.

No! Time, thou shalt not boast that I do change:
 Thy pyramids built up with newer might
 To me are nothing novel, nothing strange;
 They are but dressings of a former sight.
 Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
 What thou dost foist upon us that is old;
 And rather make them born to our desire,
 Than think that we before have heard them told.
 Thy registers and thee I both defy,
 Not wondering at the present nor the past;
 For thy records and what we see do lie,
 Made more or less by thy continual haste:
 This I do vow, and this shall ever be,
 I will be true, despite thy scythe and thee.

CXXVII.

If my dear love were but the child of state,
 It might for fortune's bastard be unfather'd,
 As subject to Time's love, or to Time's hate, Weeds among weeds, or flowers with flowers
 gather'd.

No, it was builded far from accident;
 It suffers not in smiling pomp, nor falls
 Under the blow of thrall'd discontent,
 Whereto the inviting time our fashion calls:
 It fears not policy, that heretic,
 Which works on leases of short-number'd hours,
 But all alone stands hugely politic,
 That it nor grows with heat, nor drowns with showers.

To this I witness call the fools of time,
 Which die for goodness, who have lived for crime.

CXXVIII.

Were it aught to me I bore the canopy,
 With my extern the outward honouring,
 Or laid great bases for eternity,
 Which prove more short than waste or ruining?
 Have I not seen dwellers on form and favour
 Lose all, and more, by paying too much rent;
 For compound sweet forgoing simple savour,
 Pitiful thrivers, in their gazing spent?
 No;—let me be obsequious in thy heart,
 And take thou my oblation, poor but free,
 Which is not mix'd with seconds,¹ knows no art,
 But mutual render, only me for thee.
 Hence, thou suborn'd informer! a true soul
 When most impeach'd, stands least in thy control.

CXXIX.

O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy power
 Dost hold Time's fickle glass, his sickle, hour;
 Who hast by waning grown, and therein show'st
 Thy lovers withering, as thy sweet self grow'st;
 If nature, sovereign mistress over wrack,
 As thou goest onwards, still will pluck thee back,
 She keeps thee to this purpose, that her skill
 May time disgrace, and wretched minutes kill.
 Yet fear her, O, thou minion of her pleasure;
 She may detain, but not still keep her treasure:
 Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
 And her quietus is to render thee.

CXXX.

In the old age black was not counted fair,
 Or if it were, it bore not beauty's name;
 But now is black beauty's successive heir,
 And beauty slander'd with a bastard shame:
 For since each hand hath put on nature's power,
 Fairing the foul with art's false-borrow'd face,
 Sweet beauty hath no name, no holy hour,
 But is profan'd, if not lives in disgrace.
 Therefore my mistress' eyes are raven black,
 Her eyes so suited; and they mourners seem
 At such who, not born fair, no beauty lack,
 Slandering creation with a false esteem:
 Yet so they mourn, becoming of their woe,
 That every tongue says, beauty should look so.

CXXXI.

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
 Upon that blessed wood whose motion sounds
 With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
 The wry concord that mine ear confounds,
 Do I envy those jacks, that nimble leap
 To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
 Whilst my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
 At the wood's boldness by thee blushing stand!
 To be so tickled, they would change their state
 And situation with those dancing chips,
 O'er whom thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
 Making dead wood more bless'd than living lips.
 Since saucy jacks so happy are in this,
 Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.

¹ 'Which is not mix'd with seconds.'—Seconds is a provincial term for the second kind of flower, which is collected after the smaller bran is sifted.—Stevens.

CXXX.

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
Is lust in action; and till action, lust
Is perjur'd, murderous, bloody, full of blame,
Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust;
Enjoy'd no sooner, but despised straight;
Past reason hunted; and, no sooner had,
Past reason hated, as a swallow'd bait,
On purpose laid to make the taker mad:
Mad in pursuit, and in possession so;
Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
A bliss in proof,—and prov'd a very woe;
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream:
All this the world well knows; yet none knows well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

CXXXI.

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun,
If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her head.
I have seen roses damask'd, red and white,
But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
And in some perfumes is there more delight
Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.
I love to hear her speak,—yet well I know
That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
I grant I never saw a goddess go,—
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground:
And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare
As any she, belov'd with false compare.

CXXXII.

Thou art as tyrannous, so as thou art,
As those whose beauties proudly make them cruel;
For well thou know'st to my dear dotting heart
Thou art the fairest and most precious jewel.
Yet, in good faith, some say, that thee behold,
Thy face hath not the power to make love groan:
To say they err, I dare not be so bold,
Although I swear it to myself alone.
And, to be sure that is not false I swear,
A thousand groans, but thinking on thy face,
One on another's neck, do witness bear,
Thy black is fairest in my judgment's place.
In nothing art thou black, save in thy deeds,
And thence this slander, as I think, proceeds.

CXXXIII.

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me,
Knowing thy heart, torment me with disdain;
Have put on black, and loving mourners be,
Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain.
And truly not the morning sun of heaven
Better becomes the gray cheeks of the east,
Nor that full star that ushers in the even,
Doth half that glory to the sober west,
As those two mourning eyes become thy face:
O, let it then as well besem thy heart
To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace,
And suit thy pity like in every part.
Then will I swear, beauty herself is black,
And all they foul that thy complexion lack.

CXXXIII.

Beshrew that heart that makes my heart to groan
For that deep wound it gives my friend and me!
Is't not enough to torture me alone,
But slave to slavery my sweet'st friend must be?
Me from myself thy cruel eye hath taken,
And my next self thou harder hast engros'd;
Of him, myself, and thee, I am forsaken;
A torrent thrice threefold thus to be cross'd.
Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward,
But then my friend's heart let my poor heart bail;
Whoe'er keeps me, let my heart be his guard;
Thou canst not then use rigour in my gail;
And yet thou wilt; for I, being pent in thee,
Perforce am thine, and all that is in me.

CXXXIV.

So now I have confess'd that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgag'd to thy will;
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still:
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous, and he is kind;
He learn'd but, surety-like, to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer, that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend, came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him have I lost; thou hast both him and me;
He pays the whole, and yet am I not free.

CXXXV.

Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy will,
And wilt to boot, and wilt in overplus:
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou, whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in will, add to thy will
One will of mine, to make thy large will more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill:
Think all but one, and me in that one Will.

CXXXVI.

If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will,
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fulfil.
Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love,
Ay, fill it full with wills, and my will one,
In things of great receipt with ease we prove,
Among a number one is reckon'd none.
Then in the number let me pass untold,
Though in thy store's account I must be.
For nothing hold me, so it please thee hold
That nothing me, a something sweet to thee;
Make but my name thy love, and love that still,
And then thou lov'st me,—for my name is Will.

CXXXVII.

Thou blind fool, Love, what dost thou to mine eyes,
That they behold, and see not what they see?
They know what beauty is, see where it lies,
Yet what the best is, take the worst to be.
If eyes, corrupt by over-partial looks,
Be anchor'd in the bay where all men ride,
Why of eyes' falsehood hast thou forged hooks,
Whereto the judgment of my heart is tied?
Why should my heart think that a several plot,
Which my heart knows the wide world's common
place?
Or mine eyes seeing this, say this is not?
To put fair truth upon so foul a face?
In things right true my heart and eyes have err'd
And to this false plague are they now transferr'd.

CXXXVIII.

When my love swears that she is made of truth,
I do believe her, though I know she lies;
That she might think me some untutor'd youth,
Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.
Thus vainly thinking that she thinks me young,
Although she knows my days are past the best,
Simply I credit her false-speaking tongue;
On both sides thus is simple truth suppress'd,
But wherefore says she not, she is unjust?
And wherefore say not I, that I am old?
O love's best habit is in seeming trust,
And age in love loves not to have years told.
Therefore I lie with her, and she with me,
And in our faults by lies we flatter'd be.

CXXXIX.

O call not me to justify the wrong,
That thy unkindness lays upon my heart;
Wound me not with thine eye, but with thy tongue;
Use power with power, and slay me not by art.
Tell me thou lov'st elsewhere; but in my sight,
Dear heart, forbear to glance thine eye aside.
What need'st thou wound with cunning, when thy might

Is more than my o'erpress'd defence can 'hide?
Let me excuse thee: ah! my love well knows
Her pretty looks have been mine enemies;
And therefore from my face she turns my foes,
That they elsewhere might dart their injuries:
Yet do not so; but since I am near slain,
Kill me outright with looks, and rid my pain.

CXL.

Be wise as thou art cruel; do not press
My tongue-tied patience with too much disdain;
Lest sorrow lend me words, and words express
The manner of my pity-wanting pain.
If I might teach thee wit, better it were,
Though not to love, yet, love to tell me so;
(As testy sick men, when their deaths be near,
No news but health from their physicians know:)
For if I should despair, I should grow mad,
And in my madness might speak ill of thee:
Now this ill-wresting world is grown so bad,
Mad slanderers by mad ears believed be
That I may not be so, nor thou belie'd, Bear thine eyes straight, though thy proud heart go wide.

CXLII.

In faith I do not love thee with mine eyes,
For they in thee a thousand errors note;
But 'tis my heart that loves what they despise,
Who in despite of view is pleased to dote.
Nor are mine ears with thy tongue's tune delighted:
Nor tender feeling, to base touches prone,
Nor taste nor smell, desire to be invited
To any sensual feast with thee alone:
But my five wits, nor my five senses can
Dissuade one foolish heart from serving thee,
Who lives unwary'd the likeness of a man,
Thy proud heart's slave and vassal wretch to be;
Only my plague thus far I count my gain,
That she that makes me sin, awards me pain.

CXLIII.

Love is my sin, and thy dear virtue hate,
Hate of my sin, grounded on sinful loving;
O but with mine compare thou thine own state,
And thou shalt find it merits not reproving,
Or if it do, not from those lips of thine,
That have profan'd their scarlet ornaments,
And seal'd false bonds of love as oft as mine;
Robb'd others' beds' revenues of their rents;
Be it lawful I love thee, as thou lovest those Whom thine eyes woo as mine importune thee:
Root pity in thy heart, that when it grows,
Thy pity may deserve to pitied be.
If thou dost seek to have what thou dost hide,
By self-example may'st thou be denied!

CXLIV.

Lo, as a careful house-wife runs to catch
One of her feather'd creatures broke away,
Sets down her babe and makes all swift dispatch
In pursuit of the thing she would have stay,
Whilst her neglected child holds her in chase,
Cries to catch her whose busy care is bent
To follow that which flies before her face,
Not prizing her poor infant's discontent;
So runn'st thou after that which flies from thee,
Whilst I, thy babe, chase thee afar behind;
But if thou catch thy hope, turn back to me,
And play the mother's part, kiss me, be kind:
So will I pray that thou may'st have thy will,
If thou turn back and my loud crying still.

CXLV.

Two loves I have of comfort and despair
Which like two spirits do suggest me still
The better angel is a man right fair,
The worse spirit a woman, colour'd ill.
To win me soon to hell, my female evil
Tempteth my better angel from my side,
And would corrupt my saint to be a devil,
Wooing his purity with her foul pride.
And whether that my angel be turnd' fiend,
Suspect I may, yet not directly tell;
But being both from me, both to each friend
I guess one angel in another's hell.
Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt,
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

CXLVI.

Those lips that Love's own hand did make,
Breath'd forth the sound that said, I hate,
To me that languish'd for her sake:
But when she saw my woful state,
Straight in her heart did mercy come,
Chiding that tongue, that ever sweet
Was us'd in giving gentle doom;
And taught it thus a-new to greet;
I hate she alter'd with an end,
That follow'd it as gentle day,
Doth follow night, who, like a fiend,
From heaven to hell is flown away;
I hate from hate away she threw,
And sav'd my life, saying—not you.

CXLVII.

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Fool'd by those rebel powers that thee array
Why dost thou pine within, and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss,
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more:
So shalt thou feed on death, that feeds on men,
And, death once dead, there's no more dying then.

CXLVIII.

My love is as a fever, longing still
For that which longer nurseth the disease;
Feeding on that which doth preserve the ill,
The uncertain sickly appetite to please.
My reason, the physician to my love,
Angry that his prescriptions are not kept,
Hath left me, and I desperate now approve,
Desire is death, which physic did except.
Past cure I am, now reason is past care,
And frantic-mad with evermore unrest;
My thoughts and my discourse as madmen's are,
At random from the truth vainly express'd;
For I have sworn thee fair, and thought thee bright,
Who art as black as hell, as dark as night.

CXLIX.

O me! what eyes hath love put in my head,
Which have no correspondence with true sight!
Or, if they have, where is my judgment fled,
That censures falsely what they see aright?
If that be fair whereon my false eyes dote,
What means the world to say it is not so?
If it be not, then love doth well denote
Love's eye is not so true as all men's; no,
How can it? O, how can Love's eye be true
That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
No marvel, then, though I mistake my view;
The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
Least eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXIX.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
When I, against myself, with thee partake?
Do I not think on thee, when I forget
Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
Who hateth thee, that I do call my friend?
On whom frown'st thou, that I do fawn upon?
Nay, if thou lovest on me, do I not spend
Revenge upon myself with present mean?
What merit do I in myself respect,
That is so proud thy service to despise,
When all my best doth worship thy defect,
Commanded by the motion of thine eyes!
But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

CL.

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might,
With insufficiency my heart to sway?
To make me give the lie to my true sight,
And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
That in the very refuse of thy deeds
There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
That in my mind thy worst all best exceeds?
Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
O, though I love what others do abhor,
With others thou should'st not abhor my state;
If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

CLI.

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,
Least guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
For, thou betraying me, I do betray
My nobler part to my great body's treason;
My soul doth tell my body that he may
Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;
But rising at thy name, doth point out thee
As his triumphant prize. Proud of this pride,
He is contented thy poor drudge to be,
To stand in thy affairs, fall by thy side.
No want of conscience hold it that I call
Her—love, for whose dear love I rise and fall.

CLII.

In loving thee thou know'st I am forsworn,
But thou art twice forsworn, to me love swearing;
In act thy bed-vow broke, and new faith torn,
In vowing new hate after new love bearing.
But why of two oaths' breach do I accuse thee
When I break twenty? I am perjur'd most;
For all my vows are oaths but to misuse thee,
And all my honest faith in thee is lost:
For I have sworn deep oaths of thy deep kindness,
Oaths of thy love, thy truth, thy constancy;
And, to enlighten thee, gave eyes to blindness,
Or made them swear against the thing they see;
For I have sworn thee fair: more perjur'd I,
To swear, against the truth, so foul a lie!

CLIII.

Cupid laid by his brand, and fell asleep;
A maid of Dian's this advantage found,
And his love-kindling fire did quickly steep
In a cold valley-fountain of that ground;
Which borrow'd from this holy fire of love
A dateless lively heat, still to endure,
And grew a seething bath, which yet men prove,
Against strange maladies a sovereign cure.
But at my mistress' eye love's brand new fir'd,
The boy for trial needs would touch my breast;
I sick withal, the help of bath desir'd,
And thither hied, a sad distemper'd guest,
But found no cure: the bath for my help lies
Where Cupid got new fire; my mistress' eyes.

CLIV.

The little love-god lying once asleep,
Laid by his side his heart-inflaming brand,
Whilst many nymphs that vow'd chaste life to keep,
Came tripping by; but in her maiden hand
The fairest votary took up that fire
Which many legions of true hearts had warm'd;
And so the general of hot desire
Was sleeping by a virgin hand disarm'd.
This brand she quenched in a cool well by,
Which from love's fire took heat perpetual,
Growing a bath and healthful remedy
For men diseas'd; but I, my mistress' thrall,
Came there for cure, and this by that I prove,
Love's fire heats water, water cools not love.

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A plaintful story from a sisting vane,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorded,
And down I lay to list the sad-tun'd tale:
Ere long esp'd a fickle maid full pale,
Tearing of papers, breaking rings a-twain,
Storming her world with sorrow's wind and rain.
Upon her head a platted hive of straw,
Which fortified her visage from the sun,
Whereon the thought might think sometime it saw
The carcass of a beauty spent and done.
Time had not scythed all that youth begun,
Nor youth all quit; but, spite of heaven's fell rage,
Some beauty peep'd through lattice of sear'd age.
Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears,
And often reading what contents it bears;
As often shrieking undistinguish'd woe,
In clamours of all size, both high and low.

Sometimes her level'd eyes their carriage ride,
As they did battery to the spheres intend;
Sometime diverted their poor balls are ty'd
To the orb'd earth; sometimes they do extend
Their view right on; anon their gazes lend
To every place at once, and no where fix'd,
The mind and sight distractedly commix'd.
Her hair, nor loose, nor ty'd in formal plat,
Proclaim'd in her a careless hand of pride;
For some, untuck'd, descended her shear'd hat,
Hanging her pale and pined cheek beside;
Some in her threaded fillet still did bide,
And, true to bondage, would not break from thence,
Though slackly braided in loose negligence.
A thousand favours from a maud she drew
Of amber, crystal, and of bedded jet,
Which one by one she in a river threw,
Upon whose weeping margin she was set;
Like usury, applying wet to wet,
Or monarch's hands, that let not bounty fall
Where want cries some, but where excess begs all.

Of folded schedules had she many a one,
Which she perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood;
Crack'd many a ring of posied gold and bone,
Bidding them find their sepulchres in mud;
Found yet more letters sadly penn'd in blood,
With sleided silk feat and affectedly
Enswath'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.¹

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear;
Cry'd, O false blood! thou register of lies,
What unapproved witness dost thou bear!
Ink would have seem'd more black and damned here!
This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh, (Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours,) observed as they flew;
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew;
And, privileg'd by age, desires to know
In brief, the grounds and motives of her wo.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,
And comely-distant sits he by her side;
When he again desires her, being sat,
Her grievance with his hearing to divide:
If that from him there may be sought apply'd,
Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
'Tis promis'd in the charity of age.

Father, she says, though in me you behold
The injury of many a blasting hour,
Let it not tell your judgment I am old;
Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power:
I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
Fresh to myself, if I had self-apply'd
Love to myself, and to no love beside.

But wo is me! too early I attended
A youthful suit (it was to gain my grace)
Of one by nature's outwards so commended,
That maidens' eyes stuck over all his face!
Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place;
And when in his fair parts she did abide,
She was new lodg'd, and newly deified.

His browny locks did hang in crooked curls;
And every light occasion of the wind
Upon his lips their silken parcels huris.
What's sweet to do, to do will aptly find;
Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind;
For on his visage was in little drawn,
What largeness thinks in paradise was seen.

Small show of man was yet upon his chin;
His phoenix down began but to appear,
Like unshorn velvet on that termless skin,
Whose bare out-bragg'd the web it seem'd to wear;
Yet show'd his visage by that cost most dear;
And nice affection's wavering stood in doubt
If best 'twere as it was, or best without.

His qualities were beauteous as his form,
For maiden-tongu'd he was, and thereof free;
Yet, if men mov'd him, was he such a storm
As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,
When winds breathe sweet, unruly though they be.
His rudeness so with his authoriz'd youth
Did livery falseness in a pride of truth.

Well could he ride, and often men would say,
That horse his mettle from his rider takes:
Proud of subjection, noble by the sway,
What rounds, what bounds, what course, what stop he makes!

And controversy hence a question takes,
Whether the horse by him became his deed,
Or he his manage by the well-doing steed.

1 'With sleided silk, feat and affectedly
Enswath'd and sealed to curious secrecy.'

Anciently, the ends of a piece of narrow ribbon were placed under the seals of letters, to connect them more closely.—Steevens.

But quickly on this side the verdict went,
His real habitude gave life and grace
To appertainings and to ornament,
Accomplish'd in himself, not in his case:
All aids themselves made fairer by their place,
Came for additions, yet their purpos'd trim
Piec'd not his grace, but were all grac'd by him.

So on the tip of his subduing tongue
All kind of arguments and question deep,
All replication prompt, and reason strong,
For his advantage still did wake and sleep:
To make the weeper laugh, the laughter weep,
He had the dialect and different skill,
Catching all passions in his craft of will,

That he did in the general bosom reign
Of young, of old; and sexes both enchanted,
To dwell with him in thoughts, or to remain
In personal duty, following where he haunted:
Consents bewitch'd, ere he desire, have granted,
And dialogu'd from him what he would say,
Ask'd their own wills, and made their wills obey.

Many there were that did his picture get,
To serve their eyes, and in it put their mind;
Like fools that in the imagination set
The goodly objects which abroad they find
Of lands and mansions, their's in thought assign'd;
And labouring in more pleasures to bestow them,
Than the true gouty landlord which doth owe Land.

So many have, that never touch'd his hand,
Sweetly suppos'd them mistress of his heart.
My woful self, that did in freedom stand,
And was my own fee-simple, (not in part,)
What with his art in youth, and youth in art,
Threw my affections in his charmed power,
Reserv'd the stalk, and gave him all my flower.

Yet did I not, as some my equals did,
Demand of him, nor being desired, yielded;
Finding myself in honour so forbid,
With safest distance I mine honour shielded:
Experience for me many bulwarks builded
Of proofs new-bleeding, which remain'd the seal
Of this false jewel, and his amorous spoil.

But ah! who ever shunn'd by precedent
The destin'd ill she must herself assay?
Or forc'd examples, 'gainst her own content,
To put the by-pass'd perils in her way?
Counsel may stop a while what will not stay;
For when we rage, advice is often seen
By blunting us to make our wits more keen.

Nor gives it satisfaction to our blood,
That we must curb it upon others' proof;
To be forbid the sweets that seem so good,
For fear of harms that preach in our behoof.
O appetite, from judgment stand aloof!
The one a palate bath that needs will taste,
Though reason weep, and cry—it is thy last.

For further I could say, this man's untrue,
And knew the patterns of his foul beguiling;
Heard where his plants in others' orchards grew
Saw how deceits were gilded in his smiling;
Knew vows were ever brokers to defiling;
Thought, characters, and words, merely but art,
And bastards of his foul adulterate heart.

And long upon these terms I held my city.
Till thus he 'gan besiege me: "Gentle maid,
Have of my suffering youth some feeling pity,
And be not of my holy vows afraid:
That's to you sworn, to none was ever said;
For feasts of love I have been call'd unto,
Till now did ne'er invite, nor never vow.

All my offences that abroad you see,
Are errors of the blood, none of the mind;
Love made them not: with acture they may be,
Where neither party is nor true nor kind:
They sought their shame that so their shame did find,
And so much less of shame it me remains,
By how much less of me their reproach contains.

Among the many that mine eyes have seen,
Not one whose flame my heart so much as warm'd,
Or my affection put to the smallest teen,
Or any of my leasures ever charm'd:
Harm have I done to them, but ne'er was harm'd;
Kept hearts in liveries, but mine own was free,
And reign'd commanding in his monarchy.

Look here, what tributes wounded fancies sent me,
Of paled pearls, and rubies red as blood;
Figuring that their passions likewise lent me
Of grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood;
Effects of terror and dear modesty,
Encamp'd in hearts, but fighting outwardly.

And lo! behold, these talents of their hair,
With twisted metal amorously impleach'd,
I have receiv'd from many a several fair,
(Their kind acceptance weepingly beseech'd.)
With the annexions of fair gems enrich'd,
And deep-brain'd sonnets, that did amplify
Each stone's dear nature, worth, and quality.

The diamond; why 'twas beautiful and hard,
Whereto his invis'd properties did tend;
The deep green emerald, in whose fresh regard
Weak sights their sickly radiance do amend;
The heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend
With objects manifold: each several stone,
With wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.

Lo! all these trophies of affections hot,
Of pensiv'd and subdued desires the tender,
Nature hath charg'd me that I heard them not,
But yield them up where I myself must render,
That is, to you, my origin and ender:
For these, of force, must your oblations be,
Since I their altar, you empatron me.

O, then, advance of yours that phraseless hand,
Whose white weighs down the airy scale of praise;
Take all these similes to your own command,
Hallow'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise;
What me, your minister, for you obey,
Works under you; and to your audit comes
Their distract parcels in combined sums.

Lo! this device was sent me from a nun,
Or sister sanctified, of holiest note;
Which late her noble suit in court did shun,
Whose rarest havings made the blossoms dote;
For she was sought by spirits of richest coat,
But kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
To spend her living in eternal love.

But O, my sweet, what labour isn't to leave
The thing we have not, mastering what not strives?

Paling the place which did no form receive;—
Playing patient sports in unconstrained gyres.
She that her fame so to herself contrives,
The scars of battle scapeth by the flight,
And makes her absence valiant, not her might.

O pardon me, in that my boast is true;
The accident which brought me to her eye,
Upon the moment did her force subdue,
And now she would the caged cloister fly;
Religious love put out religion's eye:
Not to be tempted, would she be immur'd,
And now, to tempt all, liberty procur'd.

How mighty then you are, O, hear me tell!
The broken bosoms that to me belong,
Have emptied all their fountains in my well,
And mine I pour your ocean all among:
I strong o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
Must for your victory us all congeal,
As compound love to physic your cold breast.

My parts had power to charm a sacred sun,
Who, disciplin'd and dieted in grace,
Believ'd her eyes, when they to assail begun,
All vows and consecrations giving place:
O most potential love! vow, bond, nor space,
In thee hath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
For thou art all, and all things else are thine.

When thou impresses, what are precepts worth
Of stale example? When thou wilt inflame,
How coldly those impediments stand forth
Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame?
Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense,
'gainst shame;

And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
The aches of all forces, shocks, and fears.

Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine,
And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
Lending soft audience to my sweet design,
And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath
That shall prefer and undertake my troth."

This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
Whose sights till then were level'd on my face;
Each cheek a river running from a fount
With brinish current downward flow'd apace:
O, how the channel to the stream gave grace!
Who, glaz'd with crystal gate the glowing roses
That flame through water which their hue incloses.

O, father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
In the small orb of one particular tear?
But with the inundation of the eyes
What rocky heart to water will not wear?
What breast so cold that is not warmed here?
O, cleft effect! cold modesty, hot wrath,
Both fire from hence and chill extirpation hath!

For lo! his passion, but an art of craft,
Even there resolv'd my reason into tears:
There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
Shook off my sober guards and civil fears;
Appear to him, as he to me appears,
All melting; though our drops this difference bore,
His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cauteils, all strange forms receives,
Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
Or swooning paleness; and he takes and leaves,
In either's aptness, as it best deceives
To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows.

That not a heart which in his level came,
Could 'scape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
Showing fair nature is both kind and tame;
And veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim:
Against the thing he sought he would exclaim:
When he most burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.

Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd;
That the unexperient gave the tempter place,
Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
Who, young and simple, would not be so lov'd?
Ah me! I fell; and yet do question make,
What I should do again for such a sake.

O, that infected moisture of his eye,
O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly,
O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd,
Would yet again betray the fore betray'd,
And new pervert a reconciled maid!

THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM.

I.

SWEET Cythera, sitting by a brook,
With young Adonis, lovely, fresh and green,
Did court the lad with many a lovely look,
Such looks as none could look but beauty's queen.
She told him stories to delight his ear;
She show'd him favours to allure his eye;
To win his heart, she touch'd him here and there:
Touches so soft still conquer chastity.
But whether unripe years did want conceit,
Or he refus'd to take her figur'd proffer,
The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer:
Then fell she on her back, fair queen, and toward;
He rose and ran away; ah, fool too forward!

II.

Scarce had the sun dried up the dewy morn,
And scarce the herd gone to the hedge for shade,
When Cythera, all in love forlorn,
A longing tarriance for Adonis made,
Under an oser growing by a brook,
A brook, where Adon us'd to cool his spleen:
Hot was the day; she hotter that did look
For his approach, that often there had been.
Anon he comes and throws his mantle by,
And stood stark naked on the brook's green brim;
The sun look'd on the world with glorious eye,
Yet not so wistly, as this queen on him:
He spying her, bounc'd in, whereas he stood;
O, Jove, quoth she, why was not I a food?

III.

Fair was the morn, when the fair queen of love,
Paler for sorrow than her milk-white dove,
For Adon's sake, a younger proud and wild;
Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill:
Anon Adonis comes with horn and bounds;
She, silly queen, with more than love's good will,
Forbade the boy he should not pass those grounds;
Once, quoth she, did I see a fair sweet youth
Here in these brakes deep-wounded with a boar,
Deep in the thigh, a spectacle of ruth!
See, in my thigh, quoth she, here was the sore;
She showed hers; he saw more wounds than one,
And blushing fled, and left her all alone.

IV.

Venus with young Adonis sitting by her,
Under a myrtle shade began to woo him;
She told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
And as he fell to her, so fell she to him.
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me;
And then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms;
Even thus, quoth she, the warlike god unliac'd me;
As if the boy should use like loving charms:
Even thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips,
And with her lips on his did act the seizure;
And as she fetch'd breath, away he skips,
And would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
Ah! that I had my lady at this bay,
To kiss and clip me till I run away!

V.

Crabbed age and youth
Cannot live together;
Youth is full of peevance,
Age is full of care:
Youth like summer morn,
Age like winter weather;

Youth like summer brave,
Age like winter bare.
Youth is full of sport,
Age's breath is short,
Youth is nimble, age is lame;
Youth is hot and bold,
Age is weak and cold;
Youth is wild, and age is tame.
Age, I do abhor thee,
Youth, I do adore thee;
O, my love, my love is young;
Age, I do defy thee;
O, sweet shepherd, hie thee,
For methinks thou stay'st at too long.

VI.

Sweet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon faded,
Pluck'd in the bud, and faded in the spring!
Bright orient pearl, alas! too timely shaded!
Fair creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting:
Like a green plumb that hangs upon a tree,
And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.
I weep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
For why? thou left'st me nothing in thy will.
And yet thou left'st me more than I did crave,
For why? I craved nothing of thee still:
O, yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee
Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

VII.

Fair is my love, but not so fair as fickle,
Mild as a dove, but neither true nor trusty;
Brighter than glass, and yet, as glass is brittle,
Softer than wax, and yet, as iron, rusty:
A lily pale, with damask die to grace her,
None fairer, nor none fairer to deface her.
Her lips to mine how often hath she join'd,
Between each kiss her oaths of true love swearing!
How many tales to please me hath she coin'd,
Dreading my love, the loss thereof still fearing!
Yet in the midst of all her pure protestings,
Her faith, her oaths, her tears, and all were jestings.
She burn'd with love, as straw with fire flameeth;
She burn'd out love, as soon as straw out-burneth;
She fram'd the love, and yet she foil'd the framing;
She bade love last, and yet she fell a turning.
Was this a lover, or a lecher whether?
Bad in the best, though excellent in neither.

VIII.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?
Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee;
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gam'd, cures all disgrace in me.
My vow was breath, and breath a vapour is;
Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,
Exhal'st this vapour vow; in thee it is:
If broken, then, it is no fault of mine.
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To break an oath, to win a paradise?

IX.

If love make me forsworn, how shall I swear to love?
O, never faith could hold, if not to beauty vow'd:
Though to myself forsworn, to thee I'll constant prove;
Those thoughts, to me like oaks, to thee like oaks

Study his bias leaves, and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all those pleasures live, that art can comprehend.

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commend;

All ignorant that soul that sees thee without wonder;
Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire:
Thine eye Jove's lightning seems, thy voice his dreadful thunder,

Which (not to anger bent) is music and sweet fire.
Celestial as thou art, O, do not love that wrong,
To sing the heavens' praise with such an earthly tongue.

X.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good,
A shining gloss, that fadeth suddenly;
A flower that dies, when first it 'gins to bud;
A brittle glass that's broken presently;
A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
Lost, faded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as good lost are sold or never found,
As faded gloss no rubbing will refresh,
As flowers dead, lie wither'd on the ground,
As broken glass no cement can redress,
So beauty blemish'd once, for ever's lost.
In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XI.

Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share,
She bade good night, that kept my rest away;
And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
To descant on the doubts of my decay.
Farewell, quoth she, and come again to-morrow;
Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether:
'Tmay be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
'Tmay be, again to make me wander thither;
Wander, a word for shadows like thyself,
As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

XII.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.
Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark,
And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;

For she doth welcome day-light with her ditty,
And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow;
For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
But now are minutes added to the hours;
To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;
Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
Pack night, peep day, good day, of night now borrow:
Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

XIII.

It was a lording's daughter, the fairest one of three,
That lik'd of her master as well as well might be,
Till looking on an Englishman, the fairest eye could see,

Her fancy fell a turning. [did fight,
Long was the combat doubtful, that love with love
To leave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:

To put in practice either, alas, it was a spite
Unto the silly dameel.

But one must be refused, more mickle was the pain,
That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain, [disdain:

For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with
Aas, she could not help it!

Thus art with arms contending was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away;
Then lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady giv;
For now my song is ended.

XIV.

On a day (alack the day!)
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spy'd a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air:
Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow:
Air, would I might triumph so!
But alas! my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn:
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Do not call it sin in me,
That I am forsworn for thee;
Thou for whom Jove e'en would swear
Juno but an Ethiop were;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.

XV.

My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss:
Love's denying,
Faith's defying,
Heart's renying,
Cause of this.

All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot:
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.

One silly cross

Wrought all my loss;

O, frowning fortune, cursed, fickle dame!

For now I see,

Inconstancy

More in women than in men remain.

In black mourn I,
All fears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
Living in thrall:
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
(O cruel speeding!)

Fraughted with gall!

My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal,
My wether's bell rings doleful knell;
My curtail dog that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid;

My sighs so deep,

Procure to weep,

In howling-wise, to see my doleful plight.

How sighs resound

Through harkless ground,

Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight!

Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Loud bells ring not Cheerfully;
Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back creeping
Fearfully:

All our pleasure known to us poor swains,

All our merry meetings on the plains,

All our evening sport from us is fled,

All our love is lost, for love is dead.

Farewell, sweet lass,

Thy like ne'er was,

For a sweet content, the cause of all my moan:

Poor Coridon

Must live alone,

Other help for him I see that there is none.

XVI.

When as thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou wouldst strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial like :

Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor yet unwed.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with filed talk,
Lest she some subtle practice swell ;
(A crinole soon can find a halt :)

But painly say thou lov'st her well,
And set thy person forth to sell.

And to her will frame all thy ways ;
Spare not to spend,—and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing always in her ear :

The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true ;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Seek never thou to choose anew :

When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will clear ere night ;
And then too late she will repent
That she dissembled her delight ;

And twice desire, ere it be day,
That with such scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say,—

*Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then.*

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.

Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought ?

Think, women love to match with men,
And not to live so like a saint :
Here is no heaven : they holy then
Begin, when age doth them attain.

Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

But soft ; enough,—too much I fear ;
For if my lady hear my song,
She will not stick to ring mine ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long :

Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

XVII.

Take, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn ;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn :

But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.

Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears :
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

XVIII.

Let the bird of loudest lay,
Or the sole Arabian tree,

Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey
But thou shrieking harbinger,
Foul pre-cursor of the flood,
Angur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near !

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king :
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That deductive music can,
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou, treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence :—
Love and constancy is dead ;
Phenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one ;
Two distincts, division none :
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder ;
Distance, and no space was seen
Twixt the turtle and his queen :
But in them it were a wonder.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the Phenix' sight :
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appell'd,
That the self was not the same ;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together ;
To themselves yet either neither,
Simple were so well compounded ;

That it cried, how true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one !
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne
To the Phenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love ;
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here inclos'd in cinders lie.

Death is now the Phenix' nest ;
And the turtle's loyal breast
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity :—
'Twas not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be ;
Beauty brag, but 'tis not she ;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair ;
For these dead birds sigh a prayer.
